As an illustration: About thirteen years ago the Dairy and Food Commission of Michigan for some personal reason printed a severe criticism on us for making Postum of Barley (according to his official chemist) at market price and selling too high). He was shown there was never a grain of barley used in Postum. His report was false and misleading. The governor dismissed him.

We believe that most of the state officials are honest, and on the other hand we are firmly convinced that some of their conclusions cannot be substantiated by facts in scientific research.

They never criticize the purity of our foods, for so much we are thankful.

If our conclusions in regard to its being a brain food differ from theirs, and we are both honest, they have rather the advantage, because under the law they can order us to eliminate from the package any statement if it disagrees with their opinion. Otherwise they would harass grocers.

Spasm No. 6 says: "The most dangerous thing in the world for one threatened with appendicitis is to eat any food whatever. Notwithstanding he knows that danger, C. W. Post advertised Grape-Nuts at fifteen cents a package for those so threatened."

This is intended to muddle the reader into believing that we put our Grape-Nuts as a cure for appendicitis.

Mr. Post, himself, has had probably as wide experience as any other man in America in the study and observation of food as related to the digestive organs, and we proved in Court by the physicians and surgeons on the witness stand that the predominating cause of appendicitis is undigested food, and that it is necessary to quit eating food, and when the body requires food again, use a pre-digested food, or at least one easy of digestion.

Dr. Ochsner in his work on appendicitis refers directly to the use of the well-known pre-digested foods that can be obtained on the market. He also brought out the interesting fact that in "after treatment" it is advantageous to take on a pre-digested food.

The price of the package (referred to by the weekly) is not known by us to have any relation to the question.

Our advice to stop using indigestible food in bowel troubles and to use Grape-Nuts food has been a great blessing to tens of thousands of people, and we hope will continue to bless a good many more in the succeeding years.

No. 7 is a live wire. It refers to C. W. Post and his studies and experience in "Suggestive Therapeutics," or "Mental Healing," which further lead to a most careful and systematic study of the effect of the mind on the digestive and other organs of the body.

He attended clinics in Europe and fitted himself for a future career in which he has become known as one of the food experts of the world, fitted to judge both from the material as well as the mental side of the question.

For about eight years previous to 1891 he was an invalid. In that year, after being under the care of several well-known physicians he was quickly healed, by what to him was a curious and not well understood method. Sufficient to say he became a well man, weighing about 185 pounds.

This experience challenged his investigation into causes of disease and their amelioration. Those studies and experiences developed a very profound reverence for a Supreme Power which directly operates upon the human being, and this reverence for the Infinite became to him a form of religion which included honesty of purpose towards his fellow-man. A statement which will be indorsed by everyone who knows him closely.

He will make a public announcement in detail of these facts, and the Postum Company will cause that statement to be published in newspapers and magazines in due time. We suggest the reader look for it.

Prevarication No. 8 "Post spends nearly a million a year in advertising and relies on that to keep out of the newspapers the dangerous nature of the fraud he is perpetrating on the public."

The Postum Company does not pay out upwards of a million a year for trade announcements. Newspaper men believe our statements truthful or they would not print them. Large numbers of newspaper men use our products.

They are capable of telling the public whether or not we "bribe" them.

It may have escaped notice that we did not "bribe" that particular weekly.

No. 9 states that the amount of the verdict will "be devoted by the 'weekly' to exposing fraud."

This is almost real humor.

We have two suits pending against the "weekly," total $500,000.00. We haven't "devoted" the sum to any particular purpose yet.

But the criticism neglected to mention that for years every Postum package announced in plain type that the outer covering of wheat (bran), made part of the beverage.

They ignorantly fell into a trap here, not knowing enough of food value to know that "Taka-Diastase" the article used by physicians the world over for "starch indigestion" is made from "wheat bran."

So we use that part of the wheat berry because it contains the element needed to develop the valuable diastase in manufacture. Good Postum is impossible without this part.

Item 11 is an illustration of the squirming and twisting of the sensational writer delivering distorted matter to his readers.

While on the witness stand Mr. Post testified to his studies in Anatomy, Physiology, Dietetics and Psychology,—all relating to the preparation and digestion of food. Asked to name authorities studied he mentioned six or eight from memory, and commented on some clinical experience covering seevral years in annual journeys to Europe.

Now notice the distortion. (Copy from the printed criticism).

"He (Post) pointed out a pile of books in possession of his attorneys as the very ones he had read."

(Notice,—"the very ones he had read," leading the readers to believe that they were the only ones.)

"Did you consult the books from these editions?" was asked.

"From those and various editions" answered Post.

The attorney "picked up book after book from the pile and showed the title pages to the jury,—all except two had been published since 1905."

The facts are Mr. Post purposely introduced the latest editions that could be obtained of prominent authorities to prove by them the truth of his statements regarding appendicitis and the analysis of the brain, also the latest conclusions in regard to the action of the digestive organs. These works are:

Human Physiology, by Raymond.
Physiological Chemistry, by Simon.
Digestive Glands, by Pawlow.
Hand Book of Appendicitis, by Ochsner.
Physiological Chemistry, by Hammarsten.
Biochemic System of Medicine, by Carey.

The "Weekly" carefully eliminates from its printed account, testimony regarding the years of research and study by Mr. Post in fitting himself for his work, and would lead the reader of the distorted article to believe that his education began since 1905.

His eye is not of the shifty kind observed in the head of one of his chief critics. On the witness stand Mr. Post looks quietly but very steadily straight into the eyes of the haggling, twisting lawyer, trying by all his art to ask double-barreled questions and bull-doze and confuse a witness.

The "dodging" it seems consisted of replying, "I don't know."

Opposing counsel holds a book in his hand while he queries,—

"I want to know if there is a single thing in your whole book here that suggests any particular kind of food." Then followed some discussion between attorneys.

When Mr. Post was allowed to reply, he said, "I don't know until I read the book over to see."

This book, it turns out, was written by Mr. Post seventeen years ago, and probably has not been read carefully by him in the last fifteen years. It would require a remarkable memory to instantly say "yes" or "no" as to what a book of 147 pages did or did not contain, without reading it over,—but such conservative and well balanced answers are construed b sensation seekers to be "dodging."

The attorney sought by every art to impress the jury with the fact that Mr. Post's belief in the power of Mind in relation to the body branded him as unreliable and worse.

The following is quoted from one of the questions:—
(The lawyer reading from the book.)

"The writer of these pages desires to say nothing of himself other than as a simple instrument through which the Divine Principle chooses to manifest itself by precept and example.

"Skill in mental practice is gained in the same way as skill in any department of science—by observation, study, experience and ability to evolve correct conclusions.

"Read carefully, thoughtfully no more than twenty pages daily. Afterward seek an easy position where you will not be disturbed. Relax every muscle. Close your eyes, and go into the silence where mind is plastic to the breathings of spirit and where God talks to the Son. The thoughts from Divine Universal Mind come as winged angels and endow you with a healing power. If you go into the silence humble and trusting, you will come out enriched and greatly strengthened in body by contact even for a short time with the Father of all life and all power. You will feel refreshed in every way and food taken will digest readily as the stomach works smoothly when under the influence of a Higher Power."

"I ask you if you did not write that, and if you did not believe it when you wrote it."

For a moment the Court Room was in absolute silence.

Mr. Post slowly leaned forward over the rail, pointed his finger at the Atty's. face to emphasize his reply and with eyes that caused those of the Attorney to drop he said, "Yes, I am proud to say I did."

It may be remembered that we were first attacked and have since defended ourselves by placing facts before that great jury---The Public.

A good "scrap" is more or less comforting now and then, if you know you are right.

In the case lately tried, an appeal has been taken to the higher courts. We have unbounded faith in the ultimate decision of our American Tribunals.

Our suits against the "weekly" have not yet been tried. They are for libel and $500,000.00 s asked as damages, and may the right man win.

After all the smoke of legal battle blows away, the facts will stand out clearly and never be forgotten that Postum, Grape-Nuts, and Post Toasties are perfectly pure, have done good honest service to humanity for years, the testimonials are real and truthful and the business conducted on the highest plane of commercial integrity.

A WONDERFUL REMEDY

ORANGE LILY

Orange Lily is daily curing the most obstinate cases of Female Disorders. Falling of the Womb, Leucorrhoea, Painful and Suppressed Menstruation, etc., etc., are all of them relieved from the start by its use, and a few weeks' or months' treatment accomplishes a complete cure. This remedy is a positive, scientific preparation, and is based on the discoveries of Pasteur and Lister. It is an applied treatment; that is, it is not taken internally, but is applied direct to the suffering parts, and it, therefore, acts with all the certainty of the known laws of chemical action. As it comes in direct contact with the diseased tissue, its antiseptic and nerve-food properties cannot help have a beneficent influence. I receive from 10 to 20 letters daily, speaking of the benefits and cures it is performing, and so sure am I that it will do what is claimed for it that I will send, absolutely free, a 35c box to every suffering woman who will write for it. Price $1 per box, which is sufficient for one months' treatment. Address, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, WINDSOR, ONT. 3

HIS MAJESTY GOOD SPEAKER

Although King George, like his lamented Royal father, is by natural aptitude and long training a ready and eloquent speaker, he has naturally neither the time nor the knowledge necessary to prepare many of the speeches he has to deliver. Take, for example, the opening of a new wing to a hospital, for which it is necessary to give a history of the hospital and its work, to refer to the distinguished men it has given to the world, and to the part it has played in advancing medical and surgical science.

These are matters which call for expert knowledge, and of which the King is naturally as ignorant as the average layman. Here the hospital authorities come gallantly to his assistance and practically prepare his speech for him. A committee of the principal officials is formed, the records of the hospital are carefully searched, and the result of the committee's work is embodied in a speech of perhaps an hour's duration. The speech, or statement, is then carefully revised and cut down to the required compass of about a quarter of an hour at the outside, and invested with as much interest and literary merit as the committee can put into it.

Purple Letters on Vellum

Four typewritten copies of the finished speech are then made, and, armed with these, the committee arrange a conference with the King's Secretary, who makes such suggestions and amendments as he thinks advisable. The revised proof is then submitted to His Majesty, who frequently re-writes it to satisfy his individual taste, and when it has thus received the Royal approval the manuscript is sent to the printers and reproduced in purple letters on vellum, in which gorgeous form it is sent to His Majesty.

KING GEORGE V.

In his earlier years King Edward used to learn these prepared speeches by heart; and, aided by an excellent memory, was able to deliver them with all the natural effect of impromptu utterances. On one occasion, it is said—the speech was to be delivered at the Royal Academy banquet—he had omitted this precaution, and, further, found to his dismay that he had forgotten to take the copy with him. He proved, however, more than equal to the emergency, trying as it was to an inexperienced speaker, and delivered one of the best speeches of his life, to the surprise and delight of his auditors, to whom he confessed his predicament.

In later years, when experience had begotten confidence, His Majesty was content to master the facts and figures of his speech, and to trust to the inspiration of the moment for its delivery. How happy this invariably was—how natural and gracefully expressed—those who were privileged to hear him well know. "King Edward's happiest efforts, however," Lord Rosebery says, "were those which were quite innocent of any preparation. In grace and simplicity of language, delicacy of humor, and dignity of utterance, the King's impromptu speaking might well challenge comparison with that of any after-dinner speaker I have ever heard."

On many subjects, too, King Edward was an expert who needed no help in preparing his speeches; and many of his best efforts, on such wide-apart subjects as art and agriculture, were entirely of his own production; and, like all his speeches, gained considerably from his clear enunciation and his beautiful, well-modulated voice.

The King is a Born Speaker

King George is, if possible, an even better speaker than his Royal father. Indeed, some of his speeches are perfect models of lucidity, happy expression, and natural eloquence. Although the material for many of them is supplied on lines similar to those described above, he has long passed the stage when he had to rely on his memory. A perfect master of his facts, he is able to clothe them in words which, by their happy choice and smooth flow, proclaim the born speaker. Indeed, in perfection of expression many of them are well entitled to rank with the finest examples of English oratory.

HOUSING OF WORKMEN

The first step in an important scheme of housing has been taken in South London. A large island block of old-fashioned houses facing on Elsted Street, in the Rodney Road district, Walworth, has been acquired by the trustees of a fund for the better housing of the working classes, and within a year some 200 of these houses will be replaced by nine huge blocks of modern dwellings, capable of accommodating more than 600 persons. The ground acquired consists of 60,000 square feet.

"Make the hens comfotable," says an exchange. Certainly, their owners ought to, with the hope of getting eggs at 45 cts. per dozen as an inducement.

At Hull a pathetic story was related at an inquest on the body of John Wild, a six-year-old boy. The little fellow succumbed to burns, but before he died he told his mother how it happened. "I stood on the fender," he said, "and called up the chimney to ask Father Christmas to send me a pair of roller skates, a magic lantern, and some candles." The mother found the child with his clothes on fire, and extinguished the flames with a blanket, but the injuries proved fatal.

CADET'S HEROIC EFFORT

Arthur Driver, a grandson of an officer who was on board the Victory as midshipman when Nelson fell at Trafalgar, has just performed an act of extreme bravery.

Driver is a cadet on board the Naval School training ship Mercury at Hamble. A few nights ago a boy fell overboard, and Driver, though it was blowing half a gale and pitch dark at the time, promptly dived to the rescue. He reached the drowning lad, but his strength failed, and the lad was swept away and drowned. Driver was rescued exhausted and almost unconscious.

The Defeated.

Hurrah for the victor who captures the prize,
Whose palms with the silver is crossed!
But in your rejoicing reserve a few sighs
And sobs for the fellow who lost.
The winner without your indorsement can live,
The world with a smile he may face,
But who consolation large hearted will give
To him who lost out in the race?

The hero, resplendent, has plenty of friends
To slip him a coin or a cheer,
And it is a favor if he but unbends
To listen to those who are near.
The poor, sorry dub with the bruises and bumps
Who wasn't ace high in the scrap
May still have a heart that with tenderness thumps
And be a most likable chap.

The victor feels hardly the need of the fawns
Around him so friendly and thick.
He listens with much inattention and yawns,
For he his companions can pick.
The one who went down in the heat of the fray
Finds little enough friendly talk
And no one to toss him a single bouquet,
Though once he was cock of the walk.

Then come to the front for the man who is down,
Who cannot a favor bestow.
There's plenty to cheer for the pride of the town
And hail him as all of the show.
It cannot be said that for money you wait
On him who is laid on the shelf,
And who can assure you that sooner or late
You may not be down there yourself?

AFTER DOCTORS FAILED

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Cured Her.

Toronto, Canada.—"I shall endeavor to describe to you how I felt before I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I scarcely knew what it was to be well. I had awful bearing-down pains and usually before my monthly periods I suffered terribly and had to go to bed. I was not able to walk across the floor the pain was so bad. I doctored for a long time, but the doctor's treatment did not do me any good. I gave up all hopes of ever being well again until one day my husband saw the Compound advertised in the paper. He decided to get me a bottle, and I am thankful he did. I had not taken one bottle before I began to feel better, and I kept on taking it until now I am a different woman. It also helped me during maternity and childbirth. I can thoroughly recommend your Vegetable Compound to any woman who is afflicted with female troubles."—Mrs. J. M. TWEEDALE, 138 Nassau St., Toronto, Canada.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled. It may be used with perfect confidence by women who suffer from displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, dizziness, or nervous prostration.

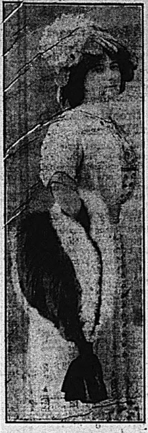
A Muff That You'd Probably Not Recognize If You Met It.



THE LATEST FREAK MUFF.

The rug muff came, saw, conquered and has passed from fashionable interest, and in its place there arrived the barrel shape, which is new this season. But the very, very latest is the shape pictured, which might as well be a laundry bag or a shoulder scarf held carelessly in the hand as a really truly muff.

The pelts used are white fox on the inside and black skin of the same kind on the outside. The ends of the wide long pieces of fur politely called a muff are held together with a looped bow of black velvet ribbon.

Fetching Boxes For Gifts.

One girl who has more minutes than money is making attractive boxes to send away her Christmas presents in. While she undertook the manufacture of her own boxes primarily as a means of saving the money that it would take to buy them, she wouldn't revert to the ready made kind now if she could, for her own are so much daintier and more original.

She makes them any size she wishes by cutting the sides from pieces of cardboard and covering them with the remnants of old bedroom wall paper which her attic holds. The sides are then laced together with gold cord or penny baby ribbon.

A similar way would be to cover ordinary pasteboard boxes that happened to be of suitable size with the flowered paper. The lid should be punched with a couple of holes, so that a ribbon could be put through and tied in a smart bow either with or without a sprig of holly.

Was Eve the First to Speak?

"Who spoke first—Adam or Eve?" This question is up for debate before a woman's club in Boston. "What language did she use?" This is another poser the learned females of the Hub have set themselves to decide. Recently at a feminine gathering in Washington the honor of being the first to utter human language was awarded to Eve. The subject was a favorite one with the metaphysicians of the middle ages, and such an austere and philosophical writer as Dante has a long and learned essay on the subject. Dante, who had wide experience in matters feminine, seems to believe that Eve first uttered the language, though he does not commit himself as to which tongue the first mother made known her thoughts to Adam. This question opens a wide vista for the suffragists.

For Bitter Medicine.

Nauseous medicine has been ere now disguised in fruit and jelly, covered with sugar, drowned in wine and coffee, but it remained for a western woman to discover the taking of cream as an alleviation of the bitter taste. She says a spoonful of cream in the mouth before and after taking makes the worst medicine harmless. Certainly it is worth trying, though whether the effect will wear away for the habitual taker deponent saith not.

Cookery Points

When soaking beans overnight for baking some housewives add a tiny pinch of soda to the water they soak in.

As a "special" for a children's Sunday night supper sweeten some plain bread dough, sprinkle with currants and bake like ordinary bread.

When black ants infest a country kitchen use plenty of borax and there will be an end to the trouble. The reason why borax sometimes fails is because enough of it is not used. Every crack and crevice in the boarding should be filled with the borax. Before using, all shelves and boarding should be scrubbed with boiling water and allowed to dry.

Jelly Roll, "Three and One."

Three eggs, one cup of sugar, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one cup of flour, three tablespoonfuls of water, pinch of salt.

Beat the eggs thoroughly and add sugar slowly, beating vigorously all the time. Add the water and beat again. Sift the dry ingredients together twice and add. Beat all together several minutes. Put in a long shallow dripping pan and bake in a quick oven.

Remove from the oven and immediately cover with rapberry jam without removing from the pan. Roll the length of the cake, pressing into shape with the hands. Any kind of jelly may be used instead of the jam.

Tapioca Pudding For Three.

Three tablespoons tapioca cooked in one pint of milk, a pinch of salt; cook until transparent. The yolk of one egg beaten with three tablespoons of granulated sugar. When the tapioca is cooked put in the yolk beaten with the sugar, let cook a minute or two, then put the tapioca into three sauce dishes, equal amount in each dish; take the white of the egg and beat stiff with three tablespoons of granulated sugar, put into hot oven and brown, sprinkle with shredded cocoanut and then sprinkle again quite thickly with granulated sugar.

On the Cook's Busy Day.

It is a good plan when one expects to do considerable baking or cooking to take the spice and flour and all the ingredients needed from their places in the pantry and set them in a row on the table. In doing so one notices just how much there is of each, and if any of the necessary materials are missing one can order them before beginning operations. This is an especally good idea when an early breakfast is being planned. All the materials to go into the muffins or johnnycake can be placed together on the table the night before, ready to be mixed together in a minute's time.

The man who boasts of his wisdom is sure to see the reflection of a fool every time he happens to look in the mirror.

Saved His Life

Mr. H. C. Freeman was completely restored to health and strength by Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the grand old family medicine.

He writes: "I honestly believe I owe my life to the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. After 31 years of hard work as expert accountant I suffered a complete physical breakdown and was compelled to give up my work. A hard, dry cough and frequent night sweats were gradually sapping what little vitality I had left. A friend induced me to try Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey. Almost immediately I began to feel a change for the better. I am working harder today than ever before, and I feel as I did twenty years ago. Nothing in the world but Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey brought about my present condition, and I am never without a bottle of this wonderful stimulant in my room. It is my only medicine." H. Chester Freeman, 224 South Clark St., Chicago, Ill., U. S.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is one of the greatest strength builders and tonic stimulants known to science. Its palatability and freedom from injurious substances render it so that it can be retained by the most sensitive stomach. Overworked men, delicate women and sickly children will find in it the health and strength-giving properties so necessary to them. It strengthens and sustains the system; is a promoter of health and longevity; makes the old feel young and keeps the young strong and vigorous.

KNIGHTS BACHELOR.

They Are These Men Who Belong to No Knightly Order.

Knights Bachelor are not necessarily bachelor knights. The designation is indeed misleading. It is applied to those who have received the honor of simple knighthood, with the prefix of "Sir" to their Christian name, but without membership of any of the specific orders of chivalry, such as the orders of the Bath, St. Michael and St. George, the Victorian Order, the Thistle, the Star of India, etc. There has never been any requirement of celibacy on the part of these Knights Bachelor, and the term, according to some, is a corruption of the old French words "bas chevalier," or "lower knight," indicating that the chevalier was of a lower grade of knighthood than those who were knights of any of the orders then existing, such as the Garter and the Bath, in England; the Thistle, in Scotland; the St. Louis and the St. Esprit, in France, and the Golden Fleece, in Burgundy and afterward in Germany and in Spain.

The "bas chevalier," or knight bachelor, was likewise inferior to the knight banneret, a dignity which has now gone out of existence, and which, though not hereditary, was only bestowed for services in the field. The bannerets were usually already in possession of the dignity of ordinary knighthood, and the ceremony of investiture consisted in the sovereign giving directions that their pointed pennant should be clipped in such a fashion as to covert it into a square banner, the value of this change being derived from the fact that no other person below the rank of a peer of the realm was allowed to display his armorial bearings on a square banner. The last instance of the bestowal of the dignity of knight banneret was at a naval review at Portsmouth, in 1773, when George III. conferred it upon Admirals Pye and Sprye and upon Captains Bickerton and Vernon.

Other authorities, again, argue that the term Knight Bachelor is derived from the Norman-French word battelier, owing to the fact that knighthood in olden times was bestowed for military services only, while still others argue that the word bachelor was applied to this degree of knighthood by King Henry III. in order to signify that the honor would die with the person to whom it was granted.

The first civilian to receive the honor of ordinary knighthood was Sir William Walworth, the Lord Mayor of London, who is remembered in history as having struck down the rebel Wat Tyler, leader of an insurrection against Richard II. The daring act of the Lord Mayor in thus killing Tyler at the head of the rebel forces so demoralized his followers that the rising came to an end then and there, the King knighting the Lord Mayor on the very spot.

The Knights Bachelor have within the last few years enrolled themselves into a society. Col. Sir Henry Pellatt, commander of the Queen's Own Rifles, has recently been made president of the society.

Some Curious Taxes.

From time to time the exchequer of Great Britain has been replenished by singular taxes. Henry VIII. taxed beards, and graduated the tax according to the status of the wearer. The Sheriff of Canterbury was constrained to pay the sum of 3s. 4d. for the privilege of sporting his venerable whiskers. Queen Elizabeth fixed a similar tax on every beard over a fortnight's growth, and bent on making an example of people who did not attend church imposed a fine for absence. In 1695 it was decided that the arrival of every child in the world should be greeted with a tax. The birth of a child to a duke cost the father $150, whilst the advent of a commoner's child was hailed by a tax of 50 cents. Moreover, it was an expensive matter to die, as it is, indeed, in this year of grace 1910, with the exacting of death dues. Bachelors and widows were compelled to pay for the privilege of single blessedness. It was due to William Pitt that the window-tax was instituted, and in the reign of George I. it was necessary to have a license in order to sell hats. Then there was a tax on hair powder, and another was laid on watches and clocks. In the reign of George III. a duty of 60 cents was imposed on bricks. At a later period in the same reign, bricks were divided for the purpose of taxation into common and dressed bricks, and the duty on each kind of brick was regulated according to its size.

He Was a Kind King.

"The King," said the correspondent, "was visiting Rufford Abbey, and one morning, in company with his host, Lord Savile, he took a walk over the preserves.

"Suddenly Lord Savile, a big, burly man, rushed forward and seized a shabby fellow with a dead pheasant protruding from the breast of his coat.

"'Sir,' he said to the King, 'this fellow is a bad egg. This is the second time I've caught him poaching.'

"'Oh, let him go,' he said. 'If he really were a bad egg, you know he wouldn't poach'."

Posted.

"I was at an informal tea the other afternoon," said the King, "and was bidding my distinguished hostess good-bye when her little daughter, a child of seven or eight years, came forward timidly, looking as if she had something to say. She was a beautiful child, and when her mother formally presented her she courtesied prettily and said in a loud, clear voice:

"'I think your Majesty is a very wonderful man.'

"'Why do you say that, my dear?' I asked.

"'Because,' said the little girl, 'mamma told me to'."—M.A.P.

ORANGE WEEK!

FORTY-FIVE Carloads Coming—Are California's Finest—The "SUNKIST" Kind—ON SALE ALL

NEXT WEEK!

Attractive Prices and Special Displays of "SUNKISTS" At All Dealers

Forty-five carloads of famous "Sunkist" oranges—more than 18,000 boxes—are speeding eastward by fast freight, direct from the orange groves of California.

They will be here, on sale at every dealer's next Monday morning. The sale will continue through the week. It will be the biggest affair of its kind in history.

Last year's "Sunkist" Orange Sale was such a huge success, and everybody bought so liberally, that your local dealers were simply swamped with business. They were hardly able to supply the demand. We therefore suggest that you place your order for "Sunkist" oranges as early next week as possible. Then you will be certain of being supplied.

Every orange in every box is sound, tree-ripened and hand-picked—the most luscious, healthful fruit on the market. For "Sunkist" oranges are California's choicest crop.

Five thousand orange growers select their choicest and pack them under the name "Sunkist." Thus every "Sunkist" orange is perfect—solid, sweet and full flavored.

In "Sunkist" wrappers you get tree-ripened, hand-picked oranges of the most acceptable variety. Every orange is picked by a gloved hand. They are shipped by fast freight, and always reach your table in prime condition. Being seedless, fibreless and thin-skinned, there is but very little waste. They are the most economical oranges you can buy. Each one is packed in a germ-proof tissue paper wrapper and bears the label "Sunkist."

All Physicians Advise Oranges

Physicians and food experts advise people to eat more oranges. We are a nation of meat eaters. And in winter, especially, the system gets clogged, causing congestion, colds, fevers, etc. Those who eat fresh, wholesome fruit freely, seldom require medical treatment.

Serve Them for Breakfast and in Salads and Desserts

Oranges are the ideal breakfast fruit and "between meals" lunch. For salads, they are indispensable. Orange ices, sherbets, puddings, etc., are very popular and delicious desserts.

"Sunkist" by the Box

"Sunkist" oranges reach you in such perfect condition, fresh from the orange groves, they will keep for weeks. Your dealer can make you a handsome saving if you order a box or half box. They are cheaper than table apples, and the greatest health food.

BIBLE QUESTION CLUB

In two weeks our Bible contest starts. This revival of Bible study is being welcomed by all the churches.

We are glad to have the co-operation of the churches, the pastors and Sunday School workers, in this important undertaking.

The prizes that are offered are intrinsically valuable and the Diploma awarded to all who complete the course will confer an honor upon them; but the greatest prize of all is the study itself; no words can overstate its value.

All teachers of girls and boys, say of fifteen years and over, should urge them to take up this course. Adult Bible Class teachers will find this contest to be a great stimulus to their work if they personally get behind it and set the example. Many pastors call attention to the I. P. B. Q. C. from the pulpit and urge their people to join and participate in its benefits. We have no doubt that the pastors of Belleville will not be one whit behind those of other towns. We have reason to believe that parents are encouraging their grown up children to take this course and we urge upon all parents to follow the good example.

The Intelligencer is necessary for these studies so order it fo ryourself or friend now.

SUGGESTIVE QUESTIONS ON SNUDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Jan. 15th, 1911.

Golden Text—Be ye strong therefore and not let your hands be weak, for your work shall be rewarded. 2 Chron. xv:7.

(1) Verses 1-2—What do you understand by the spirit of God coming upon Azariah, and do men have similar experiences to-day?

(2) Whose son was Asa and what was the character of his father?

(3) What victorious experience had Asa just had?

(4) What does it avail a man if he was converted and lived a noble life for many years if he is now living in sin?

(5) What is the unyielding condition if we would perpetuate the material or spiritual success of the past or the present? This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.

(6) In view of the natural constitution of things, why is it impossible for God to give any man material or spiritual success who is living out of harmony with God and the conditions which bring success?

(7) Verse 3—What was the effect upon Israel when they did not worship the true God?

(8) What is the effect of true religion and education upon a nation?

(9) Verse 4—Is there any evidence that Israel, when living without God, was ever prosperous, or when living true to God, in adverse circumstances?

(10) How may a nation or an individual turn back to God after having forsaken him?

(11) If the sole motive of turning to God is to save us from our trouble, how will God receive us?

(12) Verses 5-6—What are always the results of living out of harmony with God?

(13) What are the conditions to be observed if we would have inward and outward peace?

(14) Do physical or mental troubles give us most "vexations" and what would you say is the greatest agony a man can endure?

(15) Why is it right to say when a nation or an individual suffers as a result of wrong doing, that "God did vex them with adversity"?

(16) What is the reason that those who are wrong themselves generally delight in accusing others and trying to hurt or destroy them?

(17) Is it possible for a nation to be permanently prosperous which is untrue to God, i. e., to the moral laws that are found in the warp and woof of human nature?

(18) Verse 7—Is it possible for right doing to go unrewarded and how, and when, do the rewards generally come?

(19) Is right doing actually under our own control?

(20) Verses 8-10—Which is the greater incentive to right doing, the nobility of it, or the profit of it?

(21) What are the rewards of doing right?

(22) Verses 11-12—What is the sacrafice that God most delights in from us?

(23) Verses 13-15—Should the State compel the people to be outwardly religious?

(24) Would you commend or condemn the sentiments in verses 13-15?

KING'S AGED SUBJECTS

LONGEVITY IN ENGLAND SEEMS TO BE ON THE INCREASE.

Old-Age Pensions Act Has Brought to Light Many Remarkable Centenarians, a Hundred of Whom Have Been Entered on the Official Records — Most Are In the Lower Walks of Life—Irish Heads List.

It is a seeming paradox that these days of high pressure coincide with an era of longevity.

Extended inquiries throughout the British Isles reveals the fact that 100 inhabitants of the islands total, between them over 10,000 years; that is, more than a hundred centenarians have already been brought to light, and it cannot be claimed that the enquiries are yet complete.

Many wonderful old people have been brought to light in remote parts of the country through the working of the Old Age Pensions Act. In Ireland, which is pre-eminently the land of long life, a Mrs. Cranley, of Clonbrin, Monasterevan, claims to be 124. A mother of eight, of whom the youngest daughter is seventy, she is doubtless King George's oldest subject, for she is twelve years ahead of three male centenarians—two in Ireland at 112 and 110, and one in Scotland (110)—each of whom has thought himself entitled to boast of that distinction. If a woman looks old sooner than a man—which is open to doubt—she lives longer. The so-called weaker sex would be in a majority at any representative meeting of centenarians by about four to one.

One further fact is remarkable. These old people have in few cases had easy days shielded from the stress and storm of life. Nine out of every ten of them have been of humble origin and had to work hard for their bread so long as they had vigor to do so. On an analysis one finds that in the social scale the men ascend to no further elevation than is represented by one man of science, a clergyman, and a retired colonel. In regard to people who were born in or before 1810 modern works about the peerage are singularly silent.

Mrs. Cranley, of whose life little is known, was born, if her age is given correctly, before Byron, Shelley, or Carlyle, and must have been thirteen at the time of the Irish rebellion, which cost 150,000 Irish and 20,000 English lives before it was surpressed. She is a link with a period when Ireland had its independent Parliament. She was nineteen in the year of Trafalgar!

No Irishwoman has lived so long since Mrs. Meighan, of Donoughmore, who died in 1813 aged 130.

Charles Kelly, of Inver, Donegal, who is 112, must not be confused with a namesake, Thomas Kelly, of Sixmile Cross, Tyrone, whose death at 110 was reported recently. The Donegal Kelly is still active, and his sight and hearing are but slightly impaired. He produces documentary evidence of the date of his birth, lest, looking at him one should be sceptical on the subject. Kelly has never lived more than three miles from the spot where he was born in 1798. The house in which he lives he built himself, carrying stones on his back from the adjoining moor because in his young days carts in Ireland were unknown. For the same reason he carried flour on his back fourteen miles from Donegal to the little holding he cut for himself on the mountain side. One of his recollections is of Government relief ships sailing into Inver Bay every week to deliver Indian meal during the famine of 1847.

There are men in Ulster who, when they want to refer to old days, talk not of a time before railways, but of the pre-wheels epoch. Patrick McCart, of Strabane, Tyrone, "has" 110 years, Bryan O'Donnell, of Mountcharles, Donegal, 107, and William Knightland, of Killater, Castlederg, Tyrone, 104. If Ulster had not sixteen centenarians to talk about, these men, all able to see, hear, and walk about, would be regarded as celebrities. Most of them have had hard lives. McCart remembers days when food and money were so scarce that he was paid for his work on the farm with doles of cabbages leaves. Knightland has worked hard and smoked hard all his life, and his recipe for good health and long life does not exclude whisky. O'Donnell does not remember much about Napoleon, but can tell in this year of 1910 how in his youth and in the days of Napoleon a battle with shillelaghs was fought between the parish of Inver and the parish of Glenties, and how when the men of the latter place looked to be defeated women of Genties came forth, and using their stockings as slings, rained such a hail of stones on the men of Inver as made them beat a retreat.

Old Bryan can speak of a seafaring adventure eighty years ago. With fourteen companies he set sail in a small three-quarter-decked schooner from Inver Bay for America. The little boat was well provisioned, and for seven weeks fought its way on the sea. At last land was sighted. But when the explorers disembarked they found that the "natives" spoke Irish, and that they were at Innescrane, on the coast of Sligo! With Ireland O'Donnell has been content ever since, though he has two sons and two daughters in the United States.

A silver-haired lady at a house in Cemetery road, Londonderry, will tell a caller how Aberdeen, her native town, welcomed back the heroes of Waterloo. Mrs. Jane Stewart is her name, and at 105 her faculties remain bright. She can remember the celebrations at Queen Victoria's coronation as though they were last year.

Even older than she is, a Mrs. Moore, of Killy Vane, County Monoghan, admits having seen 106 summers. And there are other aged ladies with such biographies going back to George III.'s reign.

Cry of the Idle.

I'm sick to distraction of scheming,
  Of building success in the air.
Of lengthy and profitless dreaming
  That getteth a fellow nowhere.
Of plans for success that look dizzy
  Before from the earth they take wing.
I want to strike out and get busy
  And have some results on the string.

My poor, tired brain is rheumatic
  With visions that never produce.
Fate whispers in language emphatic
  To know, if it may, what's the use.
The castles in Spain that are founded
  Or other things quite as unreal
Will never draw interest compounded
  Or get me the price of a meal.

The years of my youth I have wasted
  In thinking how things should be done,
Success leaving thus all untasted
  As wreaths in the moonlight were spun.
I own they were long on attraction
  Could they but be harnessed or led,
But now I am looking for action,
  As in the beginning I said.

Then give me an ax or a hammer,
  A shovel, a hoe or a spade.
Oh, list to my pitiful clamor
  For work at most any old trade!
Success—I would capture and singe her
  With most uncontrollable speed.
Oh, give me a job full of ginger
  And watch me proceed to proceed!

At His Word.

"Miss Jinks, why did you never marry?"

"No one ever asked me."

"You needn't tell me that. Any man of common sense would jump at the chance to grab such a desirable catch."

"What makes you think so?"

"Common sense tells me."

"So you are a man of common sense. Oh, this is so sudden!"

Realistic.

BRUTAL ASSAULT AND ROBBERY

Young Lady Brutally Assaulted and Robbed at Galt by A Footpad

Galt, Jan. 16.—One of the most brutal assaults and highway robberies in the history of the town was perpetrated here Saturday evening, when Miss Sadie McLellan, second daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McLellan, Stone road, and a prominent young lady was accosted on North Water street about 9.15 o'clock by a man who offered to accompany her home. On her refusal he seized her by the throat and choked her, striking her in the face and inflicting a very nasty wound, from which blood poured profusely. He seized her purse, which contained $2 and some change, and then decamped.

The injured girl was picked up on the roadside by women who heard her screams and a doctor summoned. She was removed to her home and is a little better to-day. The police could get no description of the villain.

DOGTOR HAD TOO MANY AFFINITIES

Real Wife Breaks Into Rebellion When Taunted In Her Own House

NEW YORK, Jan. 14.—Indictments were sought before the grand jury in Hackensack to-day against Dr. E. H. F. Pirkner, who has offices in West Ninety-seventh street, and Hawthorne, N. J., and Miss Glen Willy, a trained nurse. The doctor and the nurse were arrested in Hawthorne last night at the instance of Mrs. Pirkner, and she was the principal witness before the grand jury to-day.

Mrs. Pirkner said her husband and Miss Willy had lived together in open defiance of her feelings as a wife.

"That brazen young woman," said Mrs. Pirkner, "openly defied me in my own house. She told me that my husband loved her better than he did me and that she was proud of it. Nothing will ever move me to stay my prosecution of her. As for my husband, I don't believe he is in his right mind. This is the third time he has preferred his nurse to his wife, disgracing me and his two children. I am getting tired of it. If he repents I may be prevailed on to forgive him. I would do this solely for the sake of the children. But Miss Willy I will never forgive.

The nurse declared she thought it was idiotic for Mrs. Pirkner to resort to the law. "She knows," said Mis Willy, "that the doctor loves me better than he does her, and this makes her wild. Why doesn't she go ahead and get a divorce? She began a separation suit, why doesn't she go ahead with it?"

Both the physician and Miss Willy admitted their guilt to Police Justice Bratt, and Sheriff Conklin said to-day that indictments would be found as a matter of routine. The penalty is one year's imprisonment, or a fine of $1,000, or both.

Dr. Pirkner declared to Justice Bratt that Miss Willy was his wife, but he could not tell when or by whom they had been married. Miss Willy said that she was the doctor's common-law wife.

William Well, counsel for Mrs. Pirkner in her separation suit, said to-day that the physician had ill-treated his wife since 1904, adding: "The doctor has had many infatuations for nurses. He called them his angels and nightingales."

BELLEVILLE MAN AND WOMAN WERE HELD AT WATERTOWN

David McConnell and Mrs. Bertha Gunyou Arrested Over The Border—Were Charged With Violating the Immigration Laws--Parties Were Unable to Furnish the $2000 Bail Required

The Watertown, New York, Times gives the following particulars of the detention of a Belleville man and woman at that place for violation of the immigration laws, as reported by telegraph to The Intelligencer a few days ago:

David McConnell, aged 18 years, and Mrs. Bertha Gunyou, aged 35 years, are locked up to-day, the former on charges of violating section 3 of the immigration laws, and the latter as a witness and being unlawfully in this country.

The man and woman were arraigned before United States Commissioner John B. Rogers at his office this morning and at that time they were committed to the county jail to await their examination which was set down for next Thursday before the commissioner. Bail was fixed in each case, McConnell being held under a $2,000 bond and the woman under a bond of $1,000. Neither was able to furnish bail.

Section 3, the section with the violation of which McConnell is charged, reads as follows: "The importation into the United States of any alien woman or girl * * * * for any immoral purpose is hereby forbidden; and whoever shall, directly or indirectly, import, or attempt to import, into the United States, any alien woman or girl * * * * for any immoral purpose, or whoever shall hold or attempt to hold any alien woman or girl for any such purpose in pursuance of such illegal importation * * * * within three years after she shall have entered the United States, shall, in every such case be guilty of a felony, and on conviction thereof be imprisoned not more than five years and pay a fine of not more than $5,000; and any alien woman or girl who shall be found an inmate of a house of prostitution or practising prostitution within three years after she shall have entered the United States shall be deemed to be unlawfully within the United States and shall be deported.

Mrs. Gunyou formerly resided in Belleville, Ont., her husband being a laborer. She has six children, two of whom are married, and four of whom have been adopted by families in Canada. On or about Oct. 1, Mrs. Gunyou and McConnell left Belleville and came to this city via Cape Vincent and have been here since.

Immigration Inspector Joseph A. Conaty, of Ogdensburg, received word of the affair and came to this city to make an investigation. After working on the case several days, securing facts, he wired to Washington for an immigration warrant and the couple were arrested at the City Hotel on Thursday. They were taken to the police office and affidavits were secured which were presented before United States Commissioner John B. Rogers, on the strength of which a warrant was issued.

The affidavit went on to state that the man and woman left Belleville by a prearranged plan about Oct. 1, went to Gananoque Junction, from there to Kingston and to Cape Vincent. At the port of entry they were halted by immigration officers. McConnell told the officers that he was born in Watertown and that his companion was his wife. They were allowed to pass.

The two in their depositions state that they roomed with McConnell's relatives for a time and then she went to work in the kitchen of the Hardiman House, receiving $4 a week, three of which she gave McConnell weekly, he doing practically nothing for the support of the two. Later she went to the City Hotel and worked in the laundry, still paying McConnell $3 weekly.

McConnell worked a short time in a barber shop. A queer coincidence is that he was working in Piche's shop in the Flatiron building, New Year's day. Mr. Conaty was in town in the afternoon and the rest of the shops were closed and he went to Piche's to get shaved. He received a poor shave and when he heard that McConnell was an amateur barber, he suspected that he had been shaved by his intended prisoner, and when the arrest was made he found himself confronted with the wielder of the razor.

When arrested at the City Hotel, Mrs. Gunyou was working in the laundry and McConnell was turning the wringer.

The specific charge against McConnell is bringing an alien woman into this country for immoral purposes. The maximum penalty is five years imprisonment and a $5,000 fine. The federal law is such that some fine must always be imposed, with the alternative of serving one day for every dollar remaining unpaid. The federal grand jury meets in Albany the second Tuesday in February.

The woman's husband is still in Belleville, where he is a common laborer.

BOODLER TRAVERS GETS SIX YEARS

He Was Found Guilty on Three Charges—Sentences to Run Concurrently—Magistrate Denison Said a Burglar Might Have Done Less Harm—Travers Took His Medicine Without Wincing

(Intelligencer Special.)

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 16.—President Travers of the defunct Farmers' Bank, was sentenced to six years each on three charges, this morning, the sentences to run concurrently.

Magistrate Denison said a burglar might have done less harm.

RECOUNT OF BALLOTS CAST IN MAYORALTY ELECTION TO BE HELD

Immediately following the mayoralty election, in which the majority was the smallest ever recorded in a similar contest in Belleville, it was rumored that a recount would be asked on behalf of Mr. George I. Thomas, the defeated candidate, and this has been done.

Application has been made to Judge Deroche, senior Judge of this County, for a recount of the ballots cast on the 2nd inst. for Mayor-elect Ackerman and ex-Ald. G. I. Thomas. The vote, as recorded that day, was 833 for Ackerman and 824 for Thomas, a majority of 9 for Ackerman. Monday next, the 23rd inst., has been set by His Honor as the date for the recount.

This will be the first recount in a mayoralty contest in the history of Belleville.

ALMOST POISONED BY COAL GAS

Mr. Gilbert, Nationalist M. P. and Family Had a Very Narrow Escape

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—Arthur Gilbert, the Nationalist member for Drummond-Arthabaska, was, along with his wife and children, almost poisoned to death on Saturday by coal gas.

It is a curious circumstance that the building in which the near tragedy occurred belongs to the Dominion Government. Mr. Gilbert resides at 113 St. Patrick street, and on Saturday the employes of the Public Works Department did some work around the furnace. Apparently they had shut off the dampers before the gas had been burned out of the coal, for Mr. Gilbert and his family were soon under the influence of the poison.

About six in the evening Mr. Gilbert recovered consciousness, and having reached the door, made an effort to call help. He fell down in a stupor and passersby thought he was merely a sleeping inebriate. Eventually the situation was understood and the family were got out of the building.

Mr. Gilbert, his wife and family and servant were unconscious for some hours, but are now out of danger.

NEWS OF MISHAP IN THE FAR NORTH

The Ottawa Citizen says: The despatch in The Citizen this morning stating that Mr. J. M. Macoun, of Ottawa, a member of the geological survey who had been absent on an expedition to Hunson Bay since last July, was safe and on his way home after the capsizing of the Northwest Mounted Police schooner in which he, with a party of police, were proceeding to Fullerton, in confirmed by a telegram which was received from him by Prof. R. W. Brock, director of the survey, last night. It naturally relieved much anxiety on the part of his family, although, on account of the fact that they did not know his schooner had met with an accident, this was not so great as it might have been.

Mr. Macoun, who is a grandson of Prof. John Macoun, formerly of this city, left Ottawa in July and went up to Fort Churchill in a steamer sent up by the hydrographic survey, his object being to get information in regard to the flora and fauna of the region and secure specimens for the new museum. He was at Churchill at the time Earl Grey's party was there and was then seen by Prof. Brock, a member of the party. The next day he took advantage of the fact that a N.W.M.P. schooner was going to Fullerton and went along in it. According to the news received the schooner was wrecked last September in a gale off Wager inlet and it is supposed that with the remainder of the party Mr. Macoun must have gone to Churchill and from there tramped a thousand miles or so to Gimili, going by dogtrain.

The telegram received by Prof. Brock last night was the first word which Parof. W. T. Macoun, his father, has heard of his son since he left Churchill.

MANY TRAMPS MOVING

Since Saturday everything has been exceptionally quiet in police circles. One drunk was arrested and six tramps sought shelter. Of the latter class over thirty within a week have been provided with shelter, demonstrating that many are on the tramp. The majority are all young men and claim they are making for this city to obtain work.

GENSOR PICTURES FOR THE PROVINCE

The Provincial Government is taking up the question of a uniform censorship of moving picture films throughout the Province, and regulations will, it is understood, be put into force doing away with the present unsatisfactory, and vexatious situation. Under the present system—or, rather lack of system—municipalities appoint their own officers to inspect moving picture films. The result is that proprietors of moving picture theatres are in a state of continual uncertainty as to whether the films they are about to exhibit will be approved or not.

If they secure a film that has been approved by an inspector in another municipality they may find that their local officer has a different opinion regarding it. To do away with this condition the Provincial Treasurer is working upon a plan to have central inspection of the films, which, if approved, would be marked in such a way that local officers throughout the country could tell by a glance whether the film was authorized.

The point on which the uncertainty exists is the method of censoring the films. The Government does not approve of the commission plan, and it is probable that the task of determining what films are proper to be shown will fall upon officers of the Provincial Police force.

The plans of the Government will not, it is expected, be announced in detail until after the Legislature meets.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

The students at the Ontario Agricultural College are to be allowed to dance hereafter, but not in the Salome style.

That swift-footed falsehood as to politics in the Property Owners' Association has at last been overtaken and has slunk out of sight.

The coasters continue to use the sidewalks on the hills entirely oblivious of the police and of the safety of pedestrians.

Add one more to your record of zero weather during this cold-hearted winter of 1910-11. The temperature fell to 8 below zero during the night and stood at the same figure at 8 a.m.

Now that all taxpayers are eligible for membership in the Property Owners' Association, what will be the next objection to that organization that the "knockers" will conjure up?

Reckless speculators in mining stocks take warning! The commission sent to Lake Chibougamou reports that as the result of their examination and study they cannot find that the mineral deposits are of sufficient worth to justify the spending of public money in building a railway to the region.

"Senator McMullen adds his voice," says the Montreal Gazette, "to that of Mr. Sifton and hopes that no reciprocity treaty will be arranged between Canada and the United States." That is no guarantee that he will oppose a measure of reciprocity should the Government propose one. He often speaks one way and votes another.

The majority of the Presbytery of Montreal has voted for the principle of union of the Presbyterian, Methodist and Congregational churches. In all eighteen presbyteries have taken like ground, in a more or less pronounced way, while six, in a more or less pronounced way, have declared their opposition.

Our usually staid contemporary, the Toronto Globe, gets off the following jokelet: "Belleville is threatened with the loss of its shirt factory, bids for which are being made by other municipalities which do not seem to care whether or not Belleville is left bare to the inclemency of midwinter."

The supplementary report for December gives the total area of field crops grown in Canada this year as 32,711,062 acres and the value of crops as $507,185,500, compared with 30,065,556 acres and a value of $532,992,100 last year; but with as good a harvest as last year's it would have reached at this year's prices $557,723,000.

The Canadian Pacific Railway has just announced that it will pay a ten per cent. dividend, and the stock has jumped up to over 205 in the market. This, says the Brockville Times, was the railway that was denounced by the Liberals in the Canadian Parliament a quarter of a century ago as a wild scheme which would not make enough to pay for the grease on the wheels of its rolling stock.

A judgment has been given by the Railway Commission ordering the White Horse and Yukon Railway to reduce by one-third its passenger and freight rates on the section of the railway between White Horse and Skagway. The rest of the line is in American territory. The complaint was made by the Dawson Board of Trade. If the railway directors object to the reduction on the ground that the road cannot afford the reduction, all they will have to do is to increase the rates upon that portion of the road which runs through the United States.

METHODIST MINISTER HAS BEEN GIVEN CALL TO BELLEVILLE

Rev. W. G. Clarke, B. A., pastor of the Port Hope Methodist church has been unanimously invited to the pastorate of the Tabernacle Church of the city of Belleville. This church says the Port Hope Guide, is one of the first charges of this Bay of Quinte Conference and the Rev. Clarke is to be congratulated upon his call to this appointment and the Tabernacle church is to be congratulated upon the choice made. He has had an opening also to another important town charge.

We have gathered data concerning Mr. Clarke's ministry which will be of interest to our readers.

Mr. Clarke has spent his ministry thus far within the bounds of the Bay of Quinte Conference. He graduated in arts from Victoria College in 1890 securing very high standing as silver medallist in Ethics and Metaphysics in an honor class of twelve, among whom were Dr. Creighton, editor of The Christian Guardian, and Rev Dr. Riddell, Principal of Albert College, Edmonton. He has also taken a large part of the B. D. course.

He was married to Miss Charters in 1895. Mr. Clarke then entered the agency of Albert College. Since his return to the pastorate his advancement has been rapid at Woodville, Little Britain, Stirling and Port Hope and now being called to the city of Belleville.

His pastorate has been marked by all round advancement of the work. Since Mr. Clarke's coming to Port Hope the church property has been extensively improved and much earnest work done. Especially noteworthy were the zeal and devotion with which he threw himself into the campaign for local option a year ago.

He has already received a fair share of honors and responsibilities at the hands of his brethren, as Chairman of District, on the Board of Examiners Educational Fund Treasurer, delegate twice to the General Conference, etc

Mr. Clarke is a strong preacher and an earnest worker among his people We wish him every success in his new and important field of labor.

CUTTING AND FILLING ON CANADIAN NORTHERN

Rock Blasting and Other Heavy Work is Now Being Done Near Point Ann

Mr. Giroux, who is one of the contractors of the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway, for construction east of the city has at present a number of men engaged in a rock cut on the line and across the road leading to Point Ann. At this particular point there is not only a heavy rock cut, but also much filling in to be done.

Enquiry as to when work will be commenced on the bridge over the river in the city elecited the statement that some work will in all probability be done during the winter months.

NOON WEDDING AT FRANKFORD

Mr. Stephen May and Miss Ada Pearl Tripp Were Married in The Methodist Church

A very pretty wedding took place at high noon on Jan. 11th, at Frankford Methodist church, when Miss Ida Pearl Tripp, third daughter of Mr and Mrs. Peter Tripp, of Frankford and Mr. Stephen L. May, of Saskatoon, Sask., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. T May, of Trenton, were united in holy matrimony by the Rev. J. S. McMullen, brother-in-law of the groom Leaning upon her father's arm, carrying a bouquet of white roses and fern, the beautiful bride, gowned in point d'esprey, with fur trimming over ivory satin, with bridal veil, entered the church to the strains of Lohengrin's famous wedding march, efficiently rendered by Miss Dora Spence of Trenton, in the presence of the invited guests and a crowded church On pronouncing the happy couple man and wife and while the minister held their hands united, Mr. C. G Williams effectively rendered the marriage hymn, "Good bless the hands united, God bless the hearts made one." Afte signing the register the bridal party proceeded to the home of the bride's father, where congratulations were offered and the bridal party sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner. The health of the bride was proposed in a felicitous speech by the Rev. J. S. McMullen and was ably responded to by the groom. In a few well chosen words the health of the bride's parents was proposed by Mr. C. G. Williams and replied to by Mr. J. T. May, of Trenton. The presents to the bride were valuable and useful, notably a beautiful fur lined coat with mink collar and reveres from the groom, and a bank check from the father of the groom. The house was a fairy bower of flowers and autumn foliage.

The ushers, Mr. C. D. Tripp, brother of the bride, and Mr. Grant, G. Goodsell, of Molson's bank, performed their duties in a most efficient manner and were presented by the groom with cuff links and tie pins. The happy couple left Trenton by the 5.35 train, en route for Toronto, Niagara Falls, Erie City, Penn, on their wedding tour The bride's travelling costume was old rose with black hat trimmed with old rose roses. After an extended honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. May will take up their residence in Saskatoon Sask.

The many friends of the esteemed bride and the Methodist church, in which choir she sang for some time will miss her smiling face and win some ways, but all send along good wishes and prayers for their future happy home and prosperous life.

The floral decorations were carried out under the supervision of Mrs. J Murney. The pulpit and pews were most charmingly festooned with smilax and white ribbon.

Ex-Mayor Marsh and Fairness

An apology is due to Mr. ex-Mayor Marsh for not paying our respects at an earlier date to his request that "The Intelligencer and Messrs. Corby "and Johnson should make a public "declaration that they were mistaken "as to the facts and show that they "wish to do what is right, anyway."

This request was made in his letter published in The Intelligencer of date Jan. 11th, and is based upon a statement of Mayor Ackerman, explaining his connection with the sale of certain city tax lots to relations of Messrs. Marsh and Price.

If there were any facts given in Mr. Ackerman's statement to justify a "declaration" that The Intelligencer was mistaken as to the facts which have come to light in relation to the sale of city property by ex-Mayor Marsh and Treasurer Price to their family connections, retraction of all that has appeared in this journal would be made at once, but there are none.

Mr. Ackerman's statement is clear and distinct, and speaks for itself, hence we leave it with a discerning and critical public to judge of its merits.

For argument sake, let us suppose for a moment that Mr. Ackerman was a party to and had knowledge of what was being done by the Mayor and Treasurer in the disposal of city property to mother-in-law, son-in-law and wife; and that he knew and approved of the selling of these building lots at prices ranging from $15.60 to $25 each, after the Mayor had bargained with others to take them off their hands at prices from $75 to $100 per lot, as is proven to have been the case by Mr. Burrell in his letter upon the subject which appeared in The Intelligencer of the 7th inst., a profit of some $1,600 which should have gone, in the opinion of The Intelligencer, into the Treasury of the city, had these officials done their duty, instead of into the pockets of official themselves, or into the pockets of mother-in-law and son-in-law, that would not justify what was done; it would show that he was as deserving of condemnation in these transactions as were the Mayor and Treasurer. There is no evidence which has been brought to light to show that he had any knowledge of the manner and terms upon which these lots were being disposed of.

Not knowing these facts, he states, as many others would state, he had confidence in those two gentlemen, upon which statement Mr. Marsh places his defence, that he was right in selling the lots to Mr. Ford at $75 per lot, which were deeded to his mother-in-law in the month of October on payment of $25 a lot. Had Mr. Ackerman known these facts at the time, it is but reasonable to suppose that he would not have had much confidence in the Mayor and Treasurer. Had he been possessed of this knowledge, he could not have expressed confidence in them. If he did, he would be just as blameable as they are, and should not have received the confidence of the electors of the city.

What the taxpayers have to complain of is that the Mayor and Treasurer, whose duty it was to guard the interests of the city, should have taken advantage of the knowledge they had, as Mayor and Treasurer, to dabble in the disposal of city property, when it was becoming more valuable, to the advantage of themselves or, at least, their relatives, at the expense of the city.

Are we putting the case too strongly? The facts, as given to the public by Mr. Burrell, are that he desired to purchase certain lots, which had been forfeited to the city owing to non payment of taxes; that, failing to do so, he asked a Mr. Ford to secure the lots for him; Mr. Ford, on applying to the Treasurer for information, was told by that official that the lots were "under offer." This, Mr. Burrel says, was in September. In October of the same year he (Ford) was referred to the Mayor, with whom he entered into negotiations for the purchase of the lots, for one of which the Mayor asked $100, but upon Ford agreeing to purchase other lots, he (the Mayor) lowered the price to $75 per lot, which lots were deeded to the Mayor's mother-in-law the month following the sale to Ford by Marsh for $25 per lot. In the face of these facts Mr. ex-Mayor Marsh has the consummate cheek to demand of The Intelligencer, Mr. Corby and Mr. Johnson a "public declaration that "they were mistaken as to the facts "and show that they wish to do right "anyway."

So they do, and will, in the interest of honest municipal government when they find that they were mistaken, but not otherwise.

To show that the case has not been over-stated by us, or that the picture is not painted blacker than it really is, we republish a few extracts from Mr. Burrell's letter of the 6th inst. He says:—

> Mr. Ford, who eventually purchased some of the lots, endeavored to buy two from the city on Russel Street, but was advised by Mr. Price that they were under offer. This was in September. In October he was referred to the Mayor, who raised the price from $75.00 to $100.00; but eventually agreed to the original offer of $75.00 in consideration of Mr. Ford's taking two lots that were not so well situated.
>
> When the lots were deeded to Mr. Ford, he found that they were only sold to Mrs. Smith on October 14th, about a month after he had tried to buy them from the city. His deed was dated Oct. 29th. He was prepared to pay $75.00 to the city, whereas Mrs. Smith paid but $25.00. The profit in 15 days was $200.
>
> You will see clearly from this that the lots were promised to Mr. Ford at $75 each BEFORE they were SOLD to Mrs. Smith at $25. In other words, he was kept waiting for the lots while they were transferred to him, not directly, but via Mrs. Smith.

Let's have the judicial investigation, Mr. Marsh, which you said you courted at the close of the Mayoralty election, and if you and your co-worker in the disposal of city lots are approved, The Intelligencer will acknowledge it "misunderstood" the difference between what is right and wrong in the conduct of municipal officials, not otherwise.

A VETERAN BANDSMAN

LIEUT J. M. ROGAN IS SENIOR IN BRITISH ARMY.

Bandmaster of Coldstream Guards Hails From the Isle of Wight and Had His Early Training in Church Choir — Can Remember the Days When the Conductors Were All French or Italian.

An interesting interview with Lieut. J. Mackenzie Rogan, M.V.D., Mus. Doc., Coldstream Guards, who is one of the most famous of army bandmasters, a distinguished all-round musician, and a very popular figure wherever he goes, has recently appeared in M.A.P.

"Yes, by virtue of forty-three year's service, I am the senior Bandmaster of the British Army," said the famous conductor in the course of a pleasant chat.

"Mr. Millar, of the Royal Marine Artillery, it is true, can top my record, but he really counts as belonging to the royal navy. By birth, I am a Vectensian, which, you may not know, means a native of the Isle of Wight; by parentage partly Scottish, partly Irish; and I got my early musical training in the best possible school, namely, a church choir.

"I remember, years afterwards, I was scoring some of Sir Arthur Sullivan's music for army bands—Sir Arthur himself, scored only for orchestras; he was with me at the time, and looking at my work, he exclaimed, 'Oh, ho, you were trained in a church choir, the best of schools, I can see it here.'"

Coming of military stock, Dr. Rogan went, naturally enough, into the army, joining the 11th Foot (now the Devonshire Regiment) as a "boy," and gradually working his way up through the band.

Dr. Rogan has seen some great changes since he enlisted. When he took the Queen's shilling, two-thirds of army bandmasters were foreigners and there was a violent prejudice against native musicians and native music. Now there is not a single foreign bandmaster in the army.

"Certainly there have been some excellent foreign conductors in the service," said Dr. Rogan on this point; "but, when I joined, the majority of them were rank frauds. A certain firm of musical-instrumental makers in those days made a regular business of picking foreign musicians off the streets, dressing them up in fine clothes, giving them a high-sounding title, and then palming them off on unfortunate regiments as bandmasters.

"The firm 'came in' because their proteges got all the band instruments from them and asked no questions as to price or quality. Then these foreign conductors were a constant source of irritation and insubordination among their men. Rows were frequent in the bands, and many a man was unjustly punished for insubordinate conduct towards 'Mosso' This, or 'Signor' That. I say unjustly punished, because these foreign bandmasters were civilians pure and simple, they were not subject to military law, therefore, had not military status or authority, and the soldier who 'cheeked' them committed no military offence.

"Nevertheless, many a man went to 'cells' in those days for disrespect to 'Mosso.' Fortunately for me, my first bandmaster was one of the few English ones then in the service, and a first-rate musician and man."

Then Dr. Rogan has seen a tremendous improvement in the standard of army music, partly owing to the disappearance of the foreign frauds alluded to, partly owing to the general improvement in musical taste in the army, and, indeed, throughout the nation.

High-class music was rarely played by army bands in his young days; and he remembers, when stationed at the Curragh, the bandmaster of another regiment ventured to put in a selection from Wagner one guest-night at mess.

He was barely half-way through it when his colonel bounced out in a towering passion, threatening to put him under arrest if he did not instantly stop or if he ever dared again to play such utterly condemned stuff.

"While we were at Dublin," said Dr. Rogan, continuing, "I was lucky enough, through playing in civilian orchestras, to attract the attention of Sir Robert Stewart, Professor of Music at Trinity College, Dublin, who proved a very kind friend to me—indeed, I might describe him as my 'musical godfather.'

"One of my most prized possessions is the baton which Sir Robert Stewart, when concluding the first performance in Ireland of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' broke over the head of the first violin who happened to come in half-a-bar late. The broken baton was sent me by a friend into whose possession it had come, and who knew the great regard in which I hold Sir Robert Stewart's memory.

"While in India I took an interest in the bands of native regiments, and on one occasion I arranged to conduct an evening performance of Il Trovadore by one of them. To get a pleasing effect, I instructed the native first cornet-player to hide himself in the jungle, which was all round the compound, coming in with his solo at the proper time.

"The moment for the cornet's interposition came, but no cornet-note was heard. I had to sing the solo myself and go on.

"The performance over, I went in search of the defaulter, half fearing that he might have been 'scoffed' by a tiger. My fears were groundless; he was safe, quite safe. He was also blissfully intoxicated. The native bazaar was close to his post; feeling frightened and lonely he had gone and got a bottle of arrack, vile native spirit, consumed the lot, and thus spoiled my 'show.'"

CRITICS

The physician who recommends, the patient who uses and the chemist who analyzes have established it as pre-eminently the best in purity, in perfection and in results.

No other preparation has stood such severe tests, such world-wide imitation and met with such popular and professional endorsement.

To the babe, the child and the adult it gives pure blood, strength, solid flesh and vitality.

ALL DRUGGISTS

Dangerous Sport.

First Lady (reading a newspaper)—This golf seems to be a very dangerous game. Did you see what happened to a man named Taylor? He went into bunker and was in two when he came out.

Second Lady—How dreadful!

"Yes, here are the words: 'Taylor getting out in two, Braid secured a half.'"

"Does it say what happened to the other half?"

"No, but there was worse to follow. According to the report, Taylor then fell altogether to pieces."—Word of Golf.

Room For Doubt.

The cuckoo clock had just chirped the half hour before midnight, and the girl in the parlor scene was weary.

"Mr. DeBorem," she said as she vainly attempted to strangle a yawn, "I heard something about you the other day that I'm sure is not true."

"Indeed!" he exclaimed. "What was it?"

"I heard some one say you were an easy going chap," she answered.—Chicago News.

Falling Hair

Mrs. Jas. Harris of Wappella, Sask. says:—

I have found Parisian Sage to be the best scalp and hair tonic and dressing I have ever used. My hair had been coming out in combs full and was very dry and brittle and the scalp was always itching and full of dandruff. I have used two bottles of Parisian Sage and it has stopped my hair from falling, the itching and dandruff have disappeared and my hair is fine and soft and glossy. I would not be without this fine hair tonic for many times the price."

For women, men or children Parisian Sage is without doubt the finest preparation for the hair. Daintily perfumed, it is free from grease or stickiness and ought to be where every member of the family could use it daily. Large bottle 50 cents, at all druggists or from the Giroux Mfg. Co. Fort Erie, Ont., postpaid. The girl with the Auburn hair is on every package. Sold and guaranteed by J. V. Doyle, Belleville.

Woman's Strange Disappearance.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 16.—The strange disappearance of Mrs. Douglas Robertson, wife of a well-known storekeeper of Norton, about 30 miles from here, is arousing much interest. The woman came to St. John with some produce, as was her custom, on Wednesday, Jan. 4, and remained with her sister, Mrs. James Clark, St. John West, when she started to return home. Her neice accompanied her to the Intercolonial Railway station, but they missed the train, and Mrs. Robertson decided to wait in the depot until the next train should start about an hour later.

Mrs. Robertson has not been seen since, though her husband and relatives searched in vain for a week, and on Saturday notified the St. John police. Mrs. Robertson is 44 years of age, and has a large family of children.

Cabby Cut His Throat.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—Thomas Walker, a cabman, aged about 45 years, formerly in the employ of Hinton's livery, Albert street, committed suicide early yesterday at the Cambridge restaurant, corner Bank and Queen streets, by cutting his throat with a razor. Despondency, brought on by ill-health and a hard course of drinking and unemployment, are held to be the cause of the man's rash act. Walker has resided in Ottawa for several years, and was a native of Yorkshire, England.

New Zealand Mails.

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 16.—Sir Wilfrid Laurier has cabled Premier Fisher of Australia, regretting that the Commonwealth has declined to renew the Vancouver and Australian mail service, with calls at Auckland and Sydney. Canada has decided, therefore, to enter into a contract with the Union Steamship Co. of New Zealand, of which Sir James Mills is chairman, for a five-years' service between Canada and New Zealand.

Ordered to England.

Kingston, Jan. 16.—Orders to proceed to England as soon as possible have been received by Major Henri Panet, commanding A Battery, R.C.H.A. Just where he will be stationed he does not yet know, but he will be with one of the Royal Horse batteries. He will leave at the end of next month and be absent eight months.

The winter of a man's discontent arrives when he bebgins to realize that it is more blessed to give than to receive the resulting bills.

HOW COMMISSION WORKS IN CIVIC GOVERNMENT

Following is an article on civic government by commissions which was read by Mr. Wills at Friday night's meeting of the Property Owners' Association. It is worthy of a careful reading by those who desire honest municipal government.

Municipal government by commission has been given a thorough trial in this country, and, if all reports are true, has proven, practically everywhere, an unqualified success. Commission government, it may be said is but a means to an end. The end is good government for our cities—that is, the divorcing of politics and municipal government, the elimination of ward lines, the dethronemnt of the boss, and the application to public affairs of sound, business principles The theory underlying commission government is that this end of good government may most surely be attained by the centralization of authority with a consequent holding to strict responsibility. It is exactly in this manner that private corporations are governed. A board of directors who are clothed with the fullest powers manage the affairs of the company and are held responsible for their most trivial act to the stockholders at large. Why should not the same methods be employed in the government of municipal corporations? The plan of commission government is to do away with the old division of city officers into legislative, executive and judicial departments, and to commit to the hands of a few men, known as a committee, or commission, or board of directors, the safe-keeping and government of the city. The plan has so amply vindicated itself that at present more than eighty cities in the United States either are actually governing themselves in this manner or have voted favorably upon the adoption of the commission form of government.

In the matter of the application of this plan ,the theorists, have of course differed. The working out of the details has resulted in three main forms of commision government, known as the Galveston, Newport, and Des Moines plans. Of these the Des Moines plan may be taken as fairly repreentative of the underlying idea and it is perhaps as good as any plan so far devied a a practical application of that idea. The Des Moines scheme as explained by Mayor James R. Hanna of that city, is briefly as follows: The commission consists of the mayor and four commissioners, who are invested with all the powers of city government, but who are elected by the people of the whole city, but without any party designation. The four commissioners and the mayor act as the administrative heads of their different departments, and also constitute the city council, and as such, legislate for the city. The commisioners and mayor are elected for a period of two years, and in the following manner: Any citizen who can secure the signatures of twenty-five voters vouching for his character, may become a candidate for mayor or commissioner From among these candidates the two receiving the highest number of votes in the primary become candidates for mayor in the final election, and the eight receiving the highest number of votes for commissioners become the final candidates for commissioners Then, in the final election, occurring two week later, the one receiving the highest number of votes for mayor becomes mayor, and the four receiving the highest number of votes for commissioners are elected to these offices These five men at their first meeting proceed to elect the subordinate city officers, and the new council is then ready to conduct the business of the city.

As an accurate and intelligent comment on this scheme of government we may well adopt the language of Mayor Hanna: "Directness and simplicity are the main characteristics of the Des Maines plan of commission government. The great purposes are to make the city government feel responsible to public opinion, and also to make it efficient in administration To carry out these two fundamental ideas two other great principles have directed nearly all the details of our charter, viz., to confer upon the governing body great power, and to hold the governing body strictly responsible for the right use of that power. Publicity and efficiency are thus the watchwords of the Des Moines plan Candidates must make a public statement of their campaign expenses; there can be no secret meetings of the city council; every ordinance appropriating money must be on public file for seven days before it becomes effective; all franchises must be submitted to a vote of the people for approval before they become operative: officers must have no secret obligations to public service companies in the way of passes, special rates or free services, etc These specific provisions for publicity have created a general spirit of bringing everything in connection with the city government out into the open light. Campaigns are conducted practically altogether in open meetings, hundreds of which occur in every city election Every meeting of the city council is minutely reported in the city papers The result is that the public opinion is well informed and intelligent, and it moulds the action of the city council, and the power of this public opinion is rendered still more effective by the existence of provisions for the initiative, referendum and recall." What city, in any one of our American commonwealths, could fail to be benefitted by a change from the present conditions to such a form of government?

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Junior boys, under the supervision of the physical director, had a skating trip last Saturday. The boys went up the Bay to a point just opposite Nigger Island. A fire was built and dinner was served up in true gypsy style. After all were well filled the boys started out on the return journey, two of the boys covering the distance in 40 minutes.

Next Saturday the Y. M. C. A. Boy Scouts will go on a hike out into the country.

The Merry Widows defeated the Midgets in a very fast and exciting game of Basket Ball Saturday night The final score was 4-2. Wednesday night the Warriors and the Midgets will be matched together.

The Men's meeting at the Palace thatre yesterday was addressed by Rev. Robt. Wallace. The subject was "The Life of Elisha," and Mr. Wallace carried his hearers back to the time of the great prophet and for 20 minutes he led them through the scenes and most interesting events of the times and life of the man who followed his God, the man who stood out alone amidst the great multitude of the Israelites and called on them to show which was the true God: Baal or Elisha's God. Mr. Mouck sang a solo which was much enjoyed. The meeting was brought to a close by singing Take the Name of Jesus With You.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

this energy continues to manifest itself as electricity. But when it passes on to a less perfect conductor, like carbon, it takes on the wave length of light; and as long as the medium for light is appropriate, energy continues in the wave length of light, even through the period of thousands of years and the space of millions of miles. But when the light comes in contact with another medium, a dark color, then the energy takes on the wave length of heat, and so on forever this energy continues to change its pace of travel and wave length in accordance with the character of the medium through which it passes.

Energy is never annihilated or lost; it manifests itself in different wave lengths, such as electricity, heat light magnetism, nerve-force, etc.. The medium and surrounding conditions

The committee of management will be composed of Mr. E. F. Dickens, Dr. Gilbert and Mr. Sulman. The league is open to all players under 16 years of age who are not registered with the O.H.A. or Senior City League. Mr. G. I. Sovereign was appointed secretary-treasurer.

The Globe has the following special from Picton: There has been war in the Eastern Ontario Professional League. Burgoyne, one of the local professional line-up, is authority for the statement that the players have taken things in their own hands and put "Buck" Irving behind them. Burgoyne says Irving has caused the friction all along the line. Saturday, it seems, the local players kept Irving and Charlton, the local manager, closeted until they gave over the franchise and the players' salaries. Now the players say they will run the schedule on their own hook. It is understood the same plan will apply to Belleville, Trenton and Port Hope.

BRANTFORD, Jan. 15.—The line-up of the Brantford professional team under "Buck" Irving's management, will be:—Goal. Cross; point, Dubec; cover, Pete Charlton; rover, Mallen; centre, Randall or Dusty; wings, Dusome and Chipchase.

FINTON IS ACQUITTED

Judge Teetzel Frees Him From Murder Charge.

Not a Stain on His Character, Says Judge, After Charging the Jury Strongly In Favor of the Prisoner—None of the Crown Witnesses, He Declares, Proved Quarrelling Between Prisoner and His Father.

Hamilton, Jan. 16.—Thomas Finton was freed here Saturday without a stain on his character after Judge Teetzel had strongly charged the jury in his favor.

He was put on the stand in his own behalf and told told of his last talk with his father. They had a friendly conversation on several topics and he (Tom) then went and did the chores. He saw his father later and got a dollar with which to buy feed.

At the afternoon's session the defence concluded its case with Tom Finton, and Mr. Blackstock called a number of witnesses in. When these had all been heard, Justice Teetzel created somewhat of a sensation by asking Mr. Blackstock to give his views why the evidence should be given to the jury, intimating that no direct evidence, such as the weapon, or direct implication against the prisoner had been submitted. Mr. Blackstock therefore proceeded to review the evidence, pointing out where suspicion pointed to the prisoner. Tom wanted to get his wife on the farm, and the only way he could work it was, knowing that his father's will provided for him recovering half the farm, to do away with the father. With reference to the blood spots, Mr. Blackstock asked if the prisoner had not been given every opportunity to explain them, yet no attempt at doing so had been made, until the lawyers got on the case, when a cut on Tom's finger was wrung in so as to convince the jury that it was how the blood got there. He thought that Tom's statement that perhaps Mrs. Kerr put the blood on his overalls, showed that Tom was afraid. He contended that it was not necessary that the weapon should be found. He asked if it were natural that shoes that were worn around a barnyard should be immaculate. It was not necessary for the crown to explain these blood stains or what Tom put on his wagon before leaving home. Tom's uneasiness whenever the shoe pinched, was a point against him. Too much stress had been taken up with the weakness of circumstantial evidence, to suit him. Mr. Blackstock asked if it was possible with such a mass of evidence that the prisoner should escape for one of the most brutal crimes in criminal annals.

Justice Teetzel felt that should he send this case to the jury he would consider it necessary to tell them that circumstantial evidence should be taken with the greatest caution. He quoted law on the subject, and also English opinions to substantiate the stand he was taking. The circumstances had to be consistent with the prisoner's guilt, and while he would not go so far as to say that the facts were not consistent in this case, he thought that the evidence was weak in some particulars.

Justice Teetzel had a compliment to pay to Mr. Blackstock's ability and reliability on questions of law, and regretted that he was unable to agree with his opinion on this point.

Taking the evidence in its entirety, the jury would have a right to accept that the deceased was subject to fainting spells. He thought the position of the body outside the barn door was sufficient to raise a presumption in the minds of the jury that he might have died from an accident, and this had not been dispelled. His lordship did not think there was sufficient evidence to show a motive for the prisoner killing his father. The crown had failed to show that there was such a feeling between the father and the son as to indicate that the prisoner would commit murder. None of the crown witnesses had given evidence of actual quarreling. Acting on the presumption that all criminal prosecutions favor the innocence of the prisoner, he therefore told the jury that he must instruct them not to bring in a verdict of guilt against the prisoner. All the evidence did was to throw strong suspicion on the prisoner. He believed that the crown's action was fully justified, and that the investigation had been well conducted.

His lordship therefore recorded a verdict of "Not guilty" on behalf of the jury. The prisoner's wife and friends flocked around him, and Finton laughed for the first time since he appeared in court.

The crowd in court was so large that the police had to give out instructions before the prisoner was actually discharged.

When the courtroom had been cleared his lordship addressed the prisoner as follows: "You have heard my address to the jury, and, as I said, that while there was not sufficient evidence to convict you, yet there was sufficient to cast suspicion on you and force you to suffer the long term of imprisonment prior to your trial. I trust your conscience is as clear as mine is in discharging you. This matter is between you and your Maker, and no one else knows. And I believe you are an innocent man, and you are discharged from this court without a stain upon you."

STRANGERS SUSPECTED

Two Men Were in Wellesley on Wednesday Last.

Police at Scene of Lobinski Murder Say They Have Several Clues—Many Rumors Are Current Involving Several Persons, But Two Strangers Who Were In Village Believed to Have Killed Farmer.

Berlin, Jan. 61.—Provincial Detective Boyd arrived Saturday evening to take charge of the Lobinski murder case. The police claim to have clews that will lead to arrests, but will divulge nothing. Detectives Boyd and Huber left early yesterday morning for the scene of the crime, and, after a thorough examination of the premises, interviewed everybody prominently connected with the case.

On Saturday afternoon the inquest was opened by Coroner Glaister, and adjourned until Wednesday in Wellesley village. Many false reports have been circulated, even the police having incorrect information until Saturday. For instance, the man who made the discovery of the body was not Leyes, but Charles R. Gerber. This was Thursday morning, his attention being attracted by the smokeless chimney and wide-open doors.

That the crime was committed on Wednesday night is indicated by the fact that Lobinski was seen at the window Wednesday noon. A brother of Chris Gerber had noticed on Thursday that the two rear doors were open, but he did not go in. When Chris was passing next morning, however, he went around to the back of the house, and found the body.

Many rumors are current, suspicions being cast on different persons. Much stress is laid on the reputed movements of two strangers wearing fur coats, and driving a team of horses, passing northward through St. Agatha and stopping at Bamberg Hotel Wednesday night.

Tracks in the snow showed that the men came from the north, and went that way. The position of the tracks make it appear that the team were not tied, giving rise to the belief that one man held the team while the other went into the house. The indications are that the men likely knew Lobinski well enough to induce him to let them in the house.

Paris green and doped whisky in a bottle found in the yard near the blood-stained hammer makes it seem probable that the hammer was used as an after thought. The hammer belonged to Lobinski. A blood-marked chair tends to show that one man used it in assaulting Lobinski, while the other crushed in his skull with the hammer. An empty whisky glass was found standing on the window sill. Three loaded shotguns were in their usual places.

A search discovered no money, so that the murderers must have got it all, but there is nothing to show that the old man had over $700, all told, part of that consistsing of personal notes.

Lobinski was a veteran of the Franco-Prussian war, and came to Canada over forty years ago, living in Berlin before settling in Wellesley Township, about twenty-five years ago.

Living all alone since the death of his wife, Lobinski allowed his hovel to get into a condition of horrible filth. He was known to shoot and eat skunks. The parts of two bodies of shunks were found in the house.

A baffling circumstance is the fact that the body was tied to a post outside. The blood shed inside the house goes to prove that an attack was made in there. The wire used in fastening the murdered man's foot to the post was so tightly twisted that nippers must have been used.

The fact that the message to the provincial police was not sent by wire on Friday prevented Detective Boyd from getting here until Saturday afternoon, thus causing a delay of over 24 hours. This has occasioned very sharp criticism, as has the fact that Coroner Glaister had to come to Berlin to be sworn in, instead of a Berlin coroner being sent up. If this had been done an inquest could have been opened almost a day sooner.

Churches Get Grants.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—By an agreement reached between the Department of Indian Affairs and the four churches engaged in educational work among the Indians of Canada, the Roman Catholic Church will receive $165,905, the Anglican Church $61,350, Presbyterian Church $34,250, and the Methodist Church $23,500. According to the estimates submitted under the new arrangement, the Government appropriates $285,000 toward the maintenance of the boarding schools conducted under the auspices of the Methodist, Presbyterian, Anglican and Catholic Churches throughout the provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia.

Shelbyville, Ky., Jan. 16.—Fifty masked men early yesterday stormed the Shelby County jail, seized and lynched three negroes, two of whom were charged with insulting white women, while the third was sentenced to hang for the murder of a negro woman.

LEMIEUX AT NEW YORK

Postmaster-General Says Trade Prospects Are Good.

Canadian Manufacturers Should Send Agents to South Africa, He Says, In Course of an Interview at New York—Negro and Hindu Questions Are Serious Ones Ahead of the New Commonwealth.

New York, Jan. 16.—Bubbling over with enthusiasm for the future "new South African union," Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux reached New York yesterday and last night started on the last lap of his world circling tour. Captain Hector A. Vrret, Mr. Lemieux's private secretary, accompanied his chief on the mission. Mrs. Lemieux and Mrs. Verret met their husbands at Naples, and the party left last night for Montreal with Dr. Eugene Lemieux, who has been here since Thursday awaiting the arrival of the Celtic.

"South Africa is not Canada, of course, but it is a great country," said Mr. Lemieux to the representative of the Canadian Press, who was the first to reach the deck as the big ship was warped into her dock. "We had a splendid voyage across," he added, "not a ripple and we were far enough out to avoid the fog which detained the Megantic seventeen hours just outside the harbor. I have become quite a sailor, for it took us 17 days from Southampton to Cape Town, while from Durban to Naples it took us just 31 days.

"The chances for trade with South Africa are excellent. If the Canadian manufacturers will only send agents over there, they will find the market the best they could wish for. South Africa is a great ranching and mining country, but so far they have no manufacturers. Maize is grown to a large extent and exported, but Canada could sell them fruits as well as wheat and flour.

"They have everything that could be desired to make a splendid success of their union," continued Mr. Lemieux, "and up to date the union is working fine. The nation and the new union have been chosen as a new starting point for all. You could not believe in seeing how the Dutch and the English are working together earnestly for the upbuilding of the country that ten years ago they were at one another's throats."

"How does the dual language question affect the union?"

"There is no friction that I could observe," said the Canadian Minister. "Parliament uses both languages; prayers at the opening of each sitting are said in both languages, and everybody seems satisfied. They have no school question like we have in Canada. The various provinces or states have charge of primary education, but, in view of the possible difficulties that might arise out of the application of the Herzog Act, Dr. Jameson and Gen. Botha have agreed on the appointment of a joint committee, which shall take up the educational question for all parts of the country.

"The provinces have less power than ours. Their Legislatures are called provincial councils, and they have a legislative union instead of a confederation. The central Government has the right to revise all money grants made by the councils. They have a wise provision for an amendment to their constitution in ten years if it should prove not to work as well as they hope.

"There are two serious problems ahead of South Africa, however—the negro and the Hindu questions. Natal, for instance, has 125,000 Hindus to 100,000 whites, while the native population is much greater than the Hindu. The Hindus came over to work in the coffee fields, and they did not go back. The question is whether all the provinces shall give the negroes and Asiatics the franchise. Cape Town admits negroes to vote, but the other provinces have not yet decided.

"I was very much interested during my stay in South Africa by visits to the old Dutch and old Hugenot families. These have been there for a long time, and they have splendid farms. I took a special interest in the Hugenots, for there are many of the same people in my own county of Gaspe, and there, too, they are among the solid and prosperous people of the district.

"The Germans and the Portuguese along the east coast vie with the English and a few Americans in promoting business, while there is an immense territory in Rhodesia, rich in gold and silver and other products, which will in a short time be one of the provinces of the new union.

"They have everything to make a success. With the exception of a comparitively small tract, the veldt, which is very hot in the day and cold at night, the climate is fine. The scenery is magnificent. The country about Durban is like the Riviera, while Table Mountain rivals the mountain of Fujiyama in Japan, and, with two races working together in perfect harmony, and with unlimited natural resources, the South African Union seems to me to be destined to become one of the most important parts of the British Empire.

"I must add that, as Canada's representative, I was welcomed with great warmth by all classes in the new union. His Grace the Duke of Connaught was most gracious. He told me that he was disposed to accept the office of Governor-General of Canada, and I am glad to hear that it is practically decided that he will come to us."

Mr. Lemieux expressed great satisfaction at hearing that the fisheries conference had resulted in a full understanding, and, while he would not make any statement on reciprocity while the subject was under discussion, he said he would welcome any settlement that was advantageous to both countries.

"I enjoyed my trip very much, and I was charmed with what I saw; but I am delighted to get back home, for, after all, Canada is the finest country on earth."

BLACKHAND TERRORIZES COURT.

Friends of Kidnappers Make Trouble for Magistrate.

New York, Jan. 16.—When Felie Esposito and Vincenzo Nicoza were arraigned before Magistrate Dodd yesterday there were a thousand ugly-looking men, many armed, of their own race, crowding the sidewalks outside the court room. They were friends of Esposito and Nicoza.

They could not get in, because Magistrate Dodd, warned by his last experience in attempting to try the same men, had sent for the reserves of the Miller avenue police station and had prevented any of the lowering, growling crew from entering the court. Even this precaution did not prevent an attack on Detective Santoco in court, of such violence that the case was adjourned.

At the last hearing the crowd got into the court room. The witnesses in the case were trembling in terror and even the detectives of the Italian bureau were nervous. Magistrate Dodd sent for the reserves and had the room cleared. Several knives and a revolver were found in the court room when the last of the crew had been pushed out to the street.

The men are charged with stealing Antonietta Sgambetta, 18 years old, from her home, and keeping her prisoner for several days in a hut.

Detective Santoso took the stand and began giving evidence. Vincenzo Nicoza leaped from the prisoners' chair at the detective's throat. He was tripped and pushed back to his place. With tightly clenched fists he leaned forward and, baring his teeth like a cornered wolf, screamed in Italian at the detective: "You lie, you lie, and I will get you; and if I do not get you, we will!" His struggles to reach the detective became so frenzied that the uproar in court was echoed by the surly crowd outside.

Magistrate Dodd hastily adjourned the case, ordering the men hurried back to prison and had the street cleared.

U.M.W. May Withdraw.

Montreal, Jan. 16.—The prevailing opinion in labor circles is that Grand President Lewis of the United Mine Workers of America has been defeated, and that his opponent, Mr. White, has been elected. This means the withdrawal of the union from the lower provinces, where the Sydney and Springhill strikes, under the leadership of Grand President Lewis, the U.M.W.A. has dropped no less than $1,500,000, while 1,500 men and their families at Springhill are still on the payroll of the association.

President White has all along maintained that the Canadian end of the U.M.W.A. has been fatal, a drag on the finances of the concern, that the management has been worse than bad, that graft has existed amongst the officials, and that, while 5,000 men in Eastern Canada have benefitted by the Lewis regime, no less than 100,000 have suffered in the United States, owing to the so-called blunder of the existing management of the U.M.W.A.

This being the case, it is understood that the Dominion Steel Corporation looks for an end to the Springhill struggle within five weeks' time.

It is also expected that socialism will receive an impetus under the coming regime, and reports state that this is spreading amongst the miners of Eastern Nova Scotia. It is stated, in fact, that to-day there are no less than 1,600 Socialists enrolled in the County of Cumberland, N.S., alone, and that the various associations affiliated with Socialism have a great many recruits in other parts of Nova Scotia, Alberta and British Columbia.

G.T.R. Wreck in London Yards.

London, Jan. 16.—Two Mimico trainmen, W. Armstrong and W. A. Murray, were injured and four cabooses demolished in a wreck which occurred yesterday morning in the local Grand Trunk Railway yards.

A freight train in charge of Engineer Balfry and Conductor Drury of Mimico, backed into the line of cabooses in which the train crews were sleeping. Murray and Armstrong were pinned down by the wreckage, and, it was with difficulty that they were released. Armstrong's legs were badly smashed and his face lacerated. He is suffering greatly from the shock. Murray's feet were jammed, and it was necessary to amputate the toes of one foot. Two other Mimico trainmen were slightly hurt.

Boy Drowned.

Ottawa, Jan. 16.—While skating on the Ottawa River Saturday afternoon, two boys left the party, tempted to try the smooth ice where it has been cut. They got on to the thinner surface, climbing the wire to do so, and went through. Wilfrid Gauthier was pulled out by H. Plamondin, but Hermides Prot, 10-year-old son of a widow residing at 97 1-2 Water street, was drowned. Plamondin just caught his toque as he disappeared. There is little hope of recovering the body until spring.

Winnipeg Has Bad Fire.

Winnipeg, Jan. 16.—Winnipeg has had another midnight midwinter fire which will cost the insurance companies about $400,000, the building destroyed being the Kelly block on Bannantyne avenue east, in the very heart of the wholesale district.

Postmaster Returns.

Halifax, Jan. 16.—Wm. O'Neil, postmaster at New Waterford, C.B., who left with $7,500 belonging to the Bank of Nova Scotia, has returned to New Waterford, but has not yet been arrested.

Want Earlier Elections.

Kingston, Jan. 16.—Ald. Given has raised the question of holding the municipal elections earlier in the year, holding that New Year's is a bad time to get the vote out, and the City Council will take up the matter tonight. The last week of November or the first week of December is suggested. If the council favors it, the Government will be petitioned for the necessary power.

READY TO RATIFY.

Canada's Share of Fisheries Negotiations Are Brought to Conclusion.

Washington, Jan. 16.—Diplomatic negotiations have scored a victory over arbitration in the fisheries dispute between Canada, Newfoundland and the United States, a statement issued Saturday by the State Department here, disclosed the fact that a complete agreement on all details involved had been reached between Canada and the United States, and likewise that a sufficient adjustment of difficulties with Newfoundland have been reflected to make unnecessary any recourse to the mixed commission of The Hague tribunal. Sir Edward Morris, Premier of Newfoundland, has returned home, to confer with the members of his Cabinet, but enough ground already has been covered to warrant the belief that a complete settlement soon will be effected. Sir Edward Morris' departure to Newfoundland was made possible on Thursday, when negotiations reached the point where it became obvious that it would not be necessary to take the question up again with The Hague.

The details of the agreement were not divulged, but they include the modification of certain fishing regulations, as well as the continuance of others hitherto in effect. A conspicuous revelation to the representatives of both countries was the ease with which the fisheries negotiations could be misconstrued. Many misunderstandings were straightened out, and the belief was general yesterday with respect to the Canadian fisheries question that American as well as Canadian fishermen would find mutual benefit from the improved regulations.

MASONS REFUSE HELP TO GRAFTER

Swindler Alvarez is Remarkably Repudiated in Open Court in New York

NEW YORK, Jan. 16th,—Denounced by Masonic brethren as a scoundrel a swindler and an assassin, Manuel Alvarez, alias Badmero Mendoza, convicted three months ago of the forgery of a check for $25,000, was arraigned this morinng before Judge Rosadsky for sentence and was given an indeterminate sentence of no less than three and a half nor more than nine and a half years in Sing Sing.

It was remarked that this was the first time in the history of the order that its communications figured in open court. The communication which was read to the prisoner by the judge, was from the grand secretary of the Masons in Cuba, addressed to E. M. L. Ehlers, grand secretary of the grand lodge of New York state Alvarez, after his conviction, appealed to the Masons of this state for help.

Alvarez was convicted for having given a checque for $25,000 to a moving picture film concern for films worth $14,000 and receiving the change. At his trial he declared his arrest to be part of a conspiracy. He said that he had been sent to this country to buy arms and ammunition for a revolution which was scheduled for last October and that $125,000 had been placed to his credit with the Spanish bank.

The letter from the secretary of the grand lodge Cuba states that Alvarez was a master Mason, but that legal steps had been instituted to revoke his diploma The letter contained the sentence: "Alverez is a grafter, a swindler, a scoundrel, a usurper of properties belonging to his brother and was implicated in the assassination of a Spanish officer."

MASKED MEN LYNCH THREE

Negroes Taken From Kentucky Jail by 50 Angry Citizens--Jailer Powerless

SHELBYVILLE, Ky., Jan. 16.—Fifty masked men stormed the Shelby County jail yesterday, seized two negroes and later lynched them. One of the mob's victims was alleged to have made an assault on a white woman; another was accused of insulting two white women and knocking them down, and a third had been convicted of murdering a negro woman and was under sentence of death.

The bodies of two of the negroes, Gene Marshall and Wade Patterson, were found later, but that of the third, James West, is still unaccounted for, although he was seen in the hands of the mob with a rope about his neck.

The two bodies recovered were found about a quarter of a mile apart. That of Marshall was found hanging to a bridge near the jail, while that of Patterson was found in Cedar Creek. Patterson, it is said, attempted to escape from the mob and was shot. His body was thrown in the creek.

According to Deputy Jailer Hornback, Jailer Edward Thompson hid the jail keys when the mob appeared and later, when the mob entered, Hornback let the men into the jail office.

"They said there was 'three niggers we're going to get or else blow the jail up,'" Hornback said. "They kept yelling for the dynamite, while some of the mob started to beat on the cell locks with a sledgehammer. About twelve men had their guns pointed at me, demanding the keys. I insisted I did not know where they were. Finally, they broke the cell door open and took out West, Marshall and Patterson."

Marshall was the one sentenced to hang. He beheaded a negro woman more than a year ago. Both West and Patterson were to have been taken before a grand jury to be called on January 23rd.

THOMAS F. LYNCH WRITES OF A VISIT TO THE OLD HOME

Secretary of the Belleville Club of Chicago Writes Glowingly of the City of the Bay—He Tells An Interesting Story of His Extended Visit Here—How He and Other Visitors Were Treated

One of the most lively organizations in Chicago is the Belleville Club of that city, which sent such a splendid representation to our Old Boys' Reunion in July last, and the proceedings of which, at their subsequent meetings have been perused with much interest by Intelligencer readers

Their latest enterprise is the publication of a monthly paper, "The Belleville Club News," of which Mr Thomas F. Lynch, the genial and indefatigable Secretary, is the editor and the first issue of which has been received. The News, although small in size, is overflowing with interesting matter, chief among which is a generous appreciation of his former home town, written by the editor. This clever article is too long for reproduction in its entirety, but we give some extracts from it herewith:

"The thing that struck me most forcibly about Belleville was that every building, whether a residence or a business place, seemed to be occupied. I do not recall seeing a single vacant house or store during my whole of stay. Idle places there may be, but I did not happen to see them

Now this is a vastly different condition than that obtaining in the years 1888 and 1889 and means nothing if not prosperity. And why should not Belleville be proseprous? She has everything that makes for that condition. A grand farming country on every side; the finest body of navigable water that lies in God's great out-of-doors; a splendid harbor; rich minerals of all kinds within easy access; a fine progressive citizenship; up-to-date newspapers; keen merchants; learned professional and loyal far-seeing business men, in fact, all the necessary raw material from which, and with which, to build a great municipality.

Business in all parts of Canada has been backward until the last year or two and Belleville has suffered in this respect, just as every part of the Dominion has suffered. Now, however since Canada has entered on the greatest era of her history, Belleville is going to be heard from more and more and I predict that ere long she will be in the very front rank of Canadian towns that will be talked about for their hustling features.

Just take it from me that no town has anything much on the old burg in the quality of the men who go to make up her leading business men All they need is a fair chance to show what they are able to do, and the prosperity that now is apparent throughout Canada is giving them that chance and they are going to make the most of it.

The residential sections of the city seemed to me vastly improved; the business section does not show so great an improvement but is coming fast. That part of the city in the vicinity of the post office looks fine and you will not find much better looking buildings in any small city anywhere than the Government building, the Armories and the Quinte Hotel, which are all grouped around the corners of Pinnacle and Bridge streets.

The Canadian Northern Railway is now building its terminal in the lower part of the city and I understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway will, undoubtedly, enter the city in less than two years. Then I was told by men whom I believe competent to speak, that an Interurban Electric Line is practically assured for the city and vicinity at an early date, so you see, the old home is shaking the moth balls out of its dress suit and is getting ready to "doll up" a bit

Those physical signs of a great awakening are apparent to the man who simply strolls and keeps his eyes open, but there are stronger reasons for the optimistic view I give of Belleville's future.

I refer now to the impressions received on talking to the men of affairs in the city. They are keen, alert, and enthusiastic. They have confidence in themselves and the town that one associates more with men of the "booster" type that I run across in my trips to Montana the Dakotas and other Western States. This "Booster" spirit seemed to be in the air, in Belleville, and it seemed to be a new spirit, and it is the spirit that usually makes men get what they go after. It is "Backbone," not "Wishbone."

The treatment accorded those of us Chicagoans who went home for Christmas was little short of what is termed "Royal." "Royal" treatment however, usually suggests formal treatment, while we were, so to speak simply taken in their arms, like long lost kids, and we were showered with kindness.

"Kindness"! That's the very word I was looking for to properly express what we were shown by the people of Belleville. No other word so well conveys the manner of their greeting We were all members of the Belleville Club, of Chicago, and the people back there have a mighty warm spot in their hearts for all the Belleville boys in Chicago. They like the idea of the Belleville Club and lose no opportunity of letting you see that they do. They feel, as we all of us here feel that it means a tangible expression of our love for and our loyalty to our old home; of our mutual respect for each other and the desire for closer companionship in our adopted country and the opportunity for keeping green, memories dear to all of us which, under different conditions would be effaced.

It is a grand idea, when you come to think of it, this Belleville Club. It is fine to think that now when so many of us are in the twilight, or early evening of our lives, we are still in touch with many of the old friends of our life's morning. I think therefore that right here is a good place to digress from my "Belleville" article long enough to express the hope that this, the first New Year of the Belleville Club, proves to be only the first of a long, honorable and successful life for the organization."

TRACE OF POISON NOT YET FOUND

Analyst's Report on Death Of Picton Man Is Not Yet Completed

PICTON, Ont., Jan. 16.—The nonappearance of the report from the analyst, Professor Ellis, of Toronto caused the putting-over until Jan 27th, of the inquest into the death of John Bongard. The coroner's jury met to-night under Dr. Morley Currie but could do nothing until they had heard the result of the autopsy on the dead man's stomach.

"While we have some evidence to be given, I think it better to postpone the session until the inquest can be properly gone on with," declared Dr Currie to the crowded court-room Shire Hall was full of people, with many curious women. Just as the coroner had the investigation formally postponed two telegrams were received, one by Crown Attorney Brown the other by Dr. Currie. They came it is understood, from Professor Ellis and intimated that he would have his report ready by January 27th. It is practically certain from the delay in the presentation of the report that no trace of poison has yet been discovered.

BANK DEPOSITORS AIR GRIEVANCES

Curator Clarkson Says Charter Was Obtained by Evasion of the Bank Act

(Intelligencer Special.)

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 17.—A hundred and fifty depositors of the Farmers' Bank met and discussed their grievances to-day. Curator Clarkson was chosen chairman. He said the bank had a total sum of six hundred and eighty thousand dollars in four years; that the board of directors was particularly unfitted for the direction of a financial institution, and that the charter had been obtained by evasion of the Bank Act. The institution, it was stated, had only a hundred and seventy thousand dollars paid up capital, instead of a quarter of a million. He stated that the shareholders would get nothing, and it was intimated that the depositors might get a little.

VICTIMS OF THE BLACK DEATH

Chinese Opposing Attempts to Remove Rotting Bodies--Dead Fill Houses

PEKIN, Jan. 16.—Reports from Harbin say that the Chinese there are vigorously opposing the summary disposition of the bodies of those who have died from the bubonic plague. The authorities do not dare to burn them, as the people desire that they must remain intact so that their ancestors may recognize them in the future life. They also oppose the burning of houses, some of which contain the dead bodies of entire families. Some of the corpses have been kept in the city for day, but they are now being taken to the open country, where trenches for their burial have been prepared.

It is reported that the Russians in Harbin are not concerning themselves with the Chinese section, although they are dealing drastically with the Chinese within the Russian city. The Chinese newspapers are raising an outcry and bringing forward serious charges of persecution and burial alive. Members of the legations who constantly recommend measures to the government are suggesting a censorhip of the press.

The plague is of a very virulent type. Death usually occurs within 48 hours and not more than one per cent. of the cases have ended in recovery.

Dr. G. E. Mesny, a French physician, who gave himself up to the work of combating the disease, died heroically. When he realized he was attacked by the plague he isolated himself in his room in an hotel, drafted his will and wrote farewell letters. He begged his friends not to notify his wife of his illness, and died alone.

Already the doctors recognize the hopelessness of attending to those stricken, and they are devoting their energies to prevent the spread of the contamination. It is feared that some of the Manchurian villages have been entirely wiped out. The intensity of the cold weather has caused the people to remain indoors, thus fostering infection.

The danger of the plague getting a foothold in Pekin is considered slight, as train service to and from the infected districts have been stopped. A woman doctor, educated in America, has gone from here to Harbin. The doctors have been inoculated and are euipped with special costumes and masks. The government is insuring each foreign volunteer for $20,000.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

The Ottawa Presbytery, in session on the 11th, inst., decided not to adopt the overture that a time limit be fixed with regard to pastors. It favored fixing the length of time which a pastor could serve on any one charge at six years.

Sir Wilfrid denies having made any promise to the Western Farmers. No doubt his "sunny way" left them to believe he did promise. He has a happy faculty of leading his hearers to believe he said something when in reality he said nothing. This is what is called diplomacy.

There was a jolly row at the annual meeting of the Toronto Reform Association on Friday night last. Perhaps as good an idea of it as can be given will be found in the following headings which were placed over the report of the gathering by the Toronto Star which is a well known organ of the party, as follows: LIVELY TIME OF LIBERALS—Toronto Reform Association Annual Meeting Something of a Bedlam.—One Man Hauled from Platform—The Lie Passed—Charges Rebutted.

A camparison of the prices received by the farmer for what he has to sell shows that he is getting 5 per cent. more for his grain, 48 per cent more for his meat, 35 per cent. more for his dairy product than ten years ago, while the increase on foodstuffs textiles, etc, ranges only 2 to 10 per cent., yet the Western farmers are clamoring for reciprocity. In fact they have made themselves believe they are the whole of Canada, and that all outside their preserve have no interests which should be considered if they interfere with theirs.

If there isn't true quality in the Steps were taken in Belfast on the 11th, inst., to revive the Ulster Unionist Clubs, which were largely responsible for the successful movement against Gladstone's Home Rule Bill of 1893. A meeting, presided over by Lord Templemore, called on the presiding presidents and secretaries to reorganize the clubs to work to their utmost to oppose home rule.

A lost painting by Tiepelo, representing Daphne turning into a tree known only through seventeenth century engravings and which it was suspected had been smuggled abroad, has been discovered at Venice. It is likely that it will be purchased by the Government.

Two very interesting reports on a portion of the North-West Territories south-west of Hudson Bay have just been issued by the Geographical Survey, Ottawa .They are of especial value to Ontario on account of the fact that the region which they give information on is that part of the unorganized North West Territories formerly part of the District of Keewatin, which Ontario is endeavoring to add to its area. Judging from both reports there seems to be little prospects that the province will gain a region in which may be found valuable economic minerals in paying quantities. Even if the difficulties of transportation are overcome it is very doubtful whether the mineral found would repay working.

AN IMPORTANT NEW CONCERN: THE CORBY-COBB COMPANY

The following article, copied from the Commercial Journal, of Philadelphia, is of local interest, as the head of the firm referred to is Mr. Charles Corby, brother of Mr. Henry Corby, whose many friends in his native city will rejoice in his success:

"The establishment in this city of an important new business enterprise of whatsoever character is always a matter of more than passing interest, not only to readers of 'Commercial Journal,' but the public at large, as each one adds materially to the commercial activity and financial status of the entire community. This is particularly true as regards an important brokerage and commission house dealing in general food products by reason of the widespread nature of the business.

It is with more than an ordinary degree of pleasure, therefore, that we are privileged to note the incorporation under the laws of this city of the Corby-Cobb Company, which, on January 1, will open a completely equipped brokerage and commission establishment at No. 15 South Front street, where they will be abundantly prepared for the eminently satisfactory transaction of an extensive business in a general line of food products, making a decided specialty, however, of canned goods, dried fruits and salmon.

"As the success of any enterprise is largely dependent upon the character and ability of the men guiding it, we take pleasure in presenting the names of the men composing this new house: Thomas V. Cobb, president and treasurer of the new company, was formerly a member of the most prominent commission merchants in the East; Charles H. Clarke, vice-president, is equally as well known in the West as a member of the Kelly-Clarke Company, of Seattle, Washington; Charles Corby, secretary, is president of the Corby Commission Company, of New York. All three of these gentlemen are thoroughly practical men of broad experience. Certainly, the high character of the new house, its financial standing and exceptional connections in the leading markets, both of the east and west, will enable the Corby-Cobb Company to offer their patrons a service that can scarcely be duplicated anywhere, and we do not hesitate to predict for the house a brilliant business future, filled with eminently gratifying results and to commend them without reserve to the trade the company is designed to serve."

JEWISH MERCHANTS IN THE TOILS SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST THEM

Acting on advice and the necessary warrants, the local police got busy last evening and in consequence no less than four men, all Jews, are under arrest and another will be arrested if located. Abraham Solomon, jr., and Charles Slona were arrested here and Harry and Robert Solomon were arrested at Campbellford shortly afterwards. Sergt. Harman and Officer Deshane went to Campbellford this morning and returned later in the day with the two prisoners. The fifth party who is wanted is Abraham Solomon, sr. The charge preferred against the parties is that of conspiring to defraud creditors. The circumstances are such that even a Philadelphia lawyer, with all his knowledge and tact, would evidently be at sea.

As far as can be ascertained Abraham Solomon, sr., had general stores in this city, Trenton and Campbellford. He sold out or transferred one or more of these places to his sons Abraham, Harry and Robert, and Charles Slona was also in the deal. This transaction took place without the knowledge of creditors of Abraham Solomon, who, after the transaction, left for parts unknown. The parties under arrest were, it is alleged, in collusion with Solomon and knew of the transaction and why the sale was being made. It is said that there are numerous creditors who mourn the loss of Abraham Solomon from this community, and learning that he had gone away, not apparently with an empty purse, set the law in action to recover what was justly their dues. The result was that the parties above mentioned were arrested. One merchant in this city, who is somewhat of a jobber in his line of goods, is said to be interested to the extent of $400, which Solomon, sr., owes him. There are others in the city and at other places who would be pleased to have the affair settled in such a manner as that they would receive what is coming to them.

Owing to the fact that the parties were only arrested last evening and not all of them here, nothing could be done in the case this morning, but at three o'clock this afternoon they were brought up before the Magistrate.

C. N. R. PROGRESS WEST OF TRENTON

Work Between Toronto and Trenton to be Finished Early In The Spring

It is stated by the Cobourg Post that the work on the C.N.R. in the vicinity of Cobourg is progressing as rapidly as the weather will permit. The steel is all laid east from Division street to Brighton and three ballast trains are engaged distributing ballast.

The subway at Division street has been delayed for some time owing to the severe weather. As soon as the weather moderates sufficiently to allow the men to work advantageously, the contractor will rush the work along. Three steam shovels are in the yard ready to be put to work on the job making the deep cut.

The station is erected and closed in and the contractors are now engaged on the inside finish.

From the golf ground west to Gage's Creek, good progress has been made, and it is hoped to reach Port Hope shortly.

The steel girders for the matting factory bridge and the viaduct bridge at Port Hope arrived in Cobourg and as soon as the rails are laid west to that town the steam cranes will be shipped from Cobourg.

The contractors fully expect to have the road completed between Toronto and Trenton early in the spring and a regular train service installed in June.

GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE.

Enoch, the man-fish entertained a capacity audience at Griffin's last night. His aquatic exhibition is truly marvellous and displays a wonderful power of endurance. He remained under the water for a period of two minutes and thirty-five seconds, and expects to break a three and a half minute record some time during his stay here. His singing while under the water is one of the featrues of his act and greatly amused last night's audience.

For genuine comedy Davis & Kelly are a pair hard to beat. To say that they had the adulence convulsed would be putting it mildly. Their act is one long scream from start to finish.

WOMAN PLEADED GUILTY OF THEFT

Hannah Richardson, an Old Offender, Stole $5 and Was Remanded

Hannah Richardson, a middle aged woman, who has on previous occasions appeared in the prisoners' dock here, occupied that unenviable position this morning. She was arrested last evening on a charge of stealing a five dollar bill from the lady of the house where she was employed. The accused admitted she took the money, but intended to return it. She committed the act on Saturday last. Before the Magistrate this morning the woman elected to be tried by His Worship and pleaded guilty to taking the bill. She was remanded to jail for a week, when, in all probability, a further charge of theft will be preferred against her.

LIVELY DEBATE AT THE T. A. S.

Country Life Not Preferable to City Life--Such is the Decision That Was Rendered

"Resolved that country life is preferable to city life, considered, socially, morally and physically."

Such was the wording of the debate held at the regular meeting of the T. A. S. last evening. Father Meehan, the president, occupied the chair during the conduction of the regular meeting which preceded the event of the evening. The chair during the debate was occupied by vice-president Chas. Peppin.

The subject of the debate on the face of it does not appear to give the debaters a very wide scope for research or detailed matter, however the array of facts, arguments and statistics presented by each speaker supplemented by the excellent oratory each displayed, proved conclusively that this subject can be made a most entertaining one, that it offers a wide field for study, and it is not unlikely that it will again be put on the boards at the T. A. S.

The affirmative was upheld by Mr Fred Meagher, as leader, and Mr Stephen Kinlan as first lieutenant while the negative was ably represented by Mr. Thos. Hurley as leader and Mr. J. O'Sullivan proved a worthy seconder.

All four speakers displayed such uniform ability in oratory and debating power that it would be difficult to discriminate; however it is only fair to say that Messrs. Kinlan and O'Sullivan, both new men in debates acquitted themselves most creditably and they will be heard from again Both leaders were perfectly at home handling the subject as they have seen service before on the debating platform

Mr. Jas. Kenny, M. A., of St. Michael's College, Toronto, kept his appointment as judge, although under sad circumstances, he having lately suffered the loss of his mother who died here. He justly awarded the debate to the negative, the affirmative having failed to prove their case.

SUPRISE PARTY MUCH ENJOYED

Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Ketcheson Honored Before Departure For a New Home

On Tuesday evening, Jan. 10th a party of about eighty friends and neighbors invaded the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ketcheson, 6th concession, Sidney, to say good-bye, before their departure to their new home in the village of Frankford. An address was read by Mr. Bert Lott.

Mr. and Mrs. Ketcheson were each presented with a handsome wicker rocker. Although taken completely by surprise, Mr. Ketcheson, in his usual good natured way made a brief reply in a few appropriate words in behalf of himself and wife.

After a good lunch was partaken of the remainder of the evening was spent in social chat and music. The company dispersed at the usual hour having had a very enjoyable time.

CASIMIR-PERIER'S TROUBLES DEEPER

Janesich Insists Matter of His Hocking Necklace Be Settled in the Courts

PARIS, Jan. 16.—It was announced that the troubles of Claude Casimir-Perier, son of the late President of France, arising from his hypothecating a pearl necklace, would be arraigned to-day, but the negotiations failed, as Janesich, the original seller of the necklace, insists that the affair be settled in the courts. Janesich says the necklace, which contains 57 pearls, weighing 579 grammes, cost him originally 87,325 francs. He sold it to an American who exchanged it last spring for a more valuable one. Janesich added three pearls, costing 32,945 francs. Hence, taking into account the late 20 per cent. rise in the price of pearls, he considered that 150,000 francs was much below the market value of the necklace.

Claude Casimir-Perier says that when Issaverdens advanced him 60 000 francs on the necklace, although he signed a scale contract stipulating that unless the sum was repaid by November 15 the sale would be complete. He considered the contract was merely a formula covering the advance on the necklace. It may be explained that pawnbroking in France is a government monopoly; between individuals it is illegal. Issaverdens sold the necklace to Dutrain November 15 for 63,500 francs. The latter is willing to surrender it if he is repaid.

The name of Claude Casimir-Perier has been seen frequently in the newspapers this week. His nearest relations went before a magistrate and unanimously supported a request that a judiciary council be appointed to manage his affairs. A carpenter sued him for 24,000 francs for work done for which Casimir paid checks that were dishonored. It is announced that he has sold seven 18th century tapestries from the paternal chateau at Pont-sur Seine for 1,000,000 francs cash. The family is very wealthy and owns important coal mines. It is reported that ex-President Casimir-Perier left everything to his widow except what the law obliged him to leave to his son.

TIME FOR A CHANGE

That an English Cabinet should be the mere creature of a Socialistic and Home Rule crew is to be regretted. These people are taking the Cabinet by the throat and threaten to defeat it if their views are not concured in. Cablegrams from England say:—The Labor party has fixed the price of its support of the Government during the coming session of Parliament, and Chairman Barnes announces in an article in a Radical newspaper that the primary condition is that the Government must abandon the preamble to the Lords' veto bill at the behest of the Laborites or abide the consequences. The preamble says:

"Whereas, it is intended to substitute for the House of Lords, as it at present exists, a second chamber constituted on a popular, instead of a hereditary basis, but such substitution cannot immediately be brought into operation."

Is it not about time for the moderates of the Empire to unite and vote down these revolutionists?

MAKING HISTORY

This is a history-making epoch in Belleville. What with the proposed judicial investigation of the charges in connection with the sale of city lots preferred against ex-Mayor Marsh and Treasurer Price, the election of Mayor Ackerman by a very small maority, and the demand for a recount of the votes cast in that election, some interesting pages will be added to the history of the city within the next few weeks.

Mr. Thomas, the defeated candidate for the Mayoralty, whether acting on his own volition or at the instance of some "power behind the throne," has asked for, and has been granted, a recount of the votes which were cast in the election. Mr. Thomas, as a veteran sporting man, was supposed to be a "good loser," but it has turned out otherwise. However, it is "none of our funeral," as the old saying has it.

BILLY MACLEAN M. P.

Mr. W. F. Maclean, the M.P. for South York, does not intend to allow his light to shine under a bushel; on the contrary, he is determined to immortalize himself. He has given notice in Parliament of his intention to attempt to revolutionize things generally. Among the subjects he proposes are:—

To empower the various Provinces to expropriate telephone lines.
Reduced rates on the C. P. R.
A public-owned cable between Canada and the Mother Country.
Public ownership of telegraphs.
The appointment of a tariff commission.
Extension of the parcel post system.

On the announcement of this programme, some of the members, the report says, chuckled, and Mr. Maclean, turning and facing the facetious ones, said: "There are too many political peacocks here. They like to spread their tails, and that is all. I have a perfect right to bring these questions up."

And the "peacocks" looked abashed. Is it any wonder?

COLONIZATION IN QUEBEC

The Quebec Legislature is now in session, and the Opposition is making serious charges against the Government in their management and disposal of the Crown lands of the Province. These condemnations are not confined to the Conservative party. An ex-member of the present Cabinet in Quebec spoke as follows in the debate upon the address:

"Mr. Jean Provost, ex-Minister of Colonization, spoke up to the adjournment last night, the 13th inst., condemning the Government colonization policy. He declared that the reports of the colonization and Crown Lands department were falsified, and that the 1,389 location tickets which had been issued were not given to settlers but to Montreal business men going on hunting expeditions.

"There was method in the colonization administration of Ontario and Alberta, but the system in Quebec was rotten."

It is gratifying to the supporters of the Whitney Government to know that even Liberals in other Provinces recognize the honesty of the present men in power in the administration of public affairs.

FEEDING THE PRESS

Here is a specimen of the way in which the Laurier Government feeds the press that supports it in all its acts. Mr. Monk, M.P., asked for a return showing the amount of money paid to the press in Montreal and Quebec between March 31, 1910, and November 15, 1910. The return shows that the following amounts were paid by the Government to Montreal and Quebec papers that support the Government: La Patrie, $1,089; Montreal Herald, $20,800; Quebec Telegraph Printing Company, $674; Le Soleil, $526; Montreal Witness, $87; La Presse, $466. Is it any wonder that these papers daily sing the praises of Laurierism? Is it not about time for the Montreal Witness to kick? It only got $87! The Herald is the pet. It is no longer a wonder how it can scatter its daily about the country at less than the cost of the paper upon which it is printed.

AFTER THE HOLIDAY EXCITEMENT.

There are many restful places to recuperate at. Nearby is the St. Catharines, Preston and Mount Clemens mineral resorts. The "Highland Inn" at Algonquin Park, you can enjoy the pure air and winter sports, and rest to your heart's content.

A trip to Temagami, Cobalt Gowganda or the new gold field of Porcupine will suit the prospector.

The sunny south, Florida, California, or Mexico will appeal to those who wish to get away from the cold winter.

MANUEL IS TO MARRY SOON

Reports Are Current That the Bride Will be Beautiful Princess Alexandra of Fife

EDINBURGH, Jan. 16.—Repors are current here that ex-King Manuel of Portugal is soon to marry Princess Alexandra of Fife, forget Gaby Deslys the dancer who lured him to ruin, take a honeymoon tour of Canada and the United States, and then retire to the Fife estates and live on a pension to be granted him by Portugal as its only living specimen of a king, and to add to his fortunes some of the Duke of Fife's money which he would likely get as part of his consort's dowry. If this program is carried out it will give Scotland the distinction if being the home of a king, something the northland has not known since the Pretender's days.

Exile Manuel is still living quietly in Wood Norton in England, his first place of refuge after getting away from Gaby Deslys and the republicans of Lisbon. He isn't giving out any interviews as to his future plans matrimonial or otherwise, and is known to be rather scantily supplied with money. But it is known that he is shortly to move to Richmond, to occupy a house lately vacated by Kaid Sir Harry Maclean, the Scotchman who used to rule the military forces at Morrocco. From Richmond Manuel will attend lectures at Oxford university and hope, perhaps for a recall to Lisbon.

But the Universum newspaper, of Leipzig, doesn't support this view. It gives publicity to the report that Manuel will marry Princess Alexandra, who outranks her own father, a mere duke, is cousin of King George V. Under extreme circumstances such as prevailed in the case of her grandmother, the late Queen Victoria Princess Alexandra might become Queen of Britain. Fate has a chance to play a queer turn with the exiled boy king of a petty country like Portugal, by making him prince consort of a world-empire like Britain. But of course, it is among the improbabilities.

Well, with his Portugese pension which won't be burdensome in size, if he gets it, and some of the Fife money, if he marries Alexandra, Manuel can take a honeymoon trip around the world. It is known that he desires to make a world tour, and that when he does make it he will visit Canada Australia, Africa, and the United States, possibly studying governmental methods. If it is a honeymoon trip it will be a round of fetes, especially in Canada and the United States.

IN POLIGE COURT

Arthur Sheffield was found guilty of being drunk and disorderly last evening. He was fined $5 and $2 costs.

Mikalay Devosycak, a Hunk, was last evening arrested for drunkenness. He had to contribute $3 to the city treasury.

FIVE ARRESTS MADE

The police last night were kept somewhat busy, and as a result of their labors five arrests were made, including a woman, who was charged with theft of money.

It was reported last evening to the police that a fight was in progress in a yard on Front Street. When the officer arrived all was quiet and the principals had decamped.

NEARLY DIED OF STONE IN THE BLADDER

GIN PILLS SAVED HIM

513 JAMES ST., HAMILTON, ONT.

"Five years ago, I was taken down with what the doctors called Inflammation of The Bladder—intense pains in back and loins, and difficulty in urinating, and the attacks, which became more frequent, amounted to unbearable agony. I became so weak that I could not walk across the floor.

My wife read in the papers about GIN PILLS and sent for a box. From the very first, I felt that GIN PILLS were doing me good. The pain was relieved at once and the attacks were less frequent.

In six weeks, the Stone in the Bladder came away. When I recall how I suffered and how now I am healthy and able to work, I cannot express myself strongly enough when I speak of what GIN PILLS have done for me." JOHN HERMAN. 48

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"It is an insane freak of fortune," he muttered, "so incomprehensible, so utterly out of focus with common events, that if I were a superstitious man, I should regard it as betokening the approach of some great epoch in my life. Surely a merciful Providence would not bring my girls here to subject them to the lingering torture of hunger and thirst. I must not think of it further. That way lies madness."

There was at least one other troubled soul on the rock which divined some sinister portent in the storm. Mrs. Vansittart, even at this moment, was staring into the black void with questioning eyes.

He resolutely threw back his head as if he would hurl into outer darkness the gibbering phantom, which whispered these words of foreboding. Although the lamp needed no attention just then, he climbed to the trimming stage merely to find relief in mechanical action. He carefully examined the adjustment, and, to judge how the weather was shaping, went out into the gallery to look at the distant lights.

The three quick flashes of the Seven Stones Lightship were very clear. That was a good sign. The wind came from that quarter and, blustering though it was, driving gigantic waves before it into the loud embrace of the reef, it maintained the good promise of the last few hours.

Seeking the comparative shelter of the east side, he gazed steadily at the Liazrd. Its two fixed electric beams, nearly in line with the Gulf Rock, were dull and watery. A local squall of rain was sweeping down from the land. Changeable, threatening, unsettled—the meteorologists might apply any of these terms to the prevalent conditions.

Far out in the Channel he saw the twinkling mast-head lights of several steamers. Blow high or low, mails must travel and vessels put to sea. On such a night, at other times, he would re-enter the lighthouse with a cheery sense of its comfort and homelike aspect. Now he dreaded the brilliant interior of the service-room. Its garish aspect ill accorded with the patient misery, the useless repinings, the inebriate stupor which crouched beneath. If he and those committed to his charge were to be saved, either the sea must be stilled or another miracle of the loaves and fishes enacted.

There, alone on the gallery, amidst the din of howling wind and ceaseless plaint of the waves, he seemed to be apart, cut off from the sufferings within. He lifted his eyes to the sombre arch of the heavens. Men said the age of miracles had passed. Pray God it might not be so!

When Brand went out, the sudden rush of cold air through the little door leading to the balcony aroused Pyne.

That young gentleman was rudely awakened from a seriously vivid dream. He fancied that Constance and he were clinging to the tail of an enormous kite, which had been made to hover over the rock by a green imp seated in an absurdly small boat.

They were solemnly advised by other gnomes, imps with sparkling, toad-like eyes, to entrust themselves to this precarious means of escape, but the instant they dropped off the ledge of the gallery their weight caused the kite to swoop downwards. The resultant plunge into the ocean and Constance's farewell shriek were nothing more terrifying than the chill blast and whistle of the air current admitted by Brand. But Pyne did not want to go to sleep again. He did not like emerald-hued spirits which arranged such unpleasant escapades.

He straightened his stiff limbs and sat up.

He was about to feel in a pocket for his pipe—he experienced the worst pangs of hunger after waking in such fashion—when he saw a woman's head and shoulders emerging out of the stairway.

At first he thought it was Constance, and he wondered why she had muffled her face in the deep collar of a cloak, but the visitor paused irresolutely when her waist was on a level with the floor.

She uttered a little gasp of surprise.

"You, Charlie?" she cried. "I thought you slept in the kitchen?"

"No, Mrs. Vansittart," he said. "I am assistant-keeper and I am here most all the time with Mr. Brand. But what in the name of goodness—"

"I was restless," explained the lady hurriedly. "If I remained another minute among those women I should have screamed aloud. How peaceful you are here. Where is Mr. Brand?"

"Guess he's gone outside to squint at the weather. But come right in. I can offer you a chair. Mr. Brand wants to see you, and this is a quiet time for a chat."

"How does he know me? What did he say?"

Mrs. Vansittart pressed her left hand to her breast. With the other she kept the high collar over her mouth and cheeks. Pyne could only see her eyes, and the alarmed light that leaped into them increased his astonishment at her unexpected presence.

"It seems to me," he answered, "that if you just walk up four more steps and sit down you can ask him all those things yourself."

"Where you speaking of me to him?"

"I did happen to mention you."

"And he said he knew me?"

"No, ma'am. He said nothing of the sort. But, for mercy's sake, what mystery is there about it?"

"Mystery! None whatever. I was mistaken. I have never met him. I came now to explain that to him. Oh—"

Then a miracle did happen, a miracle of science. When the boat was yet two hundred yards away, Brand, looking out from the gallery in stony despair, suddenly behaved as one possessed of a fiend.

"Follow me!" he roared. "Come, every man!"

He rushed into the lantern. As if he wanted wings rather than limbs, he swung himself by his hands to the floor of the service-room.

Galvanized into activity, those who were with him on the ledge raced after him. They knew not what had happened. Their leader had spoken, and they obeyed.

Down, down, they pelted, taking the steep stairs with break-neck speed, until they reached the oil-room, with its thousands of gallons stored in great tanks.

Big empty tins stood there, awaiting the next visit of the tender, and Brand wrenched the cover off the nearest cistern. He scooped up a tinful of the oil.

"Bring all you can carry," he shouted, and was off again with an energy that was wonderful in a man who had endured the privations and hardships of so many hours.

They understood. Why had none of them thought of it earlier? In its cold granite depths the lighthouse carried that which had the power to subdue the roaring fury of the reef.

The first man to reach the gallery after Brand was Pyne, who chanced to be nearest to him when the hubbub arose. He found the other man flinging handfuls of the oil as far to windward as the thick fluid would travel.

So the colza fell in little patches of smooth tranquility into the void beneath, and, before Stanhope had piloted his boat half the remaining distance, the wave-currents surging about the rock ceased to toss their yellow manes so high, and the high-pitched masses of foam vanished completely.

The seamen stationed in the entrance were astonished by the rapidity of the change. In less than a minute they found they were no longer blinded by the spindrift cast by each upward rush right into the interior of the lighthouse. The two nearest to the door looked out in wonderment. What devilment was the reef hatching now, that its claws should relax their clutch on the pillar and its icy spray be withheld?

Each wave, as it struck to westward of the column, divided itself into two roaring streams which met exactly where the iron rungs ran down the wall. There was a mighty clash of the opposite forces and a further upward rearing of shattered torrents before the reunited mass fell away to give place to its successor.

Full twenty feet of the granite layers were thus submerged and exposed whenever a big comber traveled sheer over the reef.

But these straight-forward attacks were spasmodic. Often the eddies created by the rocks came tumbling pellmell from the north. Sometimes they would combine with the incoming tide, and then the water seemed to cling tenaciously to the side of the lighthouse until it rose to a great height, swamping the entrance, and dropping back with a tremendous crash. There were times when the northerly ally disdained to merge with its rival. Then it leaped into the hollow created by the receding wave, and all about the lighthouse warred a level whirlpool.

Stanhope's plan was to rush the boat in when one of these comparatively less dangerous opportunities offered. He would spring for the ladder, run up if possible, but, if caught by a vaulting breaker, lock himself with hands and feet on the iron rungs and endeavor to withstand the stifling embrace of the oncoming sea. He was an expert swimmer and diver, and he believed that by clinging limpet-like to the face of the rock, he had the requisite strength of lungs and sinews to resist one if not more of these watery avalanches.

The rope around his waist was held from the tug. The instant he made his leap, the men with him were to back water, the crew at the drag to haul for all they were worth, and consequently pull the boat clear of the next wave 'ere it broke. That is why he selected a handy craft in place of the life-boat offered to him as soon as his resolve was whispered ashore. It was on rapidity, quick judgment, the utilization of seconds, that he depended. The unwieldy bulk of the life-boat not only detracted from these all-important considerations, but made it more than probable that she would be capsized or touch the reef.

For the same reason he timed his approach on the rising tide. He could venture nearer to the lighthouse itself, and the boat could be rowed and dragged more speedily into safety. With him, too, were men who knew every inch of the Gulf Rock. He knew he could trust them to the end.

Although he had mapped out his programme to the last detail, Brand's inspiration in using the oil created a fresh and utterly unforeseen set of conditions.

Mountainous ridges still danced fantastically up and down the smooth granite slopes, but they no longer broke, and it is broken water, not tumultuously heaving seas, that an open boat must fear.

With the intuition of a born sailor, ready to seize any advantage given by human enemy or angry ocean, Stanhope decided, in the very jaws of opportunity, to abandon his original design totally, and shout to the men he saw standing in the entrance to heave to him a rope. He would have preferred the danger of the jump. He almost longed to endure the fierce struggle which must ensue before he reached those waiting hands. He thought he would have his reward in the tense joy of the fight, in bringing salvation to Enid and those with her, in seeing her sweet face again after these days and nights of vigil.

But the paramount need was to succeed. The extraordinary and, to him quite inexplicable, change in conditions which he had studied during tortured hours passed on the bridge of the Falcon or the Trinity tender, made it possible to remain longer in the vicinity of the rock than he had dared to hope. Therefore he knew it was advisable to adopt the certain means of communication of the thrown rope in preference to the uncertainty of his own power to reach and climb the ladder.

Flinging out his right arm, he motioned to the men in the lighthouse to be ready to heave a coil. The wind was the chief trouble now, but he must chance that.

"'Vast pulling," he yelled over his shoulder as a monstrous wave pranced over the reef and enveloped the column.

Up went the boat on the crest and a fearsome cavern spread before his eyes, revealing the seaweed that clung to the lowest tier of the masonry. In the same instant he caught a fleeting glimpse of a lofty billow rearing back from the rocks on the north.

Down sank the boat until the door of the lighthouse seemed to be an awful distance away. She rose again, and Stanhope stood upright, his knees wedged against the wooden ribs. One piercing glance in front and another to the right showed that the antagonism of the two volumes of water gave the expected lull.

"Pull!"

The boat shot onward. Once, twice, three times, the oars dipped with precision. These rowers, who went with their backs turned to what might be instant death, were brave and stanch as he who looked it unflinchingly in the face.

The rope whirred through the air, the boat rose still higher to meet it, and the coil struck Stanhope in the face, lashing him savagely in the final spite of the baffled gale which puny man had conquered.

"Back!" he cried, and the oarsmen, not knowing what had happened, bent against the tough blades. The tug's sailors at the drag, though the engines grinding at half-speed were keeping them grandly against the race not more than a hundred and fifty yards in the rear, failed for an instant to understand what was going on. But their captain had seen the cast and read its significance.

"Haul away!" he bellowed in a voice of thunder, and, to cheer them on, added other words which showed that he was no landsman.

"Thank God!" he said, and he looked up at the great pillar already growing less in the distance.

Now, from the kitchen, owing to its height above sea level and the thickness of the wall pierced by the window, as soon as the boat came within fifty yards or so of the lighthouse, the girls could see it no longer.

When it dropped out of sight for the last time Constance could not endure the strain. Though her dry tongue clicked in her mouth she forced a despairing cry.

"Enid," she screamed, "lean out through the window. It is your place."

"I cannot! Indeed, I cannot! He will be killed! Oh, save him, kind Providence, and take my life in his stead!"

Constance lifted the frenzied girl in her strong arms. This was no moment for puling fear.

"If I loved a man," she cried, "and he were about to die for my sake, I should count it a glory to see him die."

The brave words gave Enid some measure of comprehension. Yes, that was it. She would watch her lover whilst he faced death, even though her heart stopped beating when the end came.

Helped by her sister, she opened the window and thrust her head out. To her half-dazed brain came the consciousness that the sea had lost its venom. She saw the boat come on, pause leap forward, the rope thrown and the knot made.

As the boat retreated she caught Stanhope's joyous glance. He saw her, and waved his hand. Something he said caused the two rowers, for the first time, to give one quick glance backward, for they were now scudding rapidly away from the danger zone. She knew them; she managed to send a frantic recognition of all three.

Then, in almost overpowering reaction, she drew back from the window and tears of divine relief streamed from her eyes.

"Constance," she sobbed, "he has saved us! Look out. You will see him. I cannot."

Yet, all tremulous and breathless, she brushed away the tears and strove to distinguish the boat once more. It appeared, a vague blot in the mist that enshrouded her.

"Connie," she said again, "tell me that all is well."

"Yes, dear. Indeed, indeed, he is safe."

"And do you know who came with him? I saw their faces—Ben Pollard and Jim Spence—in the Daisy. Yes, it is true. And Jack planned it with them. They have escaped; and we, too, will be rescued. It is God's own doing. I could thank him on my knees for the rest of my life."

Many Famous Train Robberies Recalled

Just as it had been thought that train robbery had become a lost art on this continent, lo, and behold masked bandits hold up a limited train in Utah and loot the possengers in the good old-fashioned way of the station about nine miles west of Og Daltons and the James boys.

The hold-up took place at a small den. Two masked bandits boarded the train and in the promiscuous shooting that ensued one Pullman porter was killed and another porter and a passenger were seriously wounded. Then the bandits went through the Pullman coaches and relieved the passengers of their money and valuables. According to reports they made a rich haul.

Train robbery used to be a profitable industry in the Western States. The James Boys—Jesse and Frank—and the Younger brothers—Cole and Bob—were the first to adopt the profession and they soon became adept in the art of holding up trains, dynamiting express cars and looting passenger coaches. They worked principally in Missouri and Kansas and made some extraordinary hauls. When things became too warm for them in Missouri and Kansas, they would operate in Indian territory and the pan handle of Texas. So successful were these James boys and the Youngers that many imitators sprang up. Among the boldest and most successful of these imitators were the Daltons. Their principle stamping ground was Oklahoma and the Indian Territory; but they would often make excursions into New Mexico and Utah, and at one time they did a profitable business among the railroads of California. Along the northern lines the most desperate train robbers belonged to what was known as the 'Hole in the Wall' gang. This organization was composed of more than a secre of outlaws, desperados and 'bad men' generally, among them the notoricus "Butch" Cassidy, the late Harry Tracy, Jim Cannon and Tom Horn. These men were cattle rustlers, high way men and train robbers. They were as desperate as the James boys and they would shoot down men and women as wantonly as they would a recalcitrant steer. They operated the Dakotas, in Wyoming, Montana, and occasionally pushed as far west as Utah and Washington. But an end must come to all things. The James boys and the Youngers made their fateful raid on the bank at Northfield, Minn., and their organization was wiped out of existence. The Dalton gang was almost exterminated in the raid on Coffeyville, Kan., and the Hole-in-the-Wall gang were either killed or captured. In the last decade train robbery has declined as a profession. Of course, trains have been held up but the work, as a rule, has been done by amateurs. The robbery of the Southern Pacifice train near Ogden last week was done in the old manner; but there is not much chance that the robbers will escape. The railways to-day do not trifle with men who interfere with their business. They never let up on the search. Therefore train robbery has become the most hazardous profession in the West.

UTICA, N.Y., Jan. 14.—John Weigel, 50, a mill operative, in city court this afternoon was complainant against two New York vaudeville actresses, who helped him drink nearly $1,100 worth of domestic champagne in a two-day booze jubilee. The girls whose arrests Weigel caused are Daisy Barrone and May Carter, and they were charegd with working a flim-flam game on him and relieving him of $500 of the $1,03 he had in his pocket. The girls denied the charge and said that Weigel spent all but 40 cents of his $1,073 for drinks. The 40 cents Weigel found in his pockets when he awoke from a sleep which, he insists, was brought about by drugging.

The scene of Weigel's costly experience is a concert and dance hall, and when he entered the place last Wednesday night he had $87 in his clothes. He was charged more than $100 for drinks for the girls that evening. He borrowed $25 from the proprietor, putting up his watch as security. Weigel went to the bank Thursday forenoon, drew out all his savings, and hurried back to the concert hall, and remained there until last night, when he found himself with only 40 cents.

"I wrapped $500 in a handkerchief and put it in my inside pocket," Weigel swore. "I intended to put that in another bank. We drank cocktails, wine, whiskey and beer. The drinks were $10 a round. The waiter would take the glasses and bottles off the table before we touched the drinks, carry them out of the room, come back with more drinks, and collect $10 from me again.

"I bought May a bracelet. I paid $15 towards it and she added $10. Daisy complained that I was showing favoritism and I gave her $20 to keep her in good humor. Before I left there they told me I had bought Daisy a trunk, too. I don't remember about that. They probably sold it to me when I was asleep."

Samuel Gutstadt, proprietor of the place, swore that Weigel ordered nearly 400 pints of wine for the girls in two days, though Weigel himself drank mostly beer. Gutstadt accused the complainant of welching after trying to be a live sport.

City Magistrate O'Connor discharged the girls on the grand larceny charge, but held them in $1,000 bail each as witnesses before the grand ury, which will make an investigation of the case.

"It is preposterous to assume that this man could spend more than $1,000 in this resort in two days," said the court. "Why, he could not do that in the Waldorf-Astoria in New York."

Stomach Troubles

Cured by Vinol—Here is Proof.

Seymour, Ind.—"I was troubled with a chronic stomach trouble and five weeks ago it got so bad I had to give up work. I had tried various medicines without relie —fdnaswavb medicines without relief—and was finally induced to try Vinol. After taking the first bottle I was greatly benefitted. Am now on the third bottle and ready to resume work. Are rapidly gaining in weight and strength." Edward Nieman. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

It is the curative medicinal elements of the cods' livers, combined with the strengthening properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in restoring perfect digestion and at the same time it builds up the tired, overworked and run-down system.

Brute.

"Are you fond of children?"

"Children?"

"Yes."

"I am, in a way."

"How is that?"

"Same as I am of dogs—I like to see them, but don't care to own them."

The Defeated.

Hurrah for the victor who captures the prize,
Whose palms with the silver is crossed!
But in your rejoicing reserve a few sighs
And sobs for the fellow who lost.
The winner without your indorsement can live,
The world with a smile he may face,
But who consolation large hearted will give

The hero, resplendent, has plenty of friends
To slip him a coin or a cheer,
And it is a favor if he but unbends
To listen to those who are near.
The poor, sorry dub with the bruises and bumps
Who wasn't ace high in the scrap
May still have a heart that with tenderness thumps
And be a most likable chap.

The victor feels hardly the need of the fawns
Around him so friendly and thick.
He listens with much inattention and yawns,
For he his companions can pick.
The one who went down in the heat of the fray
Finds little enough friendly talk
And no one to toss him a single bouquet,
Though once he was cock of the walk.

Then come to the front for the man who is down,
Who cannot a favor bestow.
And hail him as all of the show.
It cannot be said that for money you wait
On him who is laid on the shelf,
And who can assure you that sooner or late
You may not be down there yourself?

ULCERS AND SORES

Cannot Resist Zam-Buk's Healing Power.

An illustration of the way in which Zam-Buk cures even the most serious and chronic cases of ulcers, eruptions and sores is provided by Mr. R. H. Barker, of Glencairn, Ont. He says:

"I would not have believed that any remedy could cure so quickly, and at the same time so effectively, as Zam-Buk cured me.

"My face began to be covered with a kind of a rash, which itched and irritated. This rash then turned to sores, which discharged freely and began to spread. I first tried one thing and then another, but nothing seemed to do me any good, and the eruption got worse and worse, until my face was just covered with running sores.

"Apart from the pain (which was very bad,) my face was such a terrible sight that I was not fit to go out. This was my state when some one advised me to try Zam-Buk. I got a supply, and, marvellous as it may seem, within a little under a month every sore on my face was healed. I was so amazed that I have told the facts to several persons, and I have no objection to your stating my experience for the benefit of other sufferers."

Zam-Buk is purely herbal in composition, and is the ideal balm for babies and young children for whose tender skin coarse ointments are so dangerous. Zam-Buk is a sure cure for cold sores, chapped hands, frost bite, blood poison, varicose sores, piles, scalp sores, ringworm, inflamed patches, babies' eruptions and chapped places, cuts, burns, bruises and skin injuries generally. All druggists and stores sell at 50c. box, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price.

A MATRIMONIAL BUREAU

Its First Case and the Way the Bill Was Paid

By ESTHER ALDERSHAW

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The doorbell rang sharply, and Evalina dropped the rolling pin and opened the side door.

A man stood in the porch, his hat in hand—a good looking man of forty, perhaps, with a nice smile and a well shaped head. Evalina liked a man to have a well shaped head, and she rather liked the looks of this man. When he spoke she liked the deep mellow tones of his voice.

"I am looking for Miss Ward," he said pleasantly. "Is she at home?"

"I am Miss Ward," acknowledged Evalina, smiling.

"I was told Miss Ward could supply me with some homemade bread."

"I have wheat, rye and graham." Evalina opened a glass case that rested on a side table and from its depths drew forth a crisp golden loaf.

"I'll take one of each," he declared.

Just then there came a querulous voice from a room beyond the kitchen.

"Evalina, who are you talking to? You ain't got any beaus out there, have you?"

The girl flushed brightly, and a strange air of reserve settled over her lovely face. "It is my Great-aunt Harriet. She is very old and somewhat peculiar. I hope you will not mind what she said."

The man let himself out the door while Evalina hastened to the side of bedridden Aunt Harriet.

"What you going to give me for supper?" With Evalina's help she sat up while the girl brushed back her scanty gray locks and straightened the bedclothes.

"Creamed toast and peaches, some of my fresh jumbles and a cup of tea."

"Sounds dreadful good, Evalina. I expect I'm mighty cross to you sometimes. You've got the patience of an angel, for you ain't never cross." Aunt Harriet stretched forth a bony hand and caressed the girl's bright hair.

Evalina bent and kissed her softly. "Too bad I can't be nice to you, Aunt Harriet. You're all I've got in the world."

"I'm a poor critter," lamented Aunt Harriet—"not worth my salt. You're killing yourself baking and brewing there to make a living for us both. I wish you'd get married, Evalina."

"Maybe I shall marry a millionaire," laughed Evalina as she went busily to and fro. "You would like that, aunt, for I shouldn't do any more baking. Wouldn't that be perfectly lovely? You might ride in an automobile. How would you like that?"

"I wouldn't like it a mite," said Aunt Harriet grimly. "I'd say to the driver, 'You can take me right up to the graveyard now; I'm bound to get there if I go riding in an automobile,' and so if there was an accident I'd be right handy to the Ward plot. There, Evalina, that supper does smell real tasty. It's a shame you don't get married. You are a splendid cook, and some good man would appreciate you."

"Aunt Harriet, I believe you might operate a matrimonial bureau, only please don't practice on me. I'm too busy to get married."

Evalina hurried away to attend to her baking, which by a series of accidents had been delayed until the late afternoon. As she bustled to and fro, putting things to rights, clearing away the disorder of flour and other ingredients, she passed a small mirror hanging on the wall.

"Dear me!" murmured Evalina. "I wonder if that smudge of flour was on my forehead when he was in here. I hope not."

"Evalina, do come and set me right!" called the old lady. "I've eat my supper and spilled the tea, and I want to go to sleep."

When Evalina had cleared away the supper things and Aunt Harriet had been tucked under the covers Evalina sat a long time over her own meal with soft brown eyes dreamily fixed on the glowing square of the stove door.

Every day thereafter the strange man called at Evalina's house and bought some product of her baking. One day several weeks after the stranger's first visit Aunt Harriet was left alone in the house while Evalina went to a nearby town to order supplies. Late in the afternoon there came a knock at the sitting room door.

"Who is it?" demanded Aunt Harriet shrilly.

"I would like some bread, please," came the meek voice of the stranger.

"The key's under the mat," called Aunt Harriet eagerly. "Come right in."

When the door had opened and closed and she knew the stranger was in the sitting room Aunt Harriet called again: "Evalina's gone to the store. If you want bread you can take it from the case and leave the money on the table. Be you Tom Taylor?"

"No, I'm not Mr. Taylor. I merely called for some bread. I'll help myself with your permission," came the genial tones in reply.

"Will you please come here a moment?" Aunt Harriet spoke rather timidly for a woman of her forcible character.

"Certainly, if you wish." In an instant he was filling the bedroom doorway and looking down at Aunt Harriet's eager old face. "What can I do for you?" he asked kindly.

"I wanted to see you. I like your voice," said Aunt Harriet, with sudden decision. "What did you say your name was?" she asked shrewdly.

The stranger smiled broadly. "I didn't say, but I am Dr. Massen, the new physician in town."

"Dr. Massen," repeated Aunt Harriet slowly, as if she enjoyed the sound of the words. "Are you married, young man?"

"No, I am not," he laughed lightly.

"Drink?" asked Aunt Harriet briskly.

"Never."

"Smoke?"

"Yes, and enjoy it too."

"Chew?" she asked.

"Lord, no!" he laughed again. "And I don't believe I use swear words either."

"Yes, you do. You just said one," contradicted the old woman dryly. "But never mind; you'll do."

"Thank you for saying so. And now may I have my bread?"

"You better wait till Evalina comes," suggested Aunt Harriet agreeably. "You can sit right down in the other room. There's likely to be Sunday school papers on the table. You can read till Evalina comes. She'll be along in a moment."

"Very well," said Dr. Massen, obeying her suggestion with suspicious promptitude.

Thereupon followed a conversation that would better be called an inquisition. There was no question concerning the life of John Massen that Aunt Harriet did not ask. His past was laid bare for Aunt Harriet's inspection, and then she in turn told the simple story of Evalina's self sacrificing life. "All for an old woman that isn't worth her salt," she said tearfully.

"Nonsense!" said the doctor cheerily. "I know Miss Ward enjoys doing it for you."

"If I was to die she'd be all alone," said Aunt Harriet wistfully. "I wish she'd get married."

Dr. Massen was silent for several moments. "Perhaps she will some day," he said, with some constraint.

"Aunt Harriet!" Evalina's voice came indignantly from the doorway. "Why are you speaking of me in such a manner to a stranger. How may I serve you, sir?"

Dr. Massen, looking down at her, marveled at her great anger. She looked like some little fluffy ruffled bird, a little bright hued bird whose domain has been invaded by some marauding dog or cat.

"I came for bread," he said meekly. "I hope you have some to spare."

"I believe there is none left," said Evalina loftily, and then she blushed painfully while he bowed low and left the room.

Evalina walked into the bedroom and, throwing herself down into a chair beside the bed, burst into tears. "Aunt Evalina, how could you?" she sobbed bitterly. "You have mortified me so."

"I was only starting my matermonial bureau, Evalina. You won't do nothing yourself about getting married, and you can't bake all your life. There ain't no need to take on so; he was real pleasant about the matter."

"Pleasant!" wailed Evalina. "Oh, Aunt Harriet, why did you pick him out? If it had only been somebody else! I'll never dare look him in the face again!"

Aunt Harriet turned her face to the wall and smiled wisely. "I can't say I'm sorry, Evalina, but I won't say any such things again, I promise."

Two weeks afterward Aunt Harriet Ward suffered one of her periodical "poor spells," and old Dr. Lake was sent for in great haste. But Dr. Lake was himself a prisoner, tied to the house with inflammatory rheumatism, so it happened that the tall form of Dr. Massen darkened Evalina's doorway once more.

She did not look at him, but led the way directly to Aunt Harriet's side. She stood apart and reluctantly confessed to herself that his skill was far superior to that of the old doctor. His terse questioning, his kindly manner, his quick diagnosis of Aunt Harriet's baffling case, opened a world of encouragement for both women.

"Seems like I feel ten years younger, doctor," said the old woman gratefully.

"After I give you a course of electric massage you'll be running around with the best of us," he encouraged her.

"I can never repay you if you do," she said tearfully.

"You've paid me in part already, Miss Ward," he said gravely, without looking at Evalina. "Some day I'm coming to present my bill—and perhaps levy on your most precious possession."

Evalina in the next room was again an eavesdropper, but this time she was silent. Her hand rested lightly with a half caress on one of the doctor's sealskin gloves thrown on the table, and there was a deamy look in her eyes.

"I'm glad he likes spice jumbles," thought Evalina before she awoke to trembling realization of what the admission meant.

Hearing of Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, I thought they were worthy of a trial. My surprise was indeed great. From the very first I experienced relief. Continuing with them I found my troubles were slowly but surely leaving me, and before long I once more knew what it was to be free from the harassing effects of the ailments that had long sickened and weakened me. G. W. Fitzgerald, a prominent resident of this city, passed away from a third strike of paralysis. He was 59 years of age. He was widely known in this and neighboring counties, being identified with the cheese business, and having served in the Peterboro council, of which he was warden for one term.

A Significant Item.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—The fact that $3,000,000 is being included in supplementary Government estimates for deepening the back river at Montreal, Rivere des Prairies and the French River, are taken to indicate that the Government has at length decided to go ahead with the Georgian Bay Canal. The works mentioned would all be of utility in any event, but they are also on the proposed route of the canal, and in that the significant part of it lies.

The Minister of Public Work yesterday admitted the matter was under advisement, but said there was nothing definite about it.

Judge Johnston Dead.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 17.—Judge Johnston, the senior judge of the district of Algoma, died here yesterday, aged 62. He was born in Goderich, studied in the law office of the late Judge Snider of Hamilton and practiced in Goderich for twenty years with John Davidson, Q.C. In 1890 he was made junior judge for Algoma. Previously he served in Goderich as alderman, reeve, and warden of Huron, and unsuccessfully contested the riding of Huron for the Provincial House in 1882.

Mail by Aeroplane.

Washington, Jan. 17.—The United States army contemplates the installation of aeroplanes for mail carrying purposes to Alaska. It will be impossible, however, to put them into use until Congress makes an appropriation for their purchase, or increases the national amount of money set aside for the signal corps.

Postmaster Arrested.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 17.—Postmaster O'Neil of New Waterford, C.B., was arrested there yesterday and taken to Sydney to await trial. The charge against him is the theft of $7,500 from the Bank of Nova Scotia. The crown prosecutor says the case will be proceeded with to the fullest extent of the law.

Acquitted Nine.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 17.—The trial of eleven young men, charged with riotous conduct and destroying property on New Year's eve, was concluded in the Supreme Court last night, when the jury acquitted nine and disagreed as to the other two.

THE GERM WHICH PRODUCES DANDRUFF

Finally Causes Baldness—Kill the Germ and Save Your Hair. Newbro's Herpicide Will Do It.

Did you ever try to discover a reason for the dying of a valuable plant? You perhaps found that life was destroyed by some insect or parasite working about the roots, and sapping away the life.

The dandruff germ exercises the same destructive influence upon the life of the hair. It forces its way down the follicle around the hair bulb and thus prevents the hair from getting proper nourishment. The hair dies and drops out.

Newbro's Herpicide prevents this by killing the germ. It also frees the scalp from the accumulations of dirt and scarf skin. With the removal of these obstacles to a clean, healthy scalp, the hair will grow naturally and luxuriantly.

Send 10 cents in postage or silver to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich., for a nice sample of Herpicide and a booklet telling all about the hair.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

TRAVERS GETS 6 YEARS

And Dr. Beattie Nesbitt Is a Fugitive From Justice.

Two More Warrants and Four Summonses Have Been Issued In Toronto Charging Implication In the Failure of the Farmers' Bank—Detectives Are In Pursuit of Dr. Nesbitt.

Toronto, Jan. 17.—Further charges arising out of the wreck of the Farmers' Bank and the confession of guilt of its former vice-president and general manager, W. R. Travers, who was yesterday sentenced to serve six years in Kingston Penitentiary, are coming with a rush. The financial structure of that institution is tumbling like a house of cards. Yesterday four additional charges were laid, adding to the number which has not yet been made public. These are in addition to the warrant issued yesterday, charging Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, former president of the bank, with signing false returns to the Government. Two other men not named are said to be wanted by the police.

Summonses have been issued calling upon the four surviving members of the provisional board of directors to appear in the police court on Friday morning to answer to the charge of conspiring to obtain from the funds of the Farmers' Bank in 1906, the sum of $10,000, which sum, taken from the coffers of the then still to be born bank, is alleged to have been divided between them and the fifth member of the board, Gallagher, since deceased.

These summonses will be served to day upon the following gentlemen:

It is alleged that these men, on one occasion, voted to themselves $2,500 each out of the funds of the bank then in process of formation, and that Travers was forced to go out and supply the shortage in the $250,000 cash fund which was necessary to secure the charter for the bank at Ottawa, and that this was done, and other and further shortages made up by the hypothecation of notes turned in for subscriptions for bank stock, which went to make up the $500,000 in subscriptions for stock also necessary for the granting of the bank's charter.

It is said that this and other shortages then made in the fund was the initial burden laid upon Travers' shoulders, the struggle to cover up which led him further and further into the network of criminal acts which fairly led to his open downfall and disgrace.

The Bank Act provides that no one may deal with the funds of a bank in process of formation, and that not even the directors may dispense these funds until after the granting of the charter.

Fugitive from justice on at least one criminal charge bearing directly upon the wrecking of the Farmers' Bank is one more role added to the picturesque career of Dr. W. Beattie Nesbitt. He is wanted by the police upon a warrant charging him with, while president of the bank, signing false returns to the Government at Ottawa, which he, when he signed them, knew to be false. The genial doctor, used to the last word in luxury, has fled the country after spending the time since the suspension of the bank in seclusion in the wilds of Muskoka, whence he fled Saturday last, just 24 hours before Inspector of Detective Duncan came upon his hide armed with the warrant for his arrest.

This warrant and probably others charging the doctor with still further offences was sworn out by Inspector Duncan Saturday noon upon information supplied by Travers and after the conference at the bank offices Saturday morning.

The bolt has fallen upon W. R. Travers. Yesterday morning before a record crowd in the dingy police court, Police Magistrate Denison sentenced him to serve six years in Kingston Penitentiary in three terms of six, six and five years each, the sentences to run concurrently. Travers took his medicine gamely, but showed in lessened flesh and color the strain that has been upon him.

After sentence he remarked, "I am very well pleased, I did not expect a day less than ten years." He was brought up from the jail in a street car by Detective Newton and waited in the detective office until he appeared for sentence. He was kept there afterwards until six o'clock, when he was sent back to jail to await removal to Kingston. It is understood that this will not be for some days, as he will be kept here to give assistance to the curator in further unravelling the bank's affairs and to the police in their prosecution of further alleged offenders and in their search for the fugitives for whom warrants are now held or may be issued.

Urge Investigation.

Kerwood, Ont., Jan. 17.—Creditors of the Farmers' Bank packed Chittick Hall to the doors Saturday night at a meeting called to consider the situation, and a series of resolutions were passed, including one setting forth that "in view of the statements made by counsel for Mr. Travers in Toronto police court on Friday, we would respectfully urge the Attorney-General of this province to continue the investigation of the bank's affairs, in order that the associates of the general manager in the looting of this bank may be brought to justice.

Will Make Formal Demand.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—A formal demand for an investigation into the circumstances surrounding the organization, operations, and failure of the Farmers 'Bank of Canada will be made in the course of a few days by Major Sam Sharpe of North Ontario.

The exact form which such an investigation should take will only be decided upon after a conference of the M.P.'s whose constituents are most seriously affected, but at present it is felt that the best mode would be by means of a royal commission, which would probe the matter to the bottom, irrespective of the party politics of any of those connected with the bank from its inception to its failure.

Will Be Represented.

Woodstock, Ont., Jan. 17.—Both the Embro and the Burgessville districts, where the bulk of the Oxford stock is held in the defunct Farmers' Bank, will be represented at the meeting of creditors in Toronto to-day. In Embro and West Zorra no meeting of shareholders and depositors has been held, but a number of those interested will go down on their own account.

Four Points Urged.

St. Thomas, Jan. 17.—Rev. George Gilmore, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Fingal, who has been appointed to represent the depositors and stockholders of the defunct Farmers' Bank from this section, at the meeting in Toronto on Tuesday, will press for investigation and prosecution of the guilty.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Sergt. George Kennedy of the Dominion police will be in charge of a detachment of six men to guard naval stores at Halifax.

The missing German balloon, Hildebrandt, and the bodies of the two aeronauts have been found in a lake in Pomerania province, Prussia.

Rumors current in London yesterday that Ambassador Bryce intended to resign as ambassador to the United States were denied at the British embassy in Washington.

The Italian battleship Roma left here yesterday for an unknown destination. It is reported the Roma has been despatched to Lisbon, because of the situation there.

Companies Arrange With Hungary.

Budapest, Hungary, Jan. 17.—An arrangement to regulate emigrant traffic to America and to do away with some of the abuses now existing, has been concluded between the Hungarian Government and the Hamburg-American, North German Lloyd, Holland-American, Red Star and the French Line steamship companies.

The companies agree to close the private agencies maintained throughout the country, which have at times been charged with holding out spurious inducements to immigrants, and transact their business through the general offices at Budapest and the frontier stations. They also bind themselves to restrict the business of Hungary to Hungarians, thus shutting out large numbers of Russians and other Slavs who heretofore have utilized this route.

The steamship people further contract to undertake an arrangement with the Cunard Line, which is now carrying emigrants from Fiume, that will obviate the possibility of a rate war.

Law Unconstitutional.

New York, Jan. 17.—The Callan automobile law which provides that a person who runs down another with an automobile must stop and give his name and address, is unconstitutional, according to a ruling of Justice Crain made yesterday afternoon in dismissing the indictment against Edward T. Rosenheim, the young millionaire, who was charged with speeding away after he ran down and killed Miss Grace Hough on the night of Aug. 18 last. Rosenheim was tried and acquitted on a charge of murder but was promptly indicted again under the Callan law.

In his opinion, Justic Crain declares that this law is in violation of an articles of the state constitution, commonly called the "Bill of Rights," which provides among other things "that no person shall be compelled to be a witness against himself in any criminal case."

Invalidity Insurance.

New York, Jan. 17.—A special cable to The Tribune yesterday says: It is doubtful whether the British nation has yet recognized the vast importance of the Government's scheme of invalidity insurance. Before many weeks are over it is likely, says The Daily News, to be the chief subject of criticism and discussion through the country.

This is entirely separate from the system of old age pensions. Five shillings a week will still be granted on a non-contributory basis to qualified persons over the age of 70, and there will be no overlapping contributions to invalidity insurance, which will begin at an age not lower than 16 and not higher than 18.

Rebuilding Messina.

Messina, Jan. 17.—The rebuilding of Messina in durable masonry was inaugurated yesterday, when the corner-stone of the group of public buildings to be erected by the municipality was laid by Signor Sacchi, Minister of Public Works; Signor Ciufelli, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and other members of the Government.

PUTTING UP A SCHEME

Government and Verville Juggle Eight-Hour Bill.

By a Process of Amendments, Scope of Measure Is Steadily Cut Down—Bill Gets Its Second Reading and Pugsley Gets It Applied to Day Labor Jobs—Other Bills Are Dealt With.

Ottawa, Jan. 17—The eight-hour bill, introduced by Alphonse Verville (Maisonneuve) had another troublesome time in the committee stage in the House of Commons yesterday afternoon. Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King made several attempts to explain away the obvious change in the principle of the bill, brought about by the amendments suggested by Mr. Verville. Finally the Opposition succeeded in having the Minister of Labor declare himself as opposed to the original bill, although a moment before he had accused the attitude of the Opposition as being the cause of the amendment.

Mr. Borden, however, pointed out that when these accepted the principle of the bill on the second reading, the Prime Minister intimated that certain amendments would be brought down in the committee stage. The mover of the bill was unable to say how many resolutions had been received supporting either the original or amended measure, but Mr. King finally admitted that the Dominion Trades and Labor Council had expressed a preference for the original, rather than the amended bill.

The chief objection to the amendments, A. C. Macdonnel (S. Toronto) pointed out was that, by the introduction of a number of exceptions, the bill would accomplish no more, excepting the proposed penalty of $200, than could be done by order-in-council. The wording of the clause that no man would be "required" to work more than eight hours a day provided a loophole for contractors.

Hon. Mackenzie King thought that the clause was not binding, and asked if the clause was changed that a man should not be permitted to work more than eight hours, if it would prevent him, after that amount of time had been served, from taking up any other work.

A. S. Goodeve (Kootenay) declared that the Government should declare its intention with regard to the amendments, and ascertain the opinion of labor bodies and those interested.

In reply to Major Currie (N. Simcoe) as to who on the Government side was responsible for the bill, Sir Wilfrid turned the question by saying that Mr. Verville introduced his amendments in order to insure the passage of the measure through the House in a moderate form. He thought the bill, as first introduced, would not be acceptable to the Opposition.

Mr. Borden claimed that the bill was virtually a Government measure, although they did not want to be responsible for it. Amendments were promised at the time of the second reading, and the subsequent discussion indicated the Government was well aware of the nature of the amendment and restriction. He challenged the Government to withdraw the amendments, and test the opinion of the House on the first question.

Claude Macdonnel said it was difficult to say whether or not the bill was being simply put forward to secure a party advantage, with no serious objections behind it.

Mr. Lancaster declared the Minister of Labor and Mr. Verville were playing a game upon the House. After the House had unanimously committed itself to the bill, the Minister now said he was not in favor of the bill, for which he had voted on the second reading, and supported the amended bill, which cut the whole thing down to public buildings and not public works.

Mr. Goodeve remarked that the original bill had been approved by the labor unions, and they had no right to amend it without sending it back to the unions. Take as an example the insurance bill. In this case the companies had been asked for their opinion. He declared himself in favor of the original bill, as did Mr. Rhodes of Cumberland.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that no doubt the labor unions would prefer the original bill, but the free Canadian people were not composed of labor unions only.

Mr. Macdonnel argued that a contractor, by the bill, might refuse to employ men who would not work more than eight hours a day.

Hon. H. R. Emmerson favored the original bill, and was opposed to the amendments because they discriminated.

An amendment by Mr. Macdonnel to pay overtime, time and a half, and on Sundays and holidays double time, was voted down. Later, however, the payment of time and a half for overtime was submitted for time and a quarter, as in the bill.

Then Mr. Pugsley moved another amendment, making the bill apply to all public buildings undertaken by the Government by day labor. This was accepted, and the bill now stands for third reading.

The chief interest at the opening of the House yesterday was a motion by H. B. Ames of Montreal, for correspondence, etc., between the liquidators of the Charing Cross Bank and any member or official of the Government in respect to the affairs of Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, the Quebec Oriental Railway and the New Canadian Co., Ltd.

When the motion was reached, Sir Wilfrid said: "If my honorable friend (Mr. Ames) were present, I would tell him there was no such correspondence at all, but in his absence I will let the motion go."

The first bill to receive a third reading this session was H. H. Miller's bill to amend the Interest Act. It was allowed to pass the final stage without discussion.

Second readings were given to several railway and other bills, which were referred to the various select committees for consideration. Amongst these was Major Beattie's bill respecting the McClary Manufacturing Co.

The great growth of the fisheries industry of the Canadian Maritime Provinces during the last forty years is shown by a return which was tabled in the Commons yesterday. The value of the catch by Canadian fishermen in 1909-10 was $11,887,899. In 1870 the total catch was $3,295,702. There has been less increase in the catch of cod than in any other class of fish. There is not very much more cod taken today than there was forty years ago.

In 1870, the catch was in detail: Cod, $2,258,903; haddock, hake and pollock, $97,077; halibut, $3,528; mackerel, $92,213; herring, $252,481; lobsters, $591,500. Total, $3,295,702.

In the twelve months of 1909-10 the catch was: Cod, $3,896,738; haddock, $829,553; hake, $338,244; pollock, $325,533; halibut, $155,161; mackerel, $948,071; herring, $1,037,453; lobsters, canned, $2,721,478; lobsters in shell, $935,668. Total, $11,887,899.

Lobsters were a poor catch last year. Oysters were not included in the return.

MAKING PROGRESS.

Trade Treaty With U. S. May Soon Be Announced.

Washington, Jan. 17.—The trade negotiations between Canada and the United States are rapidly nearing a conclusion. They were advanced a further stage yesterday in a three-hour conference, attended by Hon. Messrs. Fielding and Paterson, Secretary of State Knox and their respective assistants. It is evident to observers that progress is being made toward an amicable arrangement; in fact, there is no doubt that events are shaping toward the early announcement of a treaty. The Cabinet meeting to-day will give the negotiators a day off and time to consult higher authorities, and another meeting will be held on Wednesday morning to receive reports and make up for lost time. The calling of a forenoon sitting indicates a desire to push the work as rapidly as possible, and it also shows that both sides have their way well cleared and know whither they are steering.

There is naturally anxiety on the part of the U. S. Cabinet to get the subject before Congress soon. The present session must close six weeks hence, on March 3, and there is a lot of business to be done before the Republicans lay down their control of the House of Representatives. A third of the Senators must also go, and the new members might do more bodily harm to President Taft's freer trade child than the reactionaries of his own party. The Senate devoted some time yesterday to discussing how they can finish all the business that remains. It developed that one whole week out of the six will be devoted to paying tributes to deceased Senators. There are six names entitled to this honor, and each one under the custom has a day set apart.

Electric Smelter Near Ottawa.

Ottawa, Jan. 17—American and English capital has been interested in the establishment of an electric smelting plant at Chats' Falls, on the Ottawa River, about 20 miles west of Ottawa, and active work preparatory to the erection of the plant will begin early in the spring. The surrounding country on the Quebec side is rich in iron ore, the only difficulty being that of transportation. It is proposed to build an electric line from the falls to the mines. There is an enormous amount of water power awaiting development at Chats' Falls, and the spot is looked upon as almost ideal for electric smelting purposes.

Oh, Joseph!

Winnipeg, Jan. 17.—Hon. Joseph Martin, M.P. for East St. Prancras, in the Imperial Parliament, said in an interview here yesterday.

"In my opinion, Mr. Asquith is the poorest Parliamentary leader imaginable, except Mr. Balfour. Five-sixths of the present Liberal party consists of Radicals, and we are shedding Whigs at every election. While Mr. Asquith remains leader, he is still further away from the Radical point of view than he is from Mr. Balfour."

A Copper In His Throat.

Kingston, Jan. 17.—Gerald Leakey of Gananoque swallowed a cent, which stuck in his throat, and notwithstanding the efforts of the medical men in that town, could not be extracted. He was brought to the General Hospital here and the X-rays put on his neck, while one of the staff used a pair of forceps and got a grip on the copper. After the money had been secured the boy was able to go home.

To Protect British Interests.

Kingston, Jamaica, Jan. 17.—The British protected cruiser Brilliant sailed yesterday from this port on hurry orders for Honduras. The Brilliant only recently returned here from Honduras waters, but the latest reports regarding the seriousness of the revolt made the presence of a British warship necessary for the protection of British interests in that republic.

Prominent Labor Man Dead.

Galt, Jan. 17.—John Wilson dropped dead at two minutes to seven yesterday morning in the moulding shop of the Goldie & McCullough Co.'s south works. He was prominent in the moulders' union here, holding the office of treasurer at the time of his death, and was president for several years.

The Agent Resigned.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—James O. Lewis, for many years Indian agent at Selkirk, has resigned. He was criticized last session in connection with the sale of the St. Peter's Indian reserve, though not directly accused of wrong doing. It is said his resignation is for personal reasons.

Died From Loss of Tongue.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—C. Beaudin, aged 33, of Hull, is dead as the result of having cut off part of his tongue. He was walking and slipped, and fell face forward, striking his chin on the icy pavement.

MAY TUNNEL MOUNTAIN

Mammoth Project of C.N.R. Is Rumored in Ottawa.

It Is Said That In View of Their Difficulty of Securing a Surface Entrance Into Montreal, Mackenzie and Mann Are Considering Digging a Huge Underground Route to the Heart of the City.

Ottawa, Jan. 17.—Railway men in the city yesterday were discussing a mammoth scheme for entrance into the heart of Montreal by the C.N.R. It is stated as a fact that the Canadian Northern has now under contemplation a proposal to tunnel right through from the back of Mount Royal at Sault de Recollet, all the way below the mountain and down below the streets of the city to the Old Hope Coffee House on Craig street, where the terminus will be.

When doubts were expressed as to the feasibility of such a mammoth scheme, if only from the point of view of expense, it was stated that the C.N.R. had been unable to effect an entrance to Montreal on the level, and, even if they could do so, the expense would be so enormous as to make the vast project of tunnelling to the heart of the city comparatively inexpensive.

Arrests Expected.

Berlin, Jan. 17.—Detectives Boyd and Huber are back in Berlin working on the Lobinski murder case, and, although they are close-mouthed there is a general belief that they are working on clues that will result in arrests. They investigated the story of a Baden man having got money from Lobinski after getting him drunk, but no arrests was made.

In searching the two barns on the Lobinski property the police yesterday found cans containing silver coins, one can in the hayloft of each barn. The amount of silver totals about $80. After the post-mortem in Wellesley, it was decided to forward the stomach to Toronto for examination, also the bottle containing a fluid mixed with Paris green.

Senator Lodge Nominated.

Boston, Jan. 17.—United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge was nominated at the Republican caucus yesterday for a fourth term by 125 out of 153 Republican members of the Legislature, or 16 less than a majority of the House and Senate on joint ballot. As the absentees were nearly all from the House, it is anticipated that the majority of the Senate's votes will be cast for Mr. Lodge to-day, but that the House will be deadlocked. Whether his deadlock will continue to the joint convention on Wednesday was a matter of interesting conjecture last night. While it was generally admitted that should Mr. Lodge be returned, he would have to seek some Democratic support.

My sixth is in church, but not in pew;
My seventh is in old, but not in new;
My eighth you have had in my five and my two;
My ninth is in hunter, but not in setter;
My tenth is the same as my very first letter;

And they hear it much talked of at this time of year.

BELLEVILLE JUNIOR HOCKEYISTS HAD A HARD GAME WITH PICTON

At the Arena last night an O. H. A. match took place between the Belleville and Picton Juniors. It was by no means gilt-edged hockey, in fact both teams have been known to have played in much better form than they did last night and that this season. While Belleville, we are pleased to record, won the game, it was by no means an easy victory. In the first half the local team had it all their own way as to scoring and had not been playing long before the location of the Pictons' net was discovered. When half time was completed the score was 5 to 0 in Belleville's favor and the general impression was that it would be a one-sided affair.

SECOND HALF.

After the usual intermission, the puck was again faced off and it was apparent that the visiting team was determined to play an aggressive game. The puck was soon carried into Belleville's territory and into the net. The first goal for the opposing team was recorded, and this seemed to encourage them greatly, and when two more goals were quickly placed to their credit they looked like possible winners. The score was now 5 to 3 in Belleville's favor and it was beginning to look as if the Pictonians might equal, if not exceed, the lead the locals had, but our boys made a rush and added another goal. In the remaining part of the game Picton found the net twice more before the bell was sounded for time. The score at the conclusion of the game was 6 to 5 in favor of Belleville. The result was naturally pleasing to the spectators, who were by no means numerous, owing no doubt to the severe cold weather. During the progress of the game no less than 17 penalties were handed out, and in this regard Belleville were the sufferers, as no less than 12 penalties were inflicted upon them as against 5 for Picton.

Mr. Lou Marsh, of Toronto, was the referee, and he was certainly upon the job all the time, not an off side apparently escaping his notice. He is one of the best referees seen here this winter.

The other officials in the game were G. Cooper, of Picton, and R. Smith, Belleville, goal umpires; H. Armstrong, penalty timekeeper; E. Boulter and Wm. Connolly, timekeepers.

Belleville—		Picton—
	—Goal—
Wardrope,		K. Cooper,
	—Point—
Marshall,		Gunter,
	—Cover point—
Tuite,		Hudgins,
	—Centre—
Wallace,		Hare,
	—Rover—
E. Moore,		Heffernan,
	—Right wing—
Connolly,		Snider,
	—Left wing—
A. Moore,		C. Cooper

NOTES OF THE GAME.

The Picton boys certainly made a great finish. They will be much stronger next year.

The Belleville boys played strongly, but they incurred too many penalties. In the first half they had 6 to Picton's 2 and in the second half 6 to Picton's 3.

The attendance was very small, but it was an exceedingly cold night and Belleville has had a great deal of hockey this winter.

HOCKEY NOTES.

• •

• •

The likely winner of the Intermediate series in this group is Trenton with Cobourg or Belleville as the runner-up.

CURLING.

At the curling rink last evening a match took place, the first of the season for the Colts' bonspiel between rinks skipped by Messrs. W. B. Riggs and W. H. Hudson. The latter rink won easily by a score of 11 to 4. The players were:—

C. Elliott,	J. G. Lindsay,
E. Vermilyea,	F. Thompson,
G. de Pencier,	R. H. Ketcheson,
W. H. Hudson,	W. B. Riggs,

BILLIARDS.

George Gray, the 18 year old boy from Australia, has been astonishing the experts in English billiards. Since his arrival in England a few weeks ago he has made two runs of 1,143 each and four runs of over 1,000. This is all the more wonderful considering that the spot stroke and cradle nurse are barred. Gray's runs have been almost entirely made up of losing hazards off the red, and he plays with composition balls.

A PRESENTATION IN HUNTINGDON

As Mr. Henry Blakely, jr., has disposed of his farm and is about to start in business in Thomasburg, about one hundred of his friends and neighbors gathered at his home on Friday to ejnoy a social evening and to bid them good-bye.

Mr. R. S. Woods acted as chairman of the occasion, and Miss Frankie Sullivan read the address. Mrs. Blakely was then presented with a handsome dresser, Mr. Blakely a Morris chair, and Miss Annie Fisher, niece of Mr. Blakely, a valuable gold bracelet. The presentations were made by Messrs. Wesley Wickens and Thomas Sullivan.

Mr. Blakely replied in a few well-chosen words, thanking their friends and neighbors for their kindness. Short speeches were made by Messrs. W. Wickens, Thos. Sullivan, A. Kilpatrick, J. Fox, John Downey and others, including the ladies.

During the evening refreshments were served by the ladies, after which the time was spent in games, music and singing. The party dispersed by singing "God be with you till we meet again."

PLEASANT SURPRISE AND PRESENTATION

The home of Mr. and Mrs. G. Hough, of Foxboro, was the scene of a very pleasant event when, on Friday evening, Jan. 13, about fifty of their many friends availed themselves of the opportunity to bid Mr. and Mrs. Hough farewell and wish them Godspeed to their new home in the neighboring county.

Mr. and Mrs. Hough have lived and worked in this locality for fourteen years, and, by their many acts of kindness and carefulness along business lines, have gained for themselves a wide circle of friends, who will not soon forget them.

After a pleasant time spent in conversation and exchanging bright ideas, the assembly was called to order and Mr. R. Campbell appointed as chairman for the occasion.

An address was then read by Mr. C. Millar, in which the feelings of the friends and patrons of the factory were nicely expressed, and the presentation of two very nice upholstered oak chairs and a beautiful black Persian lamb cap was made.

Mrs. Hough made a feeling reply in which she thanked the people very sincerely for their kindness. After singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow," many expressed their regrets in losing Mr. and Mrs. Hough from our midst and wishing them much prosperity in their new field of labor.

Lunch was then served, and after singing "God Be With You Till We Meet Again," the party dispersed.

RUSSIAN FURS VERY CHEAP

PARIS, Jan. 16.—Pleasant news for the ladies is contained in a report from the French consul at St. Petersburg to the effect that the hunting returns for the last few months in Siberia promise a reduction in the price of furs. Common foxes, ermines martens, and whit foxes are abundant. Squirrels are scarcer than in 1909.

Ermine, which was quoted at the beginning of winter at 2.75 rubles has fallen to 1.25 rubles, compared with 2.90 and 3 rubles in 1909. Marten was quoted at 13 rubles, compared with 19 rubles the previous year, and whit fox at 15 rubles as against 25 and 30 rubles in 1909.

Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

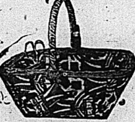
For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

The New Collar Pins.

It may be surprising to hear that Dutch collar pins have gone. It is only the name, however, that has passed. Pierrot pins have taken their place. The fan shaped Pierrot pin has the advantage of following the lines of the frock where it meets the throat. Bar pins are in the ascendency. A becoming accessory to be worn with Pierrot collars is a black velvet collaret with jeweled ornament.

A Present For the Housewife.

For the busy housewife nothing in the way of a present is more acceptable than a mending basket—a receptacle that is not used for general sewing, but a mending basket pure and simple. The basket illustrated is just the thing for the purpose and was designed for the Woman's Home Companion. It is made of cretonne in mingled tones of burnt orange, golden brown and gray green on a cream ground, which covers the pieces of cardboard that go to form the basket. The handle is wound, the top edge is bound, and the various straps are made of upholsterer's antique gimp. There are no pockets on the inside—nothing but a strap for the scissors.



CONVENIENT MENDING BASKET.

We often forget to buy the things we really need, but never the things that we really desire.

If we took as good care of ourselves as we'd like the boss to take care of us it would help some too.

Security.

I smile at the approaching storm,
Its coming calmly note.
I know while I am keeping warm
It will not get my goat.
So at the gnashing of its jaws
I most serenely grin
And slyly hug myself because
My winter coal is in.

I do not fear its chilly breeze,
Its swift and sudden change,
While I am sitting at my ease
Beside by parlor range.
The weather maker may supply
The kind that haunts the pole
On chilly mornings. What care I?
My bin is full of coal.

Oh, how complacent is the man
Who has a fixed estate,
Who doesn't have to scheme and plan
Nor sit at worry's gate!
For him the roses are in bloom
Though out of doors is snow,
And there is sunshine in the room
If coal is down below.

But wait; I had not told it all.
There is a little more.
Outside I thought I heard a call.
Is some one at the door?
There always is a flaw to find
In every ruby set,
And that recalls it to my mind—
The coal's not paid for yet!

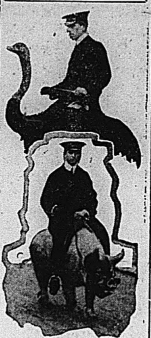
For the Children

Wild Beasts and Birds Trained to the Saddle.



How would some of our young friends like to ride on the back of an ostrich or perhaps a wild boar? Most boys and girls would prefer the ostrich no doubt because of its fleetness, but it is unlikely that they'll have a chance on either. In England, however, there is a trainer of wild animals who has taught ostriches, zebras, cassowaries, wild boars and other creatures to carry riders on their backs. His name is Wingfield, and he lives in the town of Ampthill. He is a professional and trains wild animals for circuses and menageries, and so well does he have them under control that he frequently appears in the streets of the town mounted on one of his queer steeds. The beasts are thoroughly trained to the saddle, of course, before Mr. Wingfield or his assistants venture to appear on the public streets.

Game of Warning.

One of the players, having been chosen "warner," takes his stand at the place marked off as "home," the rest remaining at a little distance from it. The warner then calls "Warning!" three times and sallies forth with his hands clasped in front of him. In this position he must try to touch one of the other players, who strive to make him unclasp them by pulling his arms, drawing temptingly near, etc. If they succeed in making him loose his clasp or if he does so by inadvertence he must run home as fast as possible.

If he is caught before reaching his place as warner he must go out in the field and the one who touched him becomes warner. If he succeeds in touching any one without unclasping his hands the captive becomes his ally, and they both run home as fast as they can. Once home they are safe, and they then start out hand in hand, after calling the three warnings, and try to capture another without loosing their hold. Every captured player is added to their ranks, but every one must be taken home first before he is admitted to a share in the fight.

The line of warners thus increasing, the difficulty of evading capture grows greater at every accession to their ranks, but it is also a source of weakness, being unwieldy, and if the hands do not hold to each other tightly a player at large may break through at any weak point in the line and escape capture.

The field of play must be within rather narrow limits, for the only chance of the pursuing party to make captures is to pen or corner the fugitives. The last player to escape being taken becomes the next warner.

A Present to Make.

A New York girl is making Christmas gifts for some of her friends that will be sure to please. They are telephone book covers of leather or heavy linen which just fit the books. The telephone book is certainly not of itself a thing of beauty, but slipped into its artistic cover, which harmonizes with the hangings of the room, it becomes quite as pleasing to the eye as it is a convenience in the day's activities.

Her New Role.

"Oh, got a speaking part at last, has she?"—Yonkers Statesman.

Woman's World

MRS. FLORENCE L. BARCLAY.

To the many women who have read with absorbed interest that delightful love story "The Rosary" it will be of interest to know that its author, Mrs. Florence L. Barclay, is a sister of Maud Ballington Booth, who also has written some charming books for children.

The author of "The Rosary" comes from an English family trained in the traditions of the very best literature, and many of its members have achieved distinction through their pen. She is the granddaughter of Mrs. Charlesworth, whose "Ministering Children" was read with such avidity when it appeared a half century ago. She is a niece of the learned Arabic scholar Professor Cowell of England, to whose persuasion it was due that Fitzgerald took up the study of Arabic. Professor Cowell rendered valuable assistance in the connection with the translation of "Omar Khayyam."

Mrs. Barclay's new novel, "The Mistress of Shenstone," is said to transcend in interest the much appreciated "Rosary" and follows out the late career of certain characters that won sympathy in the former novel.

The Woman Who Farms.

Plenty of women fail in farming because they have taken it up either too hastily or with too little capital or because they have already worn themselves out at some other vocation and have not the strength for the hard work of the farm. If a teacher finds some disadvantages in caring for fifty restless children she must not expect cutting seed potatoes to be sheer pleasure, says the Saturday Evening Post. The hen run cannot take the place of the woman's club, nor can the tomato field be regarded as a salon.

Undoubtedly those who get along best are the ones who were brought up on a farm and thus have always had the right sort of exercise for the kind of physical development most valuable to them. They have had the practical work, and they can, if necessary, do all the farming operations. There are multitudes of such women standing behind the men farmers of this country. Those who stand alone on farms of their own are to be found in the east rather than in the west. The reason is not only that land is cheaper in the east, but that men are rarer, and in the west many women who could succeed well on a farm are taking the chance of succeeding well in marriage.

CATTLE MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Jan. 16.—London cattle market lower for American cattle, 13½c to 14c, dressed weight; refrigerator beef easier, at 10½c. Liverpool cattle, 10c to 11c, in addition to offal.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Jan. 16.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 82 carloads, consisting of 1578 cattle, 91 hogs, 1229 sheep and lambs and 13 calves.

Exporters.

E. L. Woodward bought for Swift & Co. 120 steers for export, 1280 lbs. each, at an average of $6.15 per cwt., or a range of prices of $6 to $6.25 per cwt.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots of butchers sold at from $6 to $6.30, the highest point yet reached this season. Loads of good, $5.60 to $5.85; medium, $5.35 to $5.60; common, $4.90 to $5.25; cows, $3 to $5.10; canners, $2.50 to $2.75; bulls, $4 to $5.25.

Milkers and Springers.

Only a limited number of milkers and springers were on sale, and there were none of the "topper" class amongst them; consequently prices cannot be quoted as high. Prices ranged at from $40 to $60 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves were both scarce and dear. Prices ranged at from $3 to $8.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of 1229 sheep and lambs were on sale, and the wants of the trade having been comparatively well satisfied last week, prices were easier.

Wesley Dunn, who was the heaviest operator, reports prices as follows: Sheep, ewes, $1.25 to $4.75; rams, $3 to $3.50; lambs, $6 to $6.20; but one lot of about 200 sold at $6.25 per cwt.

Hogs.

Select hogs, fed and watered at the market, are still $7.60 per cwt., and $7.35 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Jan. 16.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Jan. 14 were 2330 cattle, 1800 sheep and lambs, 2380 hogs and 175 calves. The offerings on the market this morning amounted to 1250 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 100 calves.

In spite of the very cold weather which has prevailed thruout the country, the supply of cattle on the market this morning was much larger than a week ago, and in consequence a weaker feeling developed, which resulted in prices declining ¼c to ½c per lb., notwithstanding the fact that the quality of the stock was generally up to the standard. The gathering of buyers was fairly large, and, as they all wanted some beef, there was a good demand at the reduction, and an active trade was done. The top prices realized a week ago to-day for choice steers were 6¾c to 7c, which to-day sold at 6¼c to 6½c, with good at 5¾c to 6c, fairly good at 5¼c to 5½c, fair at 4¾c to 5c, and the lower grades at 4c to 4½c per lb. There were a number of good bulls offered, which brought from 5½c to 5¾c, and the commoner grades sold at from that down to 4c per pound, while cows realized from 4c to 5½c per pound, as to quality.

The market for hogs was weaker, and prices, as compared with those paid last Wednesday, show a decline of 25c to 50c per 100 lbs., which was due to increased supplies; in fact, they were in excess of the requirements, as packers in some cases had more offered to them than they wanted. During the early part of the morning the demand was good and quite an active trade was done, with sales of selected lots at $8 to $8.10 per 100 lbs., weighed off cars, but later trade became quiet, and drovers in some cases found it difficult in making sales.

Owing to the increased receipts of sheep and lambs, a weaker feeling developed in the market, and prices for the former declined ½c per lb., and the latter 10c to 25c per 100 lbs., and even at this reduction the demand was rather limited, as butchers generally are well supplied with stock which they bought some time ago, and put away in cold storage; consequently, drovers found it difficult in making sales, and the trade on the whole was slow. Sheep sold at 4c to 4½c per lb., and lambs at $6 to $6.40 per 100 lbs. The demand for calves was fair at prices ranging from $3 to $12 each, as to size and quality.

At the Canadian Pacific live stock market the receipts of live stock for the week ending Jan. 14 were 850 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 960 hogs and 150 calves. The offerings on the market this morning consisted of 800 cattle, 600 sheep and lambs, 350 hogs and 50 calves.

NOBLE BREADWINNERS.

The romantic story just disclosed of Sir Claude Robert Campbell, who, after serving before the mast on a sailing ship, met his death while heroically trying to save his shipmates in a shipwreck, calls to mind the extraordinary career of the Earl of Egmont, who died a short time ago. His was an astonishing life of adventure, and, amongst other experiences, he could boast of having sailed before the mast, although he had passed his examinations and secured a second mate's certificate.

Lord Graham, too, has served before the mast, while Lord Hardwicke was among the first to peg out claims in the goldfields of Western Australia. Afterwards he qualified as a mining engineer, went to the United States, and there got a job as a miner in a big gold-mine at Montana, and worked for trade union wages at rock-drilling ten hours a day.

A short time ago it was reported that Sir Arthur Curtis, who went to the Klondike goldfields in 1893 and mysteriously disappeared, had been discovered living as a hermit trapper near that gold-mining region. Proof of this story, however, has not yet been found, but it reminds one of the return of Sir Genille Cave-Browne-Cave in 1908, who came into the title after a most adventurous and exciting career, having in his time been a naval officer, a big game hunter, cowboy, and riding master of a crack dragoon corps. In addition, he tried his luck in the Mysore goldfields.

Although he has independent means, the Hon. Francis Patrick Clements, brother and heir of Lord Leitrim, prefers to earn his own living, and some time ago was reported to be in America working on a ranch. Mention might also be made of Lord Lyveden, who has, amongst other experiences, run a nursery garden in North Carolina, owned a fishing boat at Charlestown, and become in turn a ship's steward, an innkeeper, and an actor. With the possible exception of Lord Orford, he has had the most diversified career of any living member of the peerage.

JOHN BONGARD NOT POISONED

Analyst's Report Weakens Suspicions of Foul Play in Regard To Death

PICTON, Jan. 17.—The suspicion that poison caused the death of John Bongard seems to be quite groundless according to the statement of Professor Ellis, who analyzed the internal organs of the dead man. The analyst has telegraphed to Coroner Dr Currie that no traces of poison were discovered. It is quite probable that the coroner's jury will be immediately dismissed when they reassemble on the 27th. inst., although it is understood that Dr. Currie will go to Toronto before the end of the week to consult Dr. Ellis as to the possibility of poison having been taken three or four days before death ensued, and then passing away in substance though leaving fatal effects. The condition of the stomach and liver puzzled Dr. Chant, who performed the autopsy, and Dr. Currie, who consulted with him.

HUMILIATED BY A HOBBLE, SHE SUES

WILKESBARRE, Jan. 17.—Twice deeply humiliated by a hobble skirt, Miss Anna Berkowitz to-day caused the arrest of George Casco, a tailor, who had sold her the skirt. She declared in Alderman John F. Donohue's office that she would never wear another of that style.

Miss Berkowitz ordered one of the latest New York patterns from Casco. It attracted attention and she was pleased. But she grew tired taking the short steps it required and started to board a street car to go home. As she stepped vigorously upward for the high step of the car the skirt split up one side.

She returned the skirt to Casco, demanded another, and got it. The first day she wore it she was caught in a rainstorm and the skirt was transformed into something like a kilt.

PRESCRIPTION BY WIRELESS CURED

PORTLAND, Me., Jan. 17.—A wireless message flashed 800 miles, from steamship to steamship, from the coast of Florida to the coast of Yucatan, saved the life of Capt. Arthur N. McGray, master of the tramp steamer Herman Frasch, of New York, when he lay at death's door from ptomaine poisoning last week. To-day the captain, in his usual good health, brought his vessel to this port.

On Jan. 2, when the Frasch left the Gulf port Sabine Pass, Capt. McGray was taken ill after eating canned salmon. There was no surgeon on board the Frasch and he grew steadily worse. On Jan. 4 he realized that he was near death. As he lay writhing in agony in his bunk it occurred to him that he could send a wireless message to the physicians of the United State naval tation at Dry Tortugas, which was then about 100 miles away.

Eight times that distance away the Ward line steamship Merida was leaving the harbor of Progreso, Yucatan, when her wireless operator caught the message telling of the illness of Capt. McGray and asking rules for treatment and a prescription. The surgeon of the Merida wrote an answer. It was received on board the Frasch an hour before the naval surgeon at Dry Tortugas replied.

Capt. McGray believes the prompt intervention of the message by the operator of the Merida saved his life. "An hour more and I would have been on the wrong side of the crisis," he says.

THE CIRCUS GIANT DEAD

BUFFALO, Jan. 17.—"Colonel" William Baker, known among circus men as the giant, because of his 7 feet 3 inches of height, and 250 pounds of weight, died at the Emergency Hospital to-day as a result of a fall last night on an icy sidewalk

Baker was born in Kentucky, the home of many big men, about 35 years ago. He was known in every city and hamlet where the circus shows.

Messrs. R. H. Ketcheson and G. Campbell were appointed delegates to the Central Ontario Fairs Association which is to be held here on the 31st inst.

The places included in this circuit are Lindsay, Millbrook, Peterboro', Picton, Napanee, Madoc, Tweed, Ameliasburg, Stirling, Warkworth, Roseneath, Wooler, Colborne, Frankford, Norwood, Keene, Marmora, Shannonville, Kingston, Castleton, Belleville, Demorestville.

Mr. W. Anderson moved, seconded by Mr. Horton, that a committee composed of Messrs. W. C. Farley, W. N. Ponton, R. J. Garbutt, L. Terwilligar, W. Carnew, G. Campbell, E. B. Horton, C. H. Weese, R. H. Ketcheson, S. Wellbanks and W. Anderson be appointed to arrange for the entertainment of the delegates to the Central Ontario Fair Association to be held in the city.

A motion prevailed that no action be taken in reference to holding a horse show or a seed show in the spring.

The Secretary was instructed to notify the department that expert judges would be acceptable to the Association at the annual exhibition.

Moved by Mr. Ketcheson, seconded by Mr. Wellbanks, that this Association affiliate with the Provincial Fair Association and two delegates be appointed to attend the annual meeting of said Association at Toronto.

Mr. C. W. Neville addressed the meeting in reference to the scheme of insuring against loss sustained by fair associations in case of bad weather. The Provincial Government purpose providing a sum of $10,000 towards this scheme. He believed it was a good thing. In referring to the dates of fairs, he spoke of the fact that Napanee had for 25 years had always selected Tuesday and Wednesday of a certain week in the fall, and for some reason Belleville had of late clashed with Napanee in regard to date. He asked as a favor that the Belleville Association arrange their dates so as not to conflict with the Napanee exhibition.

The motion to affiliate with the Provincial Association prevailed, but it was decided not to send any delegates to the annual meeting.

Mr. L. R. Terwilligar, in speaking of the dates of the Belleville fair, said that it had been held every year in the week following Toronto fair. Napanee fair dates, he understood, were in the second week after the Toronto fair.

After some further discussion it was decided to leave the date of the fair to the incoming board.

The meeting then adjourned, to meet at the call of the President.

WIFE IS ONLY 12, MUST GO TO SCHOOL

KANSAS CITY, Jan. 17.—Mrs. Jos Costo, 12 years old, just four feet tall weight 75 pounds, must start to school Monday morning. Mrs. Costo's name was Sunday Zito until Wednesday, when she married Costo, who is 20 years old.

"What's the reason you are not in school?," Judge Porterfield asked yesterday when she appeared in the court room with the truancy officer.

"Why I am a married woman. I have to stay home and take care of the house," she said in a childish voice.

"Well, you will have to start to school Monday morning," the court told her, and finally she said she would.

LONE CHILDREN RARELY HEALTHY

VIENNA, Jan. 16.—The health of spoiled children is the subject on which Dr. Friedjung lectured the other day before the Medical Society. He discussed especially the case of families in which there was a single child.

As a result of his examination of hundreds of children of both sexes between 2 and 10 years of age, he found that of 100 children, each the sole off-spring of its parents, only 13 could be described as entirely healthy while 87 were more or less nervously afflicted and 18 suffered from nervous debility and hysteria in a severe degree. Fifty children out of 100 were troubled with digestive complaints and 37 were confirmed dyspeptics.

In great contrast stand children of large families. Of 100 of these 69 were quite healthy and only 31 showed signs of slight nervous defects in various forms.

BIBULOUS SNAKE A WOMAN SLAPPER

CLEVELAND, Jan. 17.—Mrs. M. J. Lanigan, who lives just outside the city limits, reported to the police that there is a snake in her cellar that eats canned fruit and drinks gin. She says she went downstairs to kill it, but the snake sneaked up behind her and slapped her between the shoulder blades so hard that her arms ached all the next day.

"It tore my skirt off as I ran upstairs," she said.

"That snake is 12 feet long—that is I say it is. It's really much longer, but I don't like to tell its real length because the neighbors will laugh at me."

Mrs. Lanigan's place was a saloon up to a few months ago. She says the snake turned the spigot on a 15 gallon cask of gin in the cellar and drank it all. Police investigating found a torn skirt and an empty gin cask in the cellar, besides a lot of broken fruit jars. An iron drain pipe six inches in diameter, opens into the cellar.

"That's where he lives," said Mrs. Lanigan. As Chief Kohler has no six-inch policeman the search stopped right there.

LOST HER PURSES

Mr. James Walsh, of Deseronto, reports to the police that his wife, who was in this city yesterday, left her hand satchel in the ladies' waiting room at the G. T. R. station here. It contained her two purses, a sum of money and some other small articles.

We hear much of the bracing effect of cold, but it seems to have a depressing effect on street thermometers.

Daily Intelligencer.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Government inspection of banks is one of the needs of the times.

The Toronto Telegram suggestively asks, "Where did the Farmers' Bank charter come from ?"

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt seems to be quite a fast sprinter for a man of his weight.

Neither Sir Wilfrid Laurier nor any member of his cabinet were among the crowd which welcomed Mr. Bourassa back to Canada.

The appreciation of many Torontonians for the revivalists is very touching. It is evidenced by placing many plugged and mutilated coins on the collection plates.

The Toronto News contains the following: "The 1911 Robin." Chirruping gaily on the topmost branch of his apple tree, a robin was discovered this morning by Mr. J. J. O'Hearn 3, D'Arcy street. The bird entertained the members of Mr. O'Hearn's family for twenty minutes, giving them plenty of time to verify it as a "real, true, live robin.". This notice is surrounded by a black rule border in memory, we suppose, of the poor frozen-to-death bird.

"I signed all the monthly reports on the representation of the General Manager and the Chief Accountant that they were 'correct,'" said Col Munro, President of the Farmers' Bank, when interviewed by a reporter. This is the course pursued by presidents of all corporations. It would be impossible for any president to pursue any other course unless he devoted every moment of his time to the details of the corporation.

A calendar sent a well known gentleman in this city by a firm in Montreal had on it the pictures of two pugnacious bulldogs bound by the necks with a chain.

"What do you think of the picture Pat ?" inquired the recipient.

The application of especially generated gas goes back at least to 1792 when William Murdoch lighted his house at Redruth, in Cornwall, by coal gas. Murdoch was possibly anticipated by Lebon and his "thermo lamp," in which gas distilled from wood was burned, however. Murdoch and the firm of Bolton, Watt & Co., started the lighting of works But it was not until 1810 that the bill of the London and Westminster Gas Light and Coke Company was passed by Parliament.

Whether or not Mr. E. M. Macdonald, M. P., invited the people of Lethbridge to vote for the government and get post offices and various other public buildings, everyone knows that hundreds upon hundreds of such appeals are made on behalf of the government at each election time, says the Ottawa Journal. And moreover, seeing that a constituency, remaining faithfully government, does actually get these things in preference to one remaining opposition, if Mr Macdonald made the statement he would simply be showing a frankness considerably greater than to be expected from the average politician.

EXCEPTIONALLY GOOD EPWORTH LEAGJE MISSIONARY MEETING

Fine Gathering in Bridge Street Church--An Excellent Programme Capably Rendered--Stirring Hymns of Christian Endeavor--Unique Scripture Verses--Able and Appropriate Addresses--A Plea for Individual Responsibility

The Epworth League meeting at Bridge St. Methodist Church Monday evening was one of more than usual importance. Miss L. Adams, convenor of the Missionary Dept., led the service and outlined a splendid programme. Stirring hymns of Christian endeavor permeated the whole gathering with rousing interest. Unique Scripture verse were read portraying God's gerat gifts to mankind, viz.: the giving of His only begotten Son, His Holy Spirit, spiritual and temporal blessings.

"A Symposium on the Devotion of Time to Missions" was the practical reading by Miss Docker. The keynote of this was the value of prayer and study.

Miss Steel gave an excellent paper on "The Estimate of Influence in Missions." Lack of knowledge and consequently lack of interest on the part of all those who should be concerned, was a serious drawback to successful missionary progress. The example of our giving would have a correspondingly good effect on others within our touch. What may seem to be small to the human eye might be looked upon as great in the eye of God, who alone was the judge of our scale of giving. Our neglect towards missionary work meant opposition in a sense. The quoting of an incident in connection with the inconveniences, sacrifices, privations and exposures to the dangers of diseases served to dispel greatly the common contention that missionary workers profited in having a good time out of the apparent charity of friends.

The rendering here of a plaintive gospel hymn by Miss M. Davidson was much appreciated.

Then followed another essay on "Giving to Missions" by Miss DeLong. Why it was our duty and how we could co-operate were points that were dwelt upon. The manner of our offerings should be without public show. In the devoting of time to prayer for world-wide missions all thought of other's observations should be banished from our minds. Experience has taught us that communion was possible either in the closet or on the house-top, or in the case of a sailor the masthead could be his altar. The giving up of many pleasures, and the sacrificing for Christ would have due reward.

Next an essay entitled "Giving Ourselves," written by Miss E. Morden, was read by Miss Ethel Ketcheson. As human instruments we have been entrusted with a sacred privilege; if we failed to do the work God had deputed us to perform, then what an awful burden rested upon us.

At this juncture the prayer of the venerable pastor, Dr. Bishop, that individual responsibility might be revealed to us and that our missionary enthusiasm would begin to emanate through fellowship of the home life, rested as an effective benediction upon the question and thought of the evening.

Before the close of the service Mr. Garvin Berkley sang in his fine young baritone voice: "Is It Nothing to You?"

Monday evening next at the Literary meeting of the League, Prof Phelps is to give an historical address on the country of Peru. Despite the allurements of counter attractions and the disagreeableness of the weather sometimes, those of the young people of the congregation who fail to attend the regular sessions of the League are missing profitable facilities towards right living.

DEATHS RECORDED AT HOME AND ABROAD

Mrs. Scott's Sudden Death at San Francisco--Miss Armstrong Dead at Harold

Friends in the city have received word of the death of a former resident in the person of Mrs. Winfield Scott Chase, formerly Mercy Elizabeth (Bessie) Boselly, the eldest daughter of the late Wm. H. Boselly and Mrs. Elizabeth Boselly, formerly of this city, the mother now living in Saskatchewan. Mrs. Chase died of heart failure, at her home in San Francisco, Cal., on Saturday, Jan. 6th, the interment having taken place in Mount Olivet cemetery on Wednesday, Jan. 11, at 10 a.m. Mrs. Chase leaves, besides her mother, a husband, four brothers and four sisters.

Mrs. Chase paid a visit to this city some six years ago, renewing old friendships.

Mrs. Chase went through the San Francisco earthquake. It is thought the shock has had much to do with the shortening of her life.

MISS BELLE ARMSTRONG.

A gloom was cast over this vicinity, writes a correspondent from Harold, when it became known that Miss Belle Armstrong, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Simon Armstrong, had, on the 9th inst., passed from this world to the great beyond. Miss Armstrong had been ailing for some time with stomach trouble. Yet no one seemed to realize that the end was so near, as she always wore a sunny face. She was about the house as usual until Saturday afternoon, as death came on Monday morning at two o'clock. She was in her 39th year. Earlier in life she was engaged as school teacher and spent eight very successful years in training young minds, making many friends among the children and those she came in contact with. She was also a very great help in Sabbath School and church work, and her christian life will live on and be an example worthy of following to those who are left behind her.

Much sympathy is extended to the sorrowing friends, especially to the aged father and mother, she being the only one living at home to cheer and comfort them. Surviving are two sisters. Mrs. Whitton, of Winnipeg; Mrs. Broadsworth, of Sine; two brothers, William, of Montreal, and Arthur, of Troy, N.Y.

The funeral took place on Wednesday and was largely attended, service being conducted by Rev. Mr. Moore, pastor of deceased, assisted by Rev. Mr. Clarke. Many floral tributes were placed on the casket, among them being a beautiful wreath from Harold Sunday School. The bearers were Messrs. C. B. McGuire, James Bailey, Fred Cook, Harry Heath, George and Earl Bailey. The remains were laid to rest in Bethel cemetery.

Weep not that her race is run,
God grant we may rest as calmly
When our work, like her's, is done.
'Till then, we yield with gladness,
Our sister to Him to keep,
And rejoice in the sweet assurance
"He giveth His loved one sleep."

MRS. BEAMISH.

Mrs. Beamish, mother of Rev. Rural Dean Beamish, of this city, died at Hamilton yesterday. The Rev. gentleman and his wife left today for Hamilton to attend the obsequies and will not return until next week.

JUDGE McMAHON.

The late Justice McMahon, who passed away in Toronto at an early hour this morning, first studied law in Belleville. His Lordship in 1864 married Isabel Janet, eldest daughter of the late Simon Mackenzie, of this city.

MILES A. SHOREY.

Mr. Miles A. Shorey, a highly esteemed resident of Avondale, died this morning after a long illness, at the age of 66 years.

The deceased was born on the 8th concession of Thurlow, where he spent his life, retiring from farming a few years ago and going to Avondale. Mr. Shorey was a life long Methodist and a staunch Conservative, and was universally respected. He is survived by one brother, Mr. Norris D. Shorey, of Thurlow, who is the only surviving member of the family The deceased was the son of the late Wm. A. Shorey, of Fredericksburg and was of U. E. Loyalist stock. He was known throughout the country as "Genial Miles," having a good word for everybody and being in every respect a good man.

OTHER BODIES ARE FOR SALE

KIRKSVILLE, Mo., Jan. 17.—Lawrence Dumpert and Jesse Beardsley, both of Quincy, Ill., and recently married, left Kirksville this afternoon after an unsuccessful effort to sell their bodies to a school of osteopathy for dissection.

Both said they were hard up for money and they hoped to get $100 each for their bodies, the school to get possession after death. Dr C. E. Still, head of the school, refused to "buy bodies on the hoof," as he expressed it.

The offer was so peculiar that Dr. Still notified the police, and the two were arrested this morning and held for investigation. The city authorities, however, decided that there was nothing illegal about the proposition, as they disclaimed any intention of suicide, and released them.

Dumpert and Bearglsley arrived in Kirksville late last night and aroused Dr. Still out of bed to make their offer.

PLEASANT TIME AT CENTRE MISSION

Heavily Loaded Christmas Tree --Nice Programme and Presents For Children

A very pleasant time was spent at Centre street Mission on Tuesday night, Jan. 10th, the occasion being the annual Xmas tree, which was a great success in every way. The tree and decorations were beautiful, being loaded with presents for the children and older ones. The mootoes, in design, were very pretty. The program was rendered by the children and older scholars, and some outsiders.

Mr. Walker, of Albert College, acted as chairman. Great credit is due to Mr. Geo. Lucas and Mrs. Walker Stapley for their untiring devotion in the traing of the children and the decorations. The Mission was crowded to the doors. At the close bags of candies were given to the children.

TRIED TO KILL AND PROPOSED

NEW YORK, Jan. 17.—Genardo Blondi is waiting in jail here for an opportunity to make his twenty-second proposal of marriage to Nunziata Cesarena. He made his twenty-first proposal and did it in open court. The all-important question and the girl's refusal stand upon the court records.

It was the only question Blondi asked her after listening to the girl's recital of the twentieth proposal. At that time, she said, Blondi attempted to cut her throat when she refused. She displayed a long scar on her neck to support her charge.

The magistrate informed the prisoner that he might question the witness.

"I want to ask her to be my wife," said Blondi, hopefully.

The girl shook her head and Blondi lost interest in the proceedings. He was held in $2,000 bonds for trial on a charge of attempted murder.

The Rev. R. T. Kerr, wife and two children, of Chicago, are visiting the Rev. A. Kerr at the Manse, George street.

FREE TRADE IN ENGLAND—WHAT IS IT?

An American writer, commenting upon the pretence that the "Englishman's breakfast table is not taxed," says:

> "As a matter of fact the receipts from customs duties upon the things that the English eat, drink and smoke, plus the excise taxation, makes together much the largest item of the Imperial revenue. For the ten years ending Marsh 31st, 1907, the net receipts from customs were:

Tobacco and snuff	$ 608,500,000
Tea	289,000,000
Spirits	218,000,000
Sugar (last six years only)	175,500,000
Wine	69,500,000
Currants, etc.	21,000,000
Corn and grain (two years only)	12,000,000
Coffee	9,000,000
Total	$1,402,500,000

"For the same period the excise revenue was:

Spirits	$ 884,500,000
Beer	629,500,000
Total net receipts from customs and excise.	$2,916,500,000

The writer continues:

> "This works out at an average of $291,650,000 yearly, or at the rate of $690 yearly per 100 of the population. When it becomes thus apparent that the English are taxed for what they eat, drink and smoke at the rate of over $5,000,000 a week, the fiction of free food is blown to the winds, and the Land of Compromises rejoices in the possession of yet another strange contradiction which troubles nobody, and which is still used by politician and layman alike as though this at least were one of the fundamental truths of their insular social economy."

By and by the fiction will be exploded, and the British people, instead of beginning to tax their food, will merely lengthen the list or articles upon which they raise their revenue. The readjustment will not increase the cost of food, but it will benefit the British farmer, the British manufacturer, the British workmen and the oversea States of the Empire.

AS SEEN BY OTHERS

The plea raised by ex-Mayor Marsh in his own behalf, via the famous Montreal Herald interview, namely that the charges of grafting preferred against him emanated from a Tory organization which was formed for the purpose of nipping in the bud his political aspirations, has found no favor with the chief organ of the party to which he belongs, namely the Toronto Globe. That journal, after having acquired full knowledge of the statements for and against the accused which have been made public up to date, remarked in its issue of the 16th inst.:

"It looks very much as if Belleville's civic government needs the same sort of probe that was so effective in the case of Oxford's graft scandal—an investigation under oath by a Judge."

This is a clear refusal to accept the "political persecution" story.

Where can the accused trustees turn for comfort now that they can see themselves as others—and those with friendly eyes—see them?

The final disposition of the case has, however, yet to come. Not until after the judicial investigation has been held and the finding of the commission has been given to the public, can it be determined that the accused are guilty or not guilty as charged.

RECKLESS LEGISLATURE

According to a despatch from St. Catharines, the aldermen of that city have been "playing ducks and drakes" with its financial affairs, as the despatch in question informs us that: "This city to-day finds itself in the rather uncomfortable position of having a big shortage in its "rainy day" savings bank account. The sinking fund provided to meet maturing debentures has been found to be about a hundred and ninety thousand dollars short.

"This," said ex-Alderman Burgoyne, "is due perhaps to the leniency of councils of years past in failing to levy as high a rate on the taxpayers as was required to meet all the needs of the sinking fund. It is probably more a case of bad bookkeeping than anything else."

"The city will now have to issue debentures to meet the shortage. The city debt was consolidated in 1893 and ever since that date it seems the shortage has been growing."

That is one way of keeping down the tax rate, but it is a way which renders all concerned in it, and the City Treasurer in particular, liable to prosecution.

St. Catharines is credited with a per capita tax of $10.64 for municipal purposes, and $2.77 for school purposes, but had its financial obligations been fully levied for, as the law directs, the impost would have been considerably larger and the tax rate would have been correspondingly increased.

The parties who have been guilty of such "frenzied financing" ought to be dealt with as they deserve, and that without delay.

PROTEST BEQUEST TO BOWMANVILLE

Canadian Heirs Enter Action To Break The Will Of Washington Man

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—Suit was filed in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to-day, contesting the will of James H. McGill, of this city, who devised Washington real estate valued at $250,000 to the town of Bowmanville, Ontario.

Canadian heirs began action against the town on the ground that the laws of the United States were violated by the request and also that the legislative charter creating Bowmanville did not permit the corporation to become a land owner in a foreign country.

The plaintiffs are John and Isabel McGill, and the property involved is the McGill building of this city. McGill died in 1908, his will providing that on the death of his wife the Canadian town became residuary legatee of his estate. Mrs. McGill died recently and the heirs at law now seek to prevent the town from entering into possession of the property.

OLD SKELETON HAS INSPIRATION

PARIS, Jan. 17.—M. Zein, veteran painter, gives a picturesque account in the Annales of the inspiration sought by Chopin for the composition of his famous "Funeral March."

M. Zeim, who is now aged 90, relates that when little more than a boy, after a dinner party in a friend's studio, he had the idea in a fit of high spirits to bring from a cupboard a skeleton. The Prince de Polignac who was of the party, insisted on placing the skeleton on a music stool and guiding the bones of the fingers over the keys of the piano. This was in the romantic '30's.

Not long after Chopin called on M Zeim, to seek respite after an appalling night passed in a struggle with ghosts that had stroked him, had entwined around him and had sought to entice him to the underworld. The recital of his nightmare recalled to M Zeim the piano performance of the skeleton and the Prince de Polignac

Chopin shuddered, then asked,—"Have you a skeleton ?" M. Zeim had not butp romised to obtain one that very evening.

"Then," he goes on, "what had only been a frolic became something grand, agonizing, terrible. Pale, his eyes burning with fever, Chopin wrapped himself in a long winding sheet, and as he sat the piano, held against his bosom the skeleton, the spectre of his sleepless nights.

"In the lugubrious silence the notes streamed from the, piano, broadly slowly, overwhelmingly—an unimagined music—the "Funeral March." it was created there before our eyes."

Curing Catarrh

Catarrh is a disease of the mucous membrane, the mucous membrane is one may say, the interior lining of the body. Catarrh, therefore, may exist in any part of the system.

When the catarrhal poison attacks the muccous membrane, inflammation and congestion are produced and nature fails to throw off the accumulated poisons. The organ which has been afflicted ceases to perform its proper function as nature intended it should. The result is complication upon complication, which may lead to other and even more serious afflictions.

We honestly believe that Rexall Mucu-Tone will do wonders toward overcoming catarrh. It is made from the prescription of an eminent physician who made a long study of catarrh, and his great success with this remedy was an enviable one.

We want you if you are a sufferer from catarrh in any form, to give Rexall Mucu-Tone a thorough trial Use it with regularity and persistency for a reasonable time, then if you are not satisfied, come back and tell us, and without question or formality we will hand back to you every cent you paid us. This is certainly the fairest offer that any one could make and should attest our sincerity of purpose. It comes in two sizes prices 50 cents and $1.00. SPANISH QUEEN FEELS JEALOUSY

MADRID, Jan. 17.—Queen Ena and King Alfonso are reported to have had a really serious family jar with Gaby Deslys as the cause. This same Gaby is the pretty Parisian dancer whose presence in the society of King Manuel was the final featherweight which tipped the scales of wrath and precipitated the republican uprising in Lisbon and sent Manuel into exile in Englend. She vowed eternal fidelity to Manuel at the time, but the other day she refused to recognize him, although it is said Manuel didn't make any strenuous efforts to make her notice him.

Court circles have it that owing to her misunderstanding with Alfonso over Gaby, Ena threatened several times to pack up and go home to England to consult Alfonso's mother-in-law, Princess Beatrice of Battenberg, aunt of King George.

The trouble is the Spanish royal family is said to date back to the publication of a report that it was King Alfonso who introduced Gaby to Manuel. The story was guardedly printed here, but the English papers published it in extenso, and when the queen read it there was a scene. She demanded an explanation, and although Alfonso denied the incident royal relations have been strained.

In his extremity and distress, Alfonso appealed to the king of Greece. The latter monarch, although sixty-six years of age, is a "gallant man" in the French sense. His visits to Paris are always joyous events.

King George at once promised to straighten out the tangle, and soon there appeared a despatch from Paris which stated that Gaby Deslys had been exhibiting to her friends a letter from George, which ran in effect:

"Why have you been so indiscreet as to add to the misfortunes of the royal house of Portugal by boasting of your capture of King Manuel? Had I known that any act of mine would lead to this false step on your part I certainly should not have done you the great and undeserved honor of allowing you to kiss his majesty's hand. That I should have, in a moment of indiscretion, as great as yours, have introduced his majesty to you, is a matter which I most sincerely regret."

Queen Ena was induced to see the letter, and now the relations of the royal family are more amicable.

Canadian Doctors Prescribe and Recommend Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

The good results derived from the use of Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey, the great tonic stimulant, among leading doctors have been so marvelous that they feel it their duty to express themselves publicly for the benefit of the profession as well as the public health.

Known It Twenty Years

"I might say that I have known Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey for twenty years, and am happy to tell you that I consider it the purest and very best product on the market." Dr. J. J. A. Asselin, Ste. Rose, Quebec.

I Often Prescribe It

"I do not advocate indiscriminate use of alcohol, but I often prescribe it in moderate doses, especially for elderly people suffering from senile changes and debility. I order it to be taken during the principal meal of the day and well diluted. An important matter is to find a safe and reliable liquor. While I practised my profession in Boston, Mass., which I did for twenty-five years, I had frequent occasion to order Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey among my elderly patients, and I must say the result was to their advantage." Prosper Bender, M. D., Quebec, Que.

Beneficial Results

"I have employed Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey where indicated for a great many years with great success. I would not be without it, as it is a pure and palatable beverage. Have had the best results after lingering illness and in children and the old. Its low proof and delicate flavor make it most acceptable and beneficial, hastening convalescence." J. P. Sivewright, M. D., Chatham, Ont.

These are a few of the letters received from practising physicians throughout Canada, who, like their brothers in the United States, realize that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the greatest remedial agent and the most nutritious tonic stimulant for building up the weak, aiding digestion and prolonging life.

All grocers and liquor dealers or direct $1.25 a large bottle. Refuse substitutes and imitations; they are injurious. Send for free medical booklet and doctor's advice.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

CHAPTER XV.

ENID'S NEW NAME

The twisted strands of tough hemp might have been an electric cable of utmost conductivity if its powers were judged by results. When willing hands had carefully hauled in the rope until the knot could be unfastened, and the end secured to the cord connecting the gallery with the entrance, a man was despatched to warn Brand that all was in readiness for the next step.

The rough sailor was the messenger of the gods to those who waited on each story. As he ran upwards, climbing the steep stairs with the nimbleness of a monkey, he bellowed the great news to each crowded doorway. Seeing the girls in the kitchen, though already his breath was scant, he blurted out:

On the next landing pallid women's faces gleamed at him.

Yet again he was waylaid on the floor above. Hard pressed for wind, he wheezed forth consolation.

"Just goin' to haul the bottled beer aboard," he grunted.

It would never do to pass the hospital without a word.

Brand was peering through the lantern door, awaiting this unwashed Mercury, who caught sight of the lighthouse-keeper 'ere his shaggy head had emerged from the well.

The man stopped, almost spent. He gave an off-handed sailor's salute.

"Haul away, sir!" he yelled, and his voice cracked with excitement. Indeed they who remained quite coherent on the Gulf Rock, on the ships, and even on the cliffs nine miles awoy, were few in number and to be pitied exceedingly. There are times when a man must cheer and a woman's eyes glisten with joyous tears else they are flabby creatures, human jellyfish. The steamboats snorted with raucous siren-blasts, and although the hoarse shouting of men and the whistling of steam were swept into space by the north wind in its rage, those on shore could read the riddle through their glasses of the retreating boat and the white vapor-puffs.

The first to grasp Stanhope's hand when he swung himself onto the deck of the tender was Mr. Cyrus J. Traill.

"Well done, my lad!" he cried, brokenly. "I thought it was all up with you. Did you see her?"

"Yes, but only for a second."

"You thought it best not to join them?"

"You know that I would gladly go now and attempt it. But I dared not refuse the better way. I can't tell you what happened. Something stilled the sea like magic. Look at it now."

Assuredly the waves were breaking again around the pillar with all their wonted ferocity, but one among the Trinity House officers noticed a smooth, oily patch floating pastt he vessel.

"By Jove!" he shouted, "Brand helped you at the right moment. He threw some gallons of colza overboard."

Traill, a bronzed, spare, elderly man, tall and straight, with eyes set deep beneath heavy eyebrows, went to Jim Spence and Ben Pollard where they were helping to sling the Daisy up to the davits.

"I said five hundred between you," he briefly announced. "If the rope holds, and the three people I am interested in reach the shore alive, I will make it five hundred apiece."

Ben Pollard's mahogany face became several inches wider, and remained so permanently his friends thought, but Jim Spence only grinned.

"You don't know the cap'n, sir. He'll save every mothers' son—an' daughter, too—now he has a line aboard."

Then the ex-sailor, chosen with Ben from among dozens of volunteers owing to his close acquaintance with the reef, bethought him.

"You're treatin' Ben an' me magnificent, sir," he said, "but the chief credit is due to Mr. Stanhope. We on'y obeyed orders.'

The millionaire laughed like a boy.

"I have not forgotten Mr. Stanhope," he said. "I am sure your confidence in Mr. Brand will be justified. You watch me smile when I ante up your share."

On board the tug, and on the gallery of the lighthouse, there was no time for talk. The vessel, with the most skilful handling, might remain where she was for about four hours. She was already more than a hundred fathoms within the dangerous area marked by the buoy, and there was much to be done in the time.

The strongest rope, the best wire hawser, has its well-defined limit of strain, and the greater the length the greater the tension. From the buoy itself naught save a chain cable would hold in such a sea. The tug must operate from the nearer base. She was pitching and tossing in a manner calculated to daunt anyone but a sailor, and the slightest mistake made by the skipper, the burly oil-skinned man balancing himself on the bridge with his hand on the engine-room telegraph, would snap any line ever twisted.

So, briefly, this was the procedure adopted. A stout rope was bent onto that carried to the rock by Stanhope. With this was sent a whip, thus establishing a to-and-fro communication. The rope itself, when it had reached the rock, was attached to a buoy and anchored. Thus, it could be picked up easily if the thin wire hawser next despatched should happen to break.

A few words may cover a vast amount of exertion. Before the second line, with its running gear, was safely stayed around the body of the lantern—even the iron railing might give way—a precious hour had elapsed, and Stanhope was impatiently stamping about the bridge of the tender, though none knew better than he that not an unnecessary moment was being lost.

At last a signaler stationed on the tug was able to ask:

"What shall we send first?"

And the answer came back:

"Water, milk, bread."

All night tinsmiths had labored to enclose food and clothing in watertight cylinders ready for transport, and the shining packages now began their voyaging from the tug's trawlbeam to the lofty gallery, three-fourths of the journey being through the sea. When the first consignment reached the rock, another lusty cheer boomed from the watching vessels.

Stanhope, at least, could picture the scene in progress behind the grim granite walls—Constance and Enid, with others whom he did not know, serving out generous draughts to thirsty and famished women and men, helping themselves last, and hardly able to empty the eight-gallon supply of fresh water before they were called on to distribute a similar quantity of milk.

And then, the bread, the cooked meat all cut in slices, the tinned soups and meat extracts, the wines—for Traill had taken charge of the catering and his arrangements were lavish—what a feast for people almost on the verge of starvation!

The hours flew until the tug signaled that she must cast loose and back away from the reef. The tide was running westward now. Soon the danger would be active, and in any case, the Gulf Rock was saved from the possibility of famine during the next forty-eight hours. So the hawser, in its turn, was buoyed, and Brand's parting instruction was not to attempt to re-open communication during the dark hours of the morning tide.

The wisdom of his advice was manifest. With farewell trumpetings the vessels scurried off to Penzance, and the telegraph-office was kept open all night transmitting the word-pictures of newspaper correspondents to thrill the world with full descriptions of the way in which the Gulf Rock's famished denizens had been relieved.

The last two packages ferried to the lighthouse contained, not only warm woolen wraps for the women and children, but a big bundle of letters and telegrams.

Pyne was the postman. There were at least twenty notes addressed to the girls, and several to Brand, from friends ashore.

Mr. Traill, of course, wrote to his nephew and Mrs. Vansittart. Naturally, Pyne carried his own missive to the kitchen, where he found that Constance and Enid had managed to wash in distilled water.

They were cutting sandwiches and endeavoring to read their letters at the same instant. He bowed with sarcastic politeness.

"I see you are ready for the party," he said.

Certainly he offered a deplorable contrast to them. His face was encrusted with salt and blackened with dirt and perspiration. His hands were like those of a sweep, but smeared with oil, which shone on his coat sleeves up to both elbows. His clothes were torn and soiled, his linen collar and cuffs limp as rags, and his waistcoat was ripped open, having remained in that condition since it caught in a block as he descended the mast.

"Oh, you poor fellow!" cried Constance. "How you must envy us. Here is a kettleful of hot water. I can't say much for the towel, but the soap is excellent."

Refreshed, Pyne opened his uncle's letter. The girls were keeping up a running commentary of gossip.

"Mousie (Mrs. Sheppard) says she hasn't slept for three nights."

"Edith Taylor-Smith says she envies us."

"That letter you are reading now is from Lady Margaret. What does she say?"

"She sends all sorts of love, and—that kind of thing," cried the blushing Enid, who had just learnt from Jack's mother that Stanhope had appropriated her as his intended wife without ever a proposal.

"Is that all—in four closely written pages?"

"Well—she hopes to see me—to see both of us—"

Constance was too kindly to quiz her sister; maybe she saw something in Enid's eye which threatened speedy retaliation.

"Here's a note from the vicar. They have held a special service of intercession at St. Mary's."

"And Hettie Morris writes— Good gracious, Mr. Pyne! Have you had bad news?"

Enid's wondering cry was evoked by the extraordinary way in which the young American was looking at her. Some intensely exciting knowledge had mastered stoicism. His eyes were distended, his lips quivering. He leaned with one hand on the kitchen table; in the other he had clutched his uncle's letter.

Constance stood near to him. That he, of all the men she had ever met, should yield to an overpowering emotion, startled her greatly.

She caught his arm.

"Mr. Pyne," she said softly, "if—it is any ill tidings—you have received—we are, indeed, sorry for you."

He pulled himself straight, and gave Constance such a glance that she hastily withdrew her hand. It seemed to her that he would clasp her in his arms forthwith without spoken word. Her action served to steady him, and he laughed, so softly and pleasantly that their fear was banished.

"Girls," he said slowly "I have been parachuting through space for a minute or so. I'm all right. Everybody is all right. But my head swims a bit. If I come back forgetting my name and the place where I last resided, remember that once I loved you."

"That letter was from his uncle, I suppose," said Enid, awe-stricken.

"It must be something very dramatic which would make him act so strangely. Why has he run away? Was he afraid to trust us with his news?"

There was a sharp vehemence in Constance's voice which did not escape her sister's sharp ears.

"Connie," said Enid, quietly, "as sure as Jack loves me, that man is in love with you."

"Enid—"

"Why did he look at you in that way just now? Didn't you think he was going to embrace you on the spot? Confess!"

"It was at you he was looking."

"Not in the way I mean. He gazed at me as if I were a spirit. But when you touched him he awoke. He might have been asleep and suddenly seen you near him. I wonder he didn't say 'Kiss me, dearest, and then I will be sure it is not a dream.'"

Constance discovered that she must defend herself.

"Mr. Pyne hardly conveyed such unutterable things to me," she said, conscious that a clean face betrays a flush which smudges may hide. "Have you had a letter from Jack that you can interpret other people's thoughts so sweetly?"

"No, dear. Jack has not written. I have found out the cause. His mother expresses the hope that he will be the first to convey her good wishes. So I think he meant to try and bring the rope himself. Dad knew it and Mr. Pyne. That is why they did not tell us."

"Eighty-one hungry mouths expect to be filled to repletion to-night," she said. "No more gossip. What curious creatures women are! Our own affairs are sufficiently engrossing without endeavoring to pry into Mr Pyne's."

"Connie, don't press your lips so tightly. You are just dying to know what upset him. But, mark my words it had nothing to do with any other woman."

When a man never worries there is usually a woman around somewhere who does the job for him.

If our own follies looked as ridiculous to us as the follies of others look to us we would soon grow wise.

However, all the fellows up in the air are not aviators.

Not being able to make a hit is responsible for most of us missing many a good time.

The Difference That It Makes.

I used to think the man a crank
Who talked away about his kid
With language undergrowth as rank
As any in a forest hid,
But with one of my own on hand
His angle I can understand.

I own he wearied me a bit
Relating sayings smart and bright,
But now his ravings make a hit;
I listen with a strange delight.
And for an opening I wait
One on my baby to relate.

I spot him half a block away
And wait his coming without fear.
I know about what he will say,
And it is what I want to hear,
And he will have to listen then
My kidlet talk to hear again.

It gives to life a different twist
When you a wee one have to hold.
You gladly listen to the grist
Of childish stories, new and old.
The while you wait a chance to get
A few ones in about your pet.

It is hard to make a man with the toothache believe that the world is growing better.

The Feeders of New England

The men who supply New England with food are the Wholesale Grocers.

Last Autumn 76 of them went on an excursion and after returning home sent us a testimonial that is very highly esteemed. Many of these famous firms have been selling our products for 12 to 15 years, but have not heretofore inspected the pure food works.

To the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd.,
Battle Creek, Michigan,

Greeting:

We, the undersigned Wholesale Grocers of New England, desire to express our thanks and appreciation for the courtesy, hospitalities and entertainment offered to us during our recent brief visit to Battle Creek.

We were more than pleased and gratified at the methods, cleanliness and extent of your works, in the production of the food products—Postum Cereal, Post Toasties and Grape-Nuts. We need not speak of their world-wide reputation and health-giving qualities, for that is already established by their popularity.

"There's a Reason"

We assure you of our hearty co-operation in your behalf and our best wishes for your continued success.

NA-DRU-CO

Toilet and Medicinal Preparations Are Compounded by Expert Chemists

Who Compounds Your Medicines?

When your physician gives you a prescription you would scarcely risk having it compounded by a grocer or a baker, even if you were sure they had the right drugs. You insist on your druggist's skilful dispensing.

If you did not protect yourself in this way the laws of the country would protect you, for they demand that physicians' prescriptions be dispensed by physicians or qualified druggists only.

Is it not equally important to know that the household remedies, such as laxatives, cough syrups and tonics, and the toilet preparations such as tooth paste, which you use so frequently, are also compounded by expert chemists?

When you use NA-DRU-CO medicinal or toilet preparations you have the positive guarantee of one of the largest wholesale drug firms in the world, the National Drug and Chemical Company of Canada, Limited, that each one has been compounded by expert chemists only.

This is just where NA-DRU-CO Cascara Laxatives, NA-DRU-CO Liquorice, Linseed, and Chlorodyne Cough Syrup, NA-DRU-CO Tasteless Cod Liver Oil Compound and everything else on the NA-DRU-CO list are pre-eminently better than mixtures at present flooding the market. They are compounded by men who know.

NA-DRU-CO Formulae, Ingredients and Compounding Are Best

Your own druggist could not be more careful or more accurate in compounding one of your physician's prescriptions than are our chemists in compounding every NA-DRU-CO preparation. Add to this the facts that only the best and purest materials that money can buy are used in NA-DRU-CO articles, and that each NA-DRU-CO formula has been thoroughly tested in actual use, and you have the solid grounds for the implicit confidence we want you to feel in NA-DRU-CO preparations.

We are prepared to furnish to any physician or druggist in Canada, on request, a full list of the ingredients in any NA-DRU-CO article. Ask these men, who are men of standing in your community, and best qualified to tell you, all about NA-DRU-CO preparations.

If any NA-DRU-CO article you buy does not prove entirely satisfactory return it to your druggist. He has our authority to refund the full purchase price and charge it to us.

You can get any NA-DRU-CO preparation anywhere in Canada, for if your druggist should not have it in stock he can get it within two days from our nearest wholesale branch.

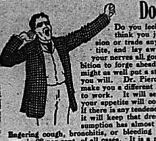
Huge Reptile's Bones Dug Up

BERLIN, January 16.—The discovery in German East Africa some years ago of enormous bones suggesting the former existence of animals of a stupendous size has been followed up and the results reported by Dr. Hans Reck, who has been for the last two years exploring in the vicinity of Tendaguru.

Two hundred negroes were employed with the assurance that the bones to be discovered would be used for medicinal purposes. Large deposits of bones were found, usually at a great depth, in soft muddy or sandy soil. Seven hundred coolie loads weighing 22,000 kilograms have been dug up and sent to Berlin.

They include all parts of the bodies of animals of hitherto unknown proportions and among them a complete huge skull. The bones belong to creatures of the reptilian order dating from the chalk age and considerably surpassing the Carnegie diplodocus in size.

While the forearm of the diplodocus is 95 centimetres long, that of the largest reptile found by Dr. Reck is 2.10 metres long, and the backbone of another animal measures 8 metres. One heel bone was 80 centimetres long, 20 broad and 15 thick.



Do You Feel This Way?

Do you feel all tired out? Do you sometimes think you just can't work away at your profession or trade any longer? Do you have a poor appetite, and lay awake at nights unable to sleep? Are your nerves all gone, and your stomach too? Has ambition to forge ahead in the world left you? If so, you might as well put a stop to your misery. You can do it if you will. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will make you a different individual. It will set your lazy liver to work. It will set things right in your stomach, and your appetite will come back. It will purify your blood. If there is any tendency in your family toward consumption, it will keep that dread destroyer away. Even after consumption has almost gained a foothold in the form of a lingering cough, bronchitis, or bleeding at the lungs, it will bring about a cure in 98 per cent. of all cases. It is a remedy prepared by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., whose advice is given free to all who wish to write him. His great success has come from his wide experience and varied practice.

Don't be wheedled by a penny-grabbing dealer into taking inferior substitutes for Dr. Pierce's medicines, recommended to be "just as good." Dr. Pierce's medicines are OF KNOWN COMPOSITION. Their every ingredient printed on their wrappers. Made from roots without alcohol. Contain no habit-forming drugs. World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

WAS HE MURDERED?

Bromptonville, Que., Man Is Missing—Hat Found.

Sherbrooke, Que., Jan. 18.—There is great excitement here over the mysterious disappearance of W. F. Pope, a well-known merchant of Bromptonville, a small town six miles away. Pope left his house at seven o'clock Monday night to drive to Stoke, where he was going to collect some money. He never reached his destination, and at 10 o'clock at night his horse, cut and bleeding, was found on the lower Brompton road, near Sherbrooke.

Search was made yesterday morning by the local police, but no trace of Pope's body has been found. Last evening at a bend in the road just out of Bromptonville, his hat was found, saturated with blood, and there were indications that a terrible fight had taken place.

Pope took an active part in the municipal elections for mayor this year, supporting Fred Alger, who unsuccessfully opposed O. Lambert. He was known to have had nearly $500 in his possession, also a watch and other valuables. From the nature of a cut in his hat, it is thought he was struck with a club, and, not losing his senses, made a fight for life. He intended leaving for Boston to-day, where he was to open a branch office for the shipment of hay and grain.

Six Members Ejected.

Melbourne, Australia, Jan. 18.—Extraordinary scenes have marked the progress of a redistribution bill introduced in the State Parliament of West Australia. The measure incurred the hostility of the Labor members of the House, and they resorted to obstructive tactics. For 29 hours they kept the House sitting, deliverying speech after speech, and argument after argument until, from sheer exhaustion they were obliged to give up.

During the progress of the sitting six members of the Labor party were ejected from the House, one of the Laborites showed fight, and the services of the police were requisitioned. Finally the Labor party withdrew in a body, and, progress having been made with the redistribution bill, the assembly arose.

The bill will be enacted into law in spite of the opposition of the Labor members.

Quebec's Program.

Quebec, Jan. 18.—The seventeenth annual meeting of the Quebec Board of Trade was held yesterday afternoon, when the officers for the past year were re-elected as follows: President, G. A. Vavdry; vice-presidents, Wm. A. Marsh and J. Picard; treasurer, A. E. Scott. The board is in a flourishing condition.

The program of the board for the coming year includes immediate construction of grain elevators and additional steamship berths to handle the grain trade of the west; the construction without further delay of a graving dock at Levis, to accommodate the largest steamers reaching the St. Lawrence; the necessity for a faster and more frequent Atlantic mail service, and the promotion of steel shipbuilding in Quebec, in connection with the construction of naval vessels.

Will Hold Investigation.

Winnipeg, Jan. 18—Heavy fire losses in this city's wholesale district have at last aroused concern in civic circles, and an investigation is likely to be made. A meeting of the City Council has been called for to-day, and the business will probably consist of the appointment of a commission to make full enquiry into the recent fires.

In spite of the installation of an expensive high-pressure water works plant and the purchase of much modern equipment for the fire brigade, little advance is to be seen in the results attained in efforts to check fires in large buildings. Insurance men are reported as saying that the losses sustained represent seven times the amount of the premiums received on that class of business.

It Got Away.

It was a big fish, but it got away. Perhaps it would be better to say that the fishermen got away. The fish was a shark, thirty feet long, and it almost pulled the fishing schooner Albert Williard on a dangerous shoal. The boat was near George's bank, off the New England shore, when the shark came alongside. Captain Frank Dougherty ordered his men to throw harpoons into the shark's back, and they did so. They threw five harpoons and an ice pick, and all held fast. The shark started off at a great rate, dragging the heavy schooner at the ends of the harpoon lines as if it were a toy boat. After a two hour's fight with the "sea lawyer" the schooner was in danger of being drawn on a shoal, and so the lines were cut and the shark allowed to go.

A Good Idea in Hair Treatment

The trouble with most women's hair is that they won't take the time to give it proper treatment. If you want your hair to have that look of lustre and vitality, you must take care of it.

You cannot expect to have splendid hair if you simply run a comb through it in the morning—give it a dab on the outer edge with a brush—throw it into a braid—switch it around the head—jab in a few hair pins—and let it go at that.

Hair is like any other growing thing—it needs attention—it needs care—it needs thorough grooming regularly—not only the hair but the scalp.

If you have the time and patience you won't need any hair tonic—but most women haven't. The next best thing is Nyal's Hirsutone. It is the best thing offered to take the place of hours of combing and brushing.

Hirsutone literally revitalizes the neglected hair.

In artistic bottles $1.00 and 50c.

Looks Like Incendiarism.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 18.—Yarmouth had a three-alarm fire last night in the heart of the town, but it was reached in time, and the damage will not amount to more than $2,000. It was in the large building, formerly the Yarmouth Hotel, which is now occupied by Jews. At the time of the fire almost all the Jews were attending a Jewish wedding.

Flames were first noticed in the rooms of Samuel Lynch. When the fire was out it was found his stock, valued at $2,000, had disappeared and that the fire had started in a case containing rags saturated with kerosene. The bottle was still there. The police are investigating.

Christmas Eve.

Little snowflake children
Sleeping on the trees,
Hear, Mother Wind croons softly
And rocks them in the breeze.
The baby stars grow drowsy,
Their eyes go blink-a-blink.
'Tis time two little peepers
Were drowsy, too, I think.

Better let the sandman
Sprinkle them with sand.
Better jump into his boat
And sail to slumber land.
For Kriss himself is waiting
Till little peepers close,
And it's mighty cold up on the roof
For poor old Kriss' toes.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

TWO MORE ARE WANTED

Wishart and Lindsay Charged in BankCase.

New York Broker and Toronto Promoter Are Subject of Warrants Issued In Connection With Bank Failure—Shareholders and Creditors Meet and Demand Investigation—Dr. Nesbitt Still at Liberty.

Toronto, Jan. 18.—Exposing the fact that the now dead Farmers' Bank was based upon a fraud even before the granting of its charter from the Dominion Government, and that even that charter was obtained by a fraud, two more warrants are now known to be issued against those who had to do with the institution of the bank. Two new names are introduced and two further charges against Dr. Beattie Nesbitt are unearthed.

One warrant charges:

That George Wishart of New York, promoter; Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and W. R. Travers, did conspire, confederate and agree to steal from the Farmers' Bank of Canada the sum of $300,000.

The other charges:

That William J. Lindsay, with others, did in the year 1907 conspire, confederate and agree together to obtain the certificate of the Treasury Board under the Bank Act of Canada permitting the Farmers' Bank of Canada to commence banking in Canada.

The "others" mentioned in the last-mentioned warrant is said to refer to Dr. Beattie Nesbitt and W. R. Travers. The first warrant was issued on Saturday last, when the other warrant charging the doctor with signing false returns to the Government was issued. The warrant against Lindsay was issued upon information supplied by Travers after his last arraignment before he pleaded guilty on Tuesday, Jan. 10. It was sworn out the following day. This Lindsay warrant, following on the curator's announcement that the whole bank was founded upon fraud from its inception, is portentious.

Lindsay was the man who was the prime agent in the sale of the subscription stock. At the organization meeting of the directors it was found that certain persons supposed to be actively connected with the formation of the bank withdrew, and this left the subscription list deficient in amount.

"To overcome this," says Curator Clarkson, "it is said that certain subscriptions were added to the list, particularly one of $50,000 and dated ahead so as to make this subscription list appear regular and permit the obtaining of the certificate to do business."

A further explanation of the method by which the $250,000 cash from subscriptions and $500,000 subscriptions to stock, which is necessary for the granting of the certificate of the Treasury Board was obtained, follows, as made by the curator:

The sum of $211,000 was collected by subscriptions, $41,000 was forthwith paid out for expenses, leaving just $170,000. The sum of $80,000 was then borrowed upon subscription notes handed to Travers, and the $250,000 cash necessary was then complete. This sum was turned over to the receiver-general, and, as is the custom, $245,000 was later returned. The sum was deposited in the Traders' Bank to the credit, and $80,000 was then drawn out by check and transferred to the Trusts & Guarantee Co. on deposit for the Farmers' Banks. This was turned over to the Trusts & Guarantee Co. by three checks and the notes upon which the money had been advanced by the trust company were then returned to the bank. This left the bank with $170,000, and the subscribers' notes as its original capital.

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt still evades pursuit. If rumor had virtue the doctor would be a modern "Flying Dutchman," for he has been reported as being in widely different points both in Canada and the United States. It was said yesterday that Inspector of Detectives Walter Duncan had gone to Buffalo in search of him. But the inspector, when seen at his office, would not tell where he had been during the day nor would he make any statement as to the crown's action in the pursuit of the doctor or others.

It is known that Lindsay left his apartments in the Elliott House Annex and his office in the Canada Life Building very shortly after the suspension of the bank, and the police at first hoped to locate him in western Canada. This effort failed, and it is now thought that he is across the line.

Lindsay has been well-known in the city for a number of years. Some years ago he was associated with Herbert Capewell, recent mayoralty candidate, in a business in Church street, but that connection was severed long ago. Mrs. Lindsay is still in the city.

Lindsay is described by the police as from 40 to 45 years of age, 5 feet 8 or 9 inches tall, 180 pounds in weight, fresh or florid complexion, clean shaven, drooping mouth, round full face, slightly bald, square shoulders and a flashy dresser.

At the present time Lindsay has entered action against the bank for $10,000 and against Travers for $2,000 under the agreement by which he was engaged by Travers for the board of provisional directors to sell the stock of the bank. It was begun by his solicitor, J. R. L. Starr.

The usual quiet of the Farmers' Bank building was disturbed yesterday morning by the gathering of the creditors of the now defunct financial institution. The meeting was called for 11 a.m., but long before that time many creditors from all parts of Ontario, were present to obtain, if possible, some light in connection with the moneys they had placed in the bank.

The creditors listened attentively to the various items in the curator's lengthy interim report.

When Mr. Clarkson had concluded his statement, Mr. Hamilton Cassels moved "that the court be recommended to appoint Mr. Geoffrey Clarkson as permanent liquidator."

Mr. J. W. Gilmore, representing Elgin County creditors, seconded the motion, which carried unanimously.

The naming of a liquidator being the solo object of the meeting, a motion of adjournment was put and carried.

At a meeting of the Farmers' Bank shareholders yesterday afternoon, William Laidlaw, K.C., renewed his proposal made at the creditors' meeting in the morning, that a petition be sent to the Dominion Government, asking the appointment of a royal commission to investigate the bank's affairs.

It was decided to send Mr. Laidlaw and Mr. Elliott to Ottawa with the petition. The members of Parliament in the districts where there are branches of the bank will co-operate. In the meantime copies of the petition will be forwarded to each branch to obtain signatures.

Messrs. Laidlaw and Elliott refused to accept any money for expenses.

The sentiment of the meeting, which was well attended, seemed to be in favor of operating the Keeley mine, but no vote was taken.

Mr. Clarkson, who has been curator of the bank since its suspension, was appointed liquidator by unanimous vote of the shareholders. The statement of the bank's operations since its inception was again presented, but no discussion of its items occurred.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 18.—The Halifax Board of Trade yesterday unanimously passed a resolution asking the Government of Nova Scotia to confer with the City Council of Halifax in regard to granting assistance to the drydock company, to enable it to enlarge the dock at this port to 800 feet. It is now about 500 feet long, and the company proposes extending it to 650 feet, but the board is anxious for the greater extension. A move was also made to have Halifax harbor and its terminals placed in the hands of a federal commission, the present railway and spring shipping terminals being spoken of as antiquated and inadequate, not only for the requirements of the near future, but also for the present.

Pensacola, Fla., Jan. 18.—Mutiny reigned aboard the Italian ship Chill in Pensacola harbor from Monday noon until two o'clock yesterday afternoon, when peace was restored. It was reported that one of the officers was killed, but this was later denied. An Italian sailor, however, is known to have suffered a fractured skull, and several others were less seriously injured. The mutiny resulted from efforts of the first mate to stop a free for all fight among the sailors. Hatchets and belaying pins were used freely.

MACLEAN VOTES ALONE

Reduced Rates Campaign Does Not Arouse House.

Member For South York Puts Forward First of His Resolutions In Favor of Making C.P.R. Divide Up Some of Its Profits, But Is Only One to Vote Aye—Mr. Borden Says Laws Should Be Enforced.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—W. F. Maclean of South York has fired the first gun in his artillery of radicalism, of the mounting of which he gave the House of Commons due warning last week. Mr. Maclean selected the Canadian Pacific Railway as his initial target, and availed himself of a Government proposal to go into supply to launch a resolution, under which the House declared its intention of "taking steps to ascertain the rights of the public to a general reduction of tariff, because of the provisions in the act ratifying the agreement with the company, or in any other act."

Mr. Maclean adduced evidence to establish the fact that the company was in a prosperous financial condition, and declared the present tariffs relative to freight, express, telegraph, telephone, electrical power, water charges on steamers, fares on sleepers, parlor cars and diners—a cosmopolitan arraignment—"a gross injustice to the people of Canada, and a reflection on the honor of the House."

Mr. Maclean argued for an enforcement of public rights under Federal law. "It is the duty of this Parliament to enforce its own laws," was his dictum.

The response of Hon. Mr. Graham, having complimented the mover on his energy, industry and force, reviewed the history of the railway, its association with the Government and the public, the various contracts and arrangements which had been concluded from time to time, and directed attention to the fact that the Government had created the Railway Commission and bestowed upon it the widest powers to investigate and deal with such charges as should be made. The Minister referred to the investigation made into the express rates, and the important public work being done by the commission. "This board," said he, "is composed of able men. No part of the Government does greater credit to it, and I do not believe Parliament would be well advised to take out of its hands any part of the complete jurisdiction we have given them."

"The Minister is right. Anyone can go to the Railway Commission with complaints and have them thoroughly investigated," was the comment of Hon. John Haggart, former Minister of Railways.

In submitting his resolution anent the C.P.R. tariffs Mr. Maclean pointed out that in the original agreement with the Government it was provided in recognition of concessions granted that when the income of the road exceeded 10 per cent. of the money invested in the undertaking the Government should have the right to obtain a reduction in rates.

The debate was continued at night. R. L. Borden in the course of his address pointed out that while the railway in question was at present subject to the jurisdiction of the Railway Board, it was a voluntary subjection, and the railway had, through its solicitors, reserved the right to withdraw.

Mr. Borden failed to understand why the mover of the resolution had singled out only one railway. There was no information to show that its rates were higher than those of other lines. In concluding Mr. Borden said he desired to serve notice on the Government that unless immediate action were taken along the lines he suggested he would submit a resolution calling upon Parliament to place upon the statute books legislation imposing upon the Government the obligation of seeing that all Federal laws passed for the benefit and advantage of the whole country, such as that of last session dealing with combines, are enforced in the interest of the public.

"Thank heaven I have made one convert," observed Mr. Maclean amid laughter, commenting on Mr. Borden's speech.

Mr. Maclean rejected the suggestion of Mr. E. M. Macdonald to withdraw his resolution at the conclusion of the debate, and the vote was taken. The member for South York alone voted aye.

A Soldier's Suicide.

St. Stephen, N.B., Jan. 18.—Quartermaster Sergt. Loangille of the R.C.R., Fredericton, who had been detailed to instruct the public school teachers in the newly-introduced physical training, ended his life here last night by shooting.

No cause is given for the act. He was discovered lying upon the bed in his room. A Colt revolver of 45 calibre was clasped in his right hand, the bullet having entered the roof of his mouth and torn its way through the skull, lodging in the wall at the head of his bed. His remains are to be sent to Fredericton.

SENATE ON DIVORCE

Senator Power Says They Should Be Hard to Get.

Second Thought Enters In, He Says, When It Is Necessary to Approach Parliament For a Separation—Senator Ross of Halifax Says the Divorce Committee of the Upper Chamber Is Too Expensive.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—A discussion upon divorce was the feature of the sitting of the Senate yesterday. On a motion for returns respecting divorce Senator Power said everyone, no doubt, felt that the ideal state of society would be one where there was no divorce, and all would agree that the less divorce the better. Prince Edward Island had never had a divorce, and the reason was that the divorce courts of that province was really the lieutenant-governor in council, and less accessible than the ordinary court, which some persons wished to have established throughout Canada.

Courts multiplied divorces. In England there had been great increase in divorce since 1857, when the divorce court was established. In the United States the increase had been phenomenal, so there was now one divorce for every 12 marriages, and at the present rate the proportion would soon be one to six. In France, since the establishment of divorce courts the increase had been so rapid that it looks as though the record of the United States would be exceeded.

No one would want Canadians to travel the same road and at the same speed as the United States and France, but that would follow the establishment of divorce courts throughout Canada.

In the provinces where there were divorce courts, divorces were more numerous in proportion to the population on the whole than in provinces which had to resort to Parliament for divorce.

There was a certain amount of deliberation in regard to approaching Parliament for divorce which gave sober second thought an opportunity to assert itself with people who felt aggrieved with each other. Perhaps the expense had something to do with it, though the cost of presenting a case to the Senate was not much more expensive than the process before a court.

Senator Cloran commended the views expressed by Senator Power. No question more affected the welfare of a nation than this question of the separation of man and wife, the breaking up of home, and the making of children orphans before their time. In his opinion the more difficult divorce was made the better. He advocated an enactment which would prevent the remarriage of the offending one of a divorce pair.

Senator Ross of Halifax criticized the Senate divorce committee as a rich man's court, where the cost of obtaining an act of Parliament prohibited the poor man from seeking relief. In the first place, there was a fee of $200, and that was only the beginning of the expense. The divorce judge of Nova Scotia had informed him that divorces had been obtained in that province at so low a cost as $80, and the cost had never been over $150.

Senator Wilson did not agree with Senator Ross, he did not think it a good policy to cheapen the process of obtaining divorce, and thereby make them more numerous.

To Have Grain Commission.

Ottawa, Jan. 18.—There is a well-defined rumor to-day that the Government is about to introduce a bill covering certain of the demands made by the farmers who waited on Sir Wilfrid Laurier last month. The report, which can be traced to no authoritative source, but which persists, nevertheless, has it that the bill will be introduced by either Frank Oliver or the Premier himself next week, that it will provide for a Grain Commission of three, for severe penalties for mixing different grades of grain, and empowering the commission to expropriate elevators when necessity arises.

Crashed Into Bridge.

St. Catharines, Jan. 18.—As the result of a coasting accident which occurred at Thorold, Vincent Battle, son of Matthew Battle of that town, is at the General Hospital suffering from serious internal injuries. He, together with his cousin, Miss Tillie Battle and Miss Alice Dooley of Buffalo, and Leonard Battle, were coasting on the hill, which is quite steep, and had gained good speed, and when a wagon was noticed approaching, the sleigh ran out of its course and crashed into the side of the canal bridge. Battle, who was steering, was rendered unconscious. Miss Dooley sustained a sprained ankle.

Close Squeeze For Lodge.

Boston, Jan. 18.—Although backed by eight majority in the upper branch of the Legislature, U. S. Senator Henry Cabot Lodge failed by three votes to obtain a re-endorsement in the House yesterday, but if there is no shift during the night, the joint convention to-day will send him back to Washington for a fourth term, with just the vote necessary for a choice.

Wants Home-Built Ships.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 18.—The Minister of Commerce has proposed a bill to encourage the shipbuilding industry. The bill provides for the payment of the premiums for vessels built in Russia of Russian materials, and for the cessation of the free import of foreign-built ships.

FARM LABORERS AND DOMESTICS

Some Interesting Facts Concerning Salvation Army Immigration Work

Commissioner Coombs and Colonel Lamb, Director of the Army's Emigration Work, have just returned from an extended tour, making arrangements for the placing of immigrants that will come to Canada under the auspices of the Salvation Army in the Spring. These will principally consist of laborers for farms and domestics. During the past year The Army has arranged the immigration of about ten thousand persons to this country, and arrangements are being perfected for the bringing of a larger number during the next season. A number of Canadian officers will shortly be visiting the Old Land for the purpose of selecting, advising and conducting parties.

The immigrants that come to this country through the Army are of a highly desirable class, being specially selected by experienced agents who are familiar with the class of workers that Canadian farming conditions call for.

The ten thousand immigrants of last year were selected from over 100 000 applicants. It will thus be seen how severe is the process of selection.

Farmers and others in Ontario who desire to procure labor for next spring should at once get in touch with The Salvation Army, as we understand there is a great demand for The Army's immigrants. Write for Immigration and Colonization Department, James and Albert streets Toronto.

DRAINAGE SURVEYS FOR THE FARMERS

The work of the Department of Agriculture in Stirling, having become too broad in its scope for one man to properly, the Government has seen fit to appoint an assistant, who comes in the person of Mr. E. B. Palmer of Norwich, Ont. Having spent considerable time at drainage survey work under the direction of the Department of Physics at the O. A. C. Guelph, Mr. Palmer will be a valuable adjunct to the department at Stirling. Farmers requiring drainage surveys will consult their own interests by writing to or calling at the office in Stirling and getting plans ready for the coming season's drainage operations. The fact that the tile factories, are unable to fill the winter orders indicates that a great deal of drainage is to be done. Why not have it done right? It is hoped that a ditching machine will be secured for this district this year and that much of the best land will be reclaimed by a thorough system of under drainage.

The Belleville District Holstein Breeders' Club purpose holding a banquet in Belleville in the course of a couple of weeks, immediately following the meeting of the executive of the club. It is quite probable that an annual dispersion sale will be inaugurated at this meeting to take place in the spring.

When the weather is not too cold one may see the old apple trees shedding their bark these days by watching the demonstration orchards. With apples at $8 per barrel it Montreal it makes the orchardists sit up and think—and then get busy. Scrape, prune, spray, cultivate them this year. IT WILL PAY.

NEW SITE FOR TORONTO ASYLUM

It is undestood that the Ontario Government is planning the removal of the Toronto Asylum to a locality where the cottage system may be adopted. When ready to place the 35 acres of the present site on the market the Massey-Harris company will be likely to be keen bidders.

An intimation is said to have been given Hon. W. J. Hanna that the company would pay in the neighborhood of a million dollars for the land. The company has in view the installation of an extensive electric plant.

BELLEVILLE WON IN TANKARD PRIMARY

The Local Curlers Won The District and Will Play in Tankard Games at Toronto

The local curlers were naturally jubilant last night and they had good reasons for being in that frame of mind, owing to the fact that the two rinks won out by a good margin in the preliminary for the Ontario tankard competition. The clubs represented in this group were Cobourg, Napanee, Kingston and Belleville, each of which had two rinks in the struggle for supremacy. As the result of the contest, Belleville is now privileged to go to Toronto to play in the tankard competition when the date of the same has been announced. The four sheets of ice were in excellent condition for the matches, and the interest manifested was apparent from the large number of spectators who were present, including several of the fair sex. Although the match in the evening was not completed until near the midnight hour, many remained until the final end had been played. Both in the afternoon and evening contests the two local rinks played a fine steady game and won quite handily, both rinks being up on their competitors in the two games. In the afternoon they were pitted against Cobourg and won out by a score of 40 to 27 shots. In the evening Napanee and Belleville were pitted against each other and at the finish the score was 33 to 24 in favor of the local rinks. In the evening contest some fine plays were made, not only by the winning rinks, but also by the losers. It was a most interesting game from the spectator's point of view.

The players and the points scored by the various rinks were as follows:

PRO. HOCKEYISTS HAVE LEFT TOWN

There may be no more professional hockey in Belleville this year. Irving's aggregation went to Trenton last night and played a tie game—5-5; but they did not "come back." They proceeded westward and the players will be distributed among the various teams west of Toronto. Considering the poor showing they made "they never will be missed."

Nor is there likely to be much, if any more, O. H. A. hockey in town during the remainder of the season. The Intermediates, who had a fair chance of winning in this district, have gone out of business, owing to serious inuries received by two of their players in the games with Trenton and Cobourg. And the Ontario Juniors, although they have two wins against Picton, are almost certain to be put out of the running at Picton to-night. All that remains, then, for the fans is the City League, in which there may be some good play.

It is just possible, however, that the Trenton professional team may be transferred to this city, as a movement is on foot to have this done. We are informed that Picton and Port Hope are desirous of retaining their teams and of having a three team league in this district, namely Belleville, Picton and Port Hope.

The Toronto Telegram of yesterday says: Pete Charlton went through today for Brantford with an eastern pro. hockey team which will settle in Brantford. They are: Cross (Belleville), goal; point, Debeau (Trenton); cover, Charlton (Picton); rover, Dusty (Picton); centre, Mallen (Trenton); right, Dusome (Belleville); left, Decorrie (Picton); extra hands, Chipchase (Trenton), Sanford (Belleville).

The Belleville Intermediates have defaulted both games to Peterboro'.

It is a toss up whether Milton or Picton has the younger bunch of Junior O.H.A. players. Picton has two 15-year-old kids in Hare and Hodgins. Milton has one 16-year-old and two in the 17-year list. Belleville, too, has some real junior Juniors.

NOTHING DID HIM GOOD

EXCEPT "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

HARDWICKE, N.B. JAN. 17th, 1910.

"Chronic Constipation was the complaint I suffered with for years, and my general health was miserable as a result of this disease. I was treated by physicians without the slightest benefit, and I tried all kinds of pills but nothing did me any good.

I saw the letter written by our Senator, Hon. John Costigan, in favor of "Fruit-a-tives" so I tried it. The effect was marvellous, and now I am entirely well from the Chronic Constipation from which I suffered for many years. My general health is once more excellent, thanks to "Fruit-a-tives."

A FAMOUS RACE.

The greatest race ever run on the Mississippi was between the Natchez, a boat built in Cincinnati and commanded by Captain T. P. Leathers, and a New Albany boat, the Robert E. Lee, under Captain John W. Cannon. There was spirited rivalry between the two vessels, and when the Natchez made the fastest time on record between New Orleans and St. Louis (1,278 miles in 3 days 21 hours 58 minutes) Captain Cannon resolved to beat it. He engaged the steamer Frank Pargoud and several fuel boats and arranged for them to meet him at various points up the river with wood and coal. Then he had his boat cleared of all her upper works likely to catch the wind or make the vessel heavier.

On Thursday, June 20, 1870, at 4:45 p. m., the Robert E. Lee steamed out of New Orleans. The Natchez followed five minutes later. The race had been advertised in advance and was now awaited with gathering interest at all the river towns. Large crowds were assembled at Natchez, Vicksburg, Helena and other large places.

Between Cairo and St. Louis the Natchez afterward claimed to have lost seven hours and one minute on account of a fog and broken machinery. The Robert E. Lee, however, was not delayed and arrived in St. Louis thirty-three minutes ahead of the previous record established by her competitor. Fifty thousand people from the housetops, the levee and the docks of other steamers welcomed the winner as she steamed into port. Captain Cannon was the lion of the hour. The business men gave a banquet in his honor.—Travel Magazine.

The Inevitable.

DISTRESSING HEADACHES

Headaches are largely the result of disordered kidneys.

Mrs. Hall, 84, St. Flora street, St Thomas, Ont., says:—"I suffered for years with headaches of a most distressing nature. They would come on me suddenly, and would last for days at a time. These were usually accompanied by spells of dizziness that would leave me unable to attend to my house duties. My back was weak and caused me much suffering through the night. I had doctored for years but all to no avail. Nothing benefited me and my condition got worse and worse. I learned of Booth's Kidney Pills. One box gave me a complete and lasting cure. I have not had a headache or dizzy spell since and I feel like a new person."

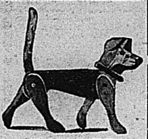
RECIPES — FASHIONS

Woman's World

GOOD FORM — CHIT CHAT

HER GRASS GREEN DOG.

The Newest Pet of the Modish Woman.



HE'S EASILY BROKEN IN.

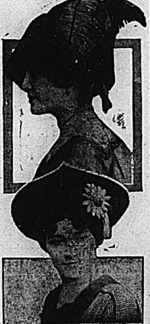
Fashionable women who have lately returned from abroad are appearing in public carrying a grass green wooden dog with tail rampant. The arrogant pug and becurled poodle, the pedigreed "Pom" and bat eared bull, until now the companions of woman's walks and drives, must hang diminished heads. A pup whose form betrays no racial peculiarities, whose ancestral line is a hopeless blur of misalliances—a mutt carved out of unresponsive wood—has come to be "mamma's darling," to be hugged and dandled till his painted skin wears off and makes mamma's coat look like Irish sealskin.

The green dog, like predecessors in the world of pets, is an importation. He has traveled to America in so many trunks of the returning society belles that the customs inspectors are getting used to him. The green dog thus far has succeeded in defying the tariff. He is a native of Brussels, where he adorned the ill fated exposition. In the old town tavern, known for its cooking, Le Chien Vert stood. His eyeballs blazed at intervals.

Because of the favor the green dog found with the public smaller sizes were made and sold by the thousand. Women of Europe adopted them as the plaything of the moment. Now on all incoming steamers the green dog is a legalized stowaway amid glittering gowns and Parisian fallals.

Clerical Shapes In Millinery.

Many of the smartest millinery modes are borrowed from clerical head coverings. One of the hats illustrated certainly suggests strongly in outline the hats worn by cardinals of the Roman Catholic church. No trimming is used on this model, which is of light blue velvet, save a dull gilt ornament.



SMART IN WOMEN WHO CAN WEAR THEM.

The other piece of up to date millinery is in a rich tone of brown velours. The brim is outlined with several rows of narrow dull gold braid. Two wired ostrich plumes, one of flame color and the other matching the velours, form the trimming.

Helen Taft Shops In Runabout.

Helen Taft, daughter of the president, has put aside the smart trap and pair of bays given to her by Admiral Dewey and has learned to operate an automobile. She goes around the national capital in a dark blue electric runabout. Miss Taft is an expert whip. She and her mother devote several of the morning hours each week to shopping. They personally buy all the material for their dresses. Miss Taft uses her runabout only for errands. She adheres to her early habits of walking for exercise, and every afternoon she trudges three or four miles out into the country. Usually she spins her electric to the confines of the city, where an attendant guards it until she and her companion get back to the starting point.

New Telephone Etiquette.

Do you use the telephone?

Then you will be interested in the following extract from a pertinent article on courtesy between telephone users by Frank J. Wisse, which appeared in the Telephone Engineer recently:

"Would you rush into an office or up to the door of a residence and blurt out, 'Hello, hello—whom am I talking to?' and then, when you receive a reply, follow up your wild, discourteous salutation with: 'I don't want you; get out of my way. I want to talk with Mr. Jones.' Would you? That is merely a sample of the impolite and impatient conversations that the telephone transmits many times a day.

"There is a most agreeable mode of beginning a telephone conversation which many people are now adopting, because it saves useless words and is at the same time courteous and direct. It runs thus:

"The telephone bell rings, and the person answering it says, 'Morton & Co., Mr. Baker speaking.' The person calling then says, 'Mr. Wood of Curtis & Sons wishes to speak with Mr. White.'

"When Mr. White picks up the receiver he knows that Mr. Wood is on the other end of the line, and without any unnecessary and undignified 'hellos' he at once greets him with the refreshingly courteous salutation, 'Good morning, Mr. Wood.' That savors of the genial handshake that Mr. Wood would have received had he called in person upon Mr. White."

The Well Behaved Hat.

"How do you manage to keep your hat on so straight?" demanded a nervous looking woman of her friend. "You don't stop at every other plate glass window to adjust it, and yet it never gets awry. How do you manage? Mine has all the trimmings on one side, and it keeps slipping down over that ear. I feel it falling, falling, and in spite of six hatpins it keeps on falling until it drives me crazy."

The other woman smiled serenely. "I have a fine scheme," she said. "I sew little lead weights in under the hat brim on the untrimmed side, and those balance the weight of the trimming on the other side and keep the two sides even, so that one cannot pull the other down. You can get the leads at any dry goods store. They are sold usually for weights in the bottom of tailored coats. I have them in all my hats now, and it is so comforting not to have to worry about whether my hat is on straight or not."

Be Sociable Though Married.

To simply live alone, with no provision for the gratification of the social instincts, is apt to prove too severe a strain upon the reserve forces of even the happiest marriage. There is some excuse outside the home wherein no thought is given to social pleasure, while the wife is apt to grow petty and personal and so less attractive if she shuts herself away from intercourse with others. This dropping out is very easy, but even when prosperity comes and large social functions are possible it is too late to gain that most valuable possession, friendship, which is entirely independent of financial success. To have and to hold a place in the social life of the world is not only the right but the duty of the young wife who desires to have a home in its truest and best sense.

Better give away your time than spend it foolishly.

Humor and Philosophy

By DUNCAN M. SMITH

PERT PARAGRAPHS.

THERE is only one woman who makes anything by resorting to tears, and she is the one who appeals to her average male acquaintance.

Even when a humorist dies it is hard to get his acquaintances to take him seriously.

A man is apt to think that well spent money is that that his wife didn't get.

Ever notice how smoothly things seem to run that have never had the benefit of your advice?

An empty head is seldom either heavy or stupid.

Having a good time is rather expensive when times are bad.

It is being a good fellow that tends to render him good for nothing.

The second time a man marries he can't plead either inexperience or illusion to account for it.

Anybody would like to be honest, but everybody makes it so hard for him.

There are plenty of us who have good principles that have no interest for us.

Some women find it so difficult to be pretty that it makes them cross all the time.

A hobo is a man who is too lazy to work and whose sense of fair play has caused him to give over caring much for the products of labor.

Saving Quality.

In trying patiently to climb
The man need not be dense
Who doesn't think it is a crime
To show some common sense,
Who ventures in that way to plod,
Although some folks may call him odd.

For common sense will pull him through
When genius calls for aid.
It will assist him to pursue
His calling or his trade,
And then the fickle ones will say
He is not made of common clay.

Not making his achievements hum
With clatter and display,
But doing little things that come
Along from day to day,
On duty striving to attend
And thus accomplishing his end.

Thus, to the very great surprise
Of those who love to knock,
Above the level he will rise,
And up will go his stock,
And when returns begin to show
They will declare, "I told you so."

Don't be afraid to limber out
Your stock of common sense.
When genius shakes its head in doubt
Just tell it to go hence.
Depend on it through thick and thin,
For in the long run it must win.

Strong on Utility.

"We ought to do something nice for Senator Jabbs after all he has done for the country."

"That's so. What would you suggest?"

"We might give him a loving cup."

"What is that good for?"

"It is fine to look at."

"I know, but couldn't we expand the idea and make it a bathtub?"

Getting Used to It.

"Why are you so disturbed?"

"I am in love."

"What!"

"Fact. And the first time too."

"Oh, just wait until you reach the stage of your second marriage and you will take it quite as a thing of course."

After, Not Before.

To lie in state is counted great,
A special honor giving,
And is for those, you may suppose,
Who do not lie while living.

VARICOSE VEINS CURED

Confined to His Home for Weeks.

"Heavy work, severe straining and evil habits in youth brought on Varicose Veins. When I worked hard the aching would become severe and I was often laid up for a week at a time. My family physician told me an operation was my only hope—but I dreaded it. I tried several specialists, but soon found out all they wanted was my money. I commenced to look upon all doctors as little better than rogues. One day my boss asked me why I was off work so much and I told him my condition. He advised me to consult Drs. Kennedy & Kennedy, as he had taken treatment from them himself and knew they were square and skillful. I wrote them and got THE NEW METHOD TREATMENT. My progress was somewhat slow and during the first month's treatment I was somewhat discouraged. However, I continued treatment for three months longer and was rewarded with a complete cure. I could only earn $12 a week in a machine shop before treatment, now I am earning $21 and never loose a day. I wish all sufferers knew of your valuable treatment.

SHOT DEAD IN STORE

Lawyer's Wife Killed a Saleswoman Before Panic-stricken Customers

FORT WORTH, Texas, Jan. 18.—Shooting with coolness and steady aim, Mrs. T. M. Brooks, wife of a prominent attorney, fired five bullets into the body of Mrs. Mary Binford, in a crowded department store to-day Each shot struck the victim and Mrs Binford died almost instantly.

Walking into the store Mrs. Brooks spoke pleasantly to persons she knew on the first floor and proceeded to the second where Mrs. Binford was employed as saleswoman. As she stepped from the elevator she asked for Mrs. Binford and as the latter approached Mrs. Brooks drew an old fashioned revolver from her muff.

The women grappled and in the scuffle the weapon was discharged the ball passing through the hand of Mrs. Binford. Freeing herself Mrs. Brooks stepped back and deliberately taking aim fired four times, striking her victim in the head.

As terrified men and women rushed for exits, trampling over one another in the narrow aisles, and the limp form of Mrs. Binford was crumpling to the floor, Mrs. Brooks fired the last time, the ball entering behind the ear and coming out at the top of her head.

Mrs. Brooks replaced the pistol in her muff and walked out of the store unmolested. She made her way on foot to her husband's office, handed him the pistol without explanation; said, "I'm sorry," and fainted. Both she and her husband refused to make a statement. She was arrested waived preliminary trial and was released on bond of $10,000.

Before obtaining a divorce from her husband two years ago, Mrs. Binford was wealthy and popular. No cause for the killing is known.

KETCHELL'S SLAYER NOW ON TRIAL

Middleweight Champion's Murderer Pleads the Unwritten Law

MARSHFIELD, Mo., Jan. 18.—That the "unfritten law" will be invoked in the defence of Walter A. Dipley and Goldie Smith, charged with the murder of Stanley Ketchel, middleweight champion pugilist, there is little doubt, as George R. Clay, attorney for Dipley and the woman, spent considerable time to-day looking up the statute covering common-law marriages. Many of the witnesses and all the attorneys in the case arrived here to-day to hake preparations for the trial.

Neither Dipley nor the woman was brought into court to-day, but they will be formally arrainged to-morrow morning before Judge C. H. Skinker.

Mrs. Julia Ketchel, of Grand Rapids, Mich., mother of Stanley, is expected to arrive here to-morrow accompanied by her son, Leon.

A moving picture showman here has been taking advantage of the trial to present scenes on the Dickerson ranch, where the tragedy occurred. Judge Skinker issued a court order to-day prohibiting pictures of the defendants and the ranch from being shown on the ground that it might disqualify jurors and perhaps have some tendency to create sentiment one way or the other.

THE C. N. R. IS CENTRALIZING

The General Traffic Manager Will Have His Headquarters at Toronto

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 18.—George H. Shaw, former traffic manager of the Canadian Northern at Winnipeg, has been appointed general traffic manager with headquarters at Toronto. He will have entire charge of all traffic on both the railway and steamship lines of the company.

This is a step toward the centralization of the Canadian Northern management which will all be conducted from Toronto as soon as the various lines through Canada are linked up. Other appointments are contemplated including that of a general manager.

Mr. Shaw joined the Canadian Northern in 1901, coming from the Canadian Pacific.

OYSTER FARMERS AND HOW THEY WORK

Harrow Up Star-Fish—Interesting Account of Oyster Trade by Expert of Forty Years' Experience

"Do you know that oyster farmers have to be just as much on the lookout and watch their crops just as carefully as any other farmers? Well it is a fact. They actually harrow, or rather sweep, the oyster beds every day, and what they gather up is a great mass of the enemies of the shelled food—star-fish."

So said an expert oyster-man recently, who for 40 years has been engaged in the trade. He is Mr. Thomas Mosley, of 201 Spadina Avenue, Toronto. As a boy he began in this work in England.

STAR-FISH ENEMY.

"You see," said Mr. Mosley, "the star-fish is an inveterate enemy of the oyster. You know the star formation, the five points or 'fingers' it has? Well, these fingers will fasten themselves around the shell of the oyster and wait patiently until the latter opens to get food. Then the star-fish just inserts itself in the shell—literally turns itself inside out to do so, kills the oyster, eats the fleshy part, and then is out ready for more.

"But above the oyster farmer is working. He has a gasoline launch with two long arms attached to the sides. These arms have attached to them long strips of cotton waste like a mop or broom, and can be raised or lowered at will by mean of pulleys. As the launch steams along the mop is swept over the oyster beds and entangles the murderous star-fish in its meshes. Then the pulley brings it up, the fish are dropped into cauldrons of boiling water, made deader than door-nails, flung overboard, and the process repeated."

SPAWN IN AUGUST.

Asked about the culture of the bivalves, Mr. Mosley gave a graphic picture of the surface of the water in the vicinity of oyster beds at the spawning time, which is in August.

Each oyster will produce millions of eggs or spawn. This spawn always rises to the surface, and here meets its first enemies in the shape of fish, which snap it up as greedily as do pigs the food from their troughs. That which escapes lies in the warm sun for perhaps twelve hours before any change is visible in it. At the end of 24 hours tiny dark specks are to be seen—the embryo oyster which then becomes "spat" to the initiated. Away down below, six, eight, or ten fathoms deep, the bed has been prepared for the reception of the spat. The best "farmers" form the bed of clean, white oyster shells.

SPAT SINKS SLOWLY.

Now the spat is ready to sink. Down it goes slowly, so slowly that it takes twelve hours to sink twelve inches; but finally it reaches its new abiding place, attaches itself to the shells, and like the turnip in Longfellow's poem just "grows and grows" unless a gourmandish and ghoulish star-fish decides that it cannot get along without that particular oyster for its dinner. For four years the oyster has to grow before it is marketable, although at two years it may be used as food.

"In the old day," said Mr. Mosley, "the growers had to 'tong' the oysters, that is lift them into boats by way of tongs and baskets when they were gathered. For that reason the oyster beds were then perhaps but a fathom or so deep. To-day everything is done in a scientific way, and huge steam dredges over the beds bring up bushels of oysters at a time."

When the tiny molecules of the spat attach themselves to the bottom, to the clean shells, crushed rocks or pebbles, and begin to form a shell, this is known as a "set" or "strike." One shell may have anywhere from ten to a hundred young oysters attached.

"OYSTERS ON TREES" TRUE.

"You have heard the old saying that in Chesapeake Bay the oysters grow on trees," went on Mr. Mosley. "It is almost literally true, or was some years ago. You see the spawn of the oyster does not stay on the bottom of the ocean. It rises to the top, but has to have the sun play up on it for some hours, as I previously said, before the 'spat' is ready to sink. Down there in Maryland and 'Ole Virginny' the darkeys knew the value of the oyster. They, too, knew that once the spat sank on the muddy bottom of the bay the tide would wash it away. Therefore the uncles and mammies and all the little pickaninnies would go to work and get them in the water, and behold the oysters had a lodging and throve and

CARRIE NATION SERIOUSLY ILL

EUREKA SPRINGS, Ark., Jan. 18.—Mrs. Carrie Nation, who twenty years ago began smashing barrooms and in ten years made herself known to the world, was so ill to-day she expressed the fear that her career as a temperance worker is over. She was stricken by nervous collapse in her home, and became worse steadily throughout the day.

Mrs. Nation was living with her husband, David Nation, in Medicine Lodge, Barber County, Ky., when she attained general notice by attacking Wichita saloons with a hatchet. She smashed bottles, kegs, glasses, bar mirrors, furniture and windows. In a short time she had a corps of hatchet women at word, and Kansas liquor sellers began to worry. She extended her work to Topeka and to larger places. Thousands of columns were filled with stories of her raids. She visited Chicago, where she was received coldly, but soon the lakesiders realized she was much in earnest. Not only did she destroy barrooms, but she attacked nude statues and paintings. She made one man put on a sunbonnet and a Mother Hubbard gown on a marble nymph.

The reformer has a strong face, with a square jaw and a massive forehead. She always dresses plainly, and has liked to be called "a home defender." Neither fines nor imprisonment ever discouraged her aggressive hostility to barrooms.

A LADY WAS STAR WITNESS

Mrs. Asquith Testifies in Notable Society Slander Case in London

LONDON, Jan. 18.—Mrs. Asquith, wife of the Prime Minister, was the star witness yesterday at the hearing of the suit of Mrs. Horace West against her father-in-law, Sir Algerno West, who is charged with slander in telling various members of English society that his daughter-in-law was responsible for her separation from her husband, thus causing Mrs. West to be cut socially and her name to be stricken from the Court List.

The Premier's wife caused a sensation when she testified, after it had been brought out that Mrs. West had been accused of spending money too freely, that "extravagance is usually the best passport to the ranks of high society."

There was a heated dispute between judge and counsel as to whether Mrs. Asquith could be regarded as an expert upon this question, but the matter was finally left in abeyance.

Mrs. Asquith admitted however when under cross examination that extravagance served to be a passport only when there was nothing alleged or suggested against the woman.

Mrs. West declared that she had been cut by the specially elect and had been excluded from Court because of trouble with her husband.

Mrs. Horace West secured a verdict for $6,250 damages against her father-in-law, Sir Algernon West.

THERE WAS A NAIL IN HIS LUNG

Boy's Illness Had Been Diagnosed as Pneumonia and Typhoid

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Blissfully ignorant of the fact that the most skillful surgeons in New York are studying to find a way of operating on him safely to cure him of his "pneumonia," 5-year-old Vincent Maginn, of 180 West Sixty-fourth St., plays one week in the streets and the next in an hospital where he is watched by staff members.

Vincent is the son of Peter Maginn, a printer. Four years ago the child became ill, and at times it was difficult for him to breathe. A physician diagnosed the case as pneumonia. In due time Vincent was pronounced cured. Three months afterward he went through a similar illness. Thereafter he had like attacks about four times a year.

The illness recurred last August, and his mother took Vincent to Bellevue, where once before his trouble had been termed pneumonia. The second time it was decided he had typhoid. He was placed in Ward B5 in care of Dr. Hill. The doctor, hearing of the frequent recurrences of illness, studied Vincent closely more than two weeks and became convinced that "typhoid" and "pneumonia" did not explain the trouble. The constant cough puzzled him.

Judging there was bronchial obstruction, he had X-ray photographs taken of Vincent's lungs and air passages.

The amazing discovery was made that the real cause of the frequent attacks of "pneumonia" was a 2-inch wire nail lodged in a lung where the bronchial tube entered.

Where there is such an obstruction the patient rarely recovers. But prominent surgeons, on consultation, decided after many weeks that an operation might be risked in the child's case. But they found that special instruments were necessary for the operation. There were made in Germany at the expense of the men interested in the case. They were sent in due time and the boy again was brought from his home to Bellevue for the operation, but just then he suffered another attack of his "pneumonia."

The special instruments are still unused and Vincent still carries the nail in his lungs. A wealthy friend of the family has taken an interest in the case, and as a result Presbyterian Hospital surgeons are trying to find a method by which Vincent may be relieved. Meantime, he plays around, ignorant of the fact that great doctors do not know what to do for him.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Cheer up, Ontarios, you may have a fair chance next year against the Frontenacs, provided they are not again allowed to renew their youth

Had not Belleville's Junior hockeyist had a first-class goal tender in their game with the Frontenacs at Kingston last night, the score might have been such as to stagger humanity.

Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, despite his big bulk, seems to be as lively as the Irishman's flea. In Muskoka one day in Baltimore the next day, a third day in Boston. Where next? In Mexico?

The City Council of Kingston will petition the Legislature to change the date of the local municipal elections from the first Monday in January to the first Monday of February. This is a movement which every municipality in the province ought to join.

The Kingston Whig, although strongly Grit, is not enamored of the Canadian navy. It says: "If some of the best boats of the American navy are out of date, (and lacking effectiveness, in five years), where will our Niobe and Rainbow be five years hence? It is a pertinent, (may be, an impertinent), enquiry."

Canada's navy will be slow in building. The first of the new vessels will not be ready before 1914, or two years after Australia's fleet is in commission. Bourassa and the Nationalists, who object to Canada contributing to Imperial defence, ought to be satisfied with that as the Laurier programme is as close an equivalent to nothing as could well be devised.

Mr. W. B. Northrup, in the House of Commons last week brought to notice a curious "bull" made in the notice addressed by Hon. Charles Murphy to the employees of the Printing Bureau. The notice declared that employees coming to work intoxicated would be suspended for a week, for a second offence they would be discharged. It added: "This regulation shall not apply to those who do not use liquor."

A tribute to the leader of the Opposition, Mr. R. L. Borden, has recently been paid by a leading Liberal. The member for South Huron, who is a pronounced Liberal says of Mr. Borden: "He is a gentleman in every sense of the term. It is no personal profit to him to be in politics. He has ability to adorn his own profession, and were he to devote himself to that he would make five times more money than he receives for being leader of the Opposition."

Liberals will tell the truth about Liberals will tell the truth about their party occasionally. Letters have been received in the Quebec Legislative Assembly, in which Mr. Carron, Minister of Agriculture is represented as saying that with $5000 the constituency of Levis could at the time of writing have been carried against anyone but the Hon. Mr Dechene, and that with twice $5000 Levis might be turned against anyone. Mr. Caron is a campaigner and knows. If he does there is much to be done before Quebec has clean elections.

LADY LOYAL TRUE BLUES HAD PLEASANT EVENING

Fine Programme of a Literary and Musical Character—Address by the Rev. R. C. Blagrave—Mirth as Well as Music Ruled the Hour—The Large Audience Was Delighted

Under the auspices of Rosebud Lodge Lady True Blues, a successful and pleasing entertainment was held last evening in the True Blues' lodge room, Robertson Block, Front Street. There was a large attendance and the programme presented was pleasing to all. The gathering was presided over by Rev. R. C. Blagrave, who, in a few well-chosen words, expressed the pleasure it gave him to preside over such a function. He was in hearty accord with the objects of the Society.

Recitations were given by Misses Fenn, Irvine, Glazie and Vera Morton. Solos of an appropriate nature were rendered by Mr. D. Bleecker, Mr. Scraven and Master Westlake. A vocal duet by Misses Fenn and Morton was nicely rendered. Messrs. G. Burke and Ab. Wheeler gave a monologue which amused all present. These gentlemen also, in response to an encore, gave a solo each. The National Anthem was sung at the close.

At the conclusion of the programme the company repaired to another part of the building, where an oyster supper was partaken of. The ladies had provided a most tempting repast, to which due justice was done by the large number who sat down to the well laden tables.

The ladies of the lodge are certainly to be congratulated upon the success which attended their efforts.

ARMY OF TRAMPS IS IN MOTION

Eight of Them Sheltered In Cells Last Night, and Still They Come

That there must be many who are tramping about the country at this season of the year is apparent by the numbers that nightly seek shelter at the police station here. Last night no less than eight of this class of humanity were accommodated with lodgings at Hotel Newton. All were comparatively young men, the eldest being but 36 years of age.

WORTHY BROTHERS WORTHILY HONORED

Pleasing Function Last Night In Eureka Masonic Lodge No 283

At a regular meeting last evening of Eureka Lodge No. 283, A.F. & A. M. of this city two presentations took place. Rt. Wor. Bro. Wm. Webster and Rt. Wor. Bro. L. R. Terwilligar on behalf of Eureka Lodge presented Wor. Bro. A. R. Walker, Master, with a Past Master's apron. It is a beautiful kid apron.

Rt. Wor. Bro. F. E. O'Flynn then, on behalf of Alpha Lodge No. 433 of Toronto, presented to Rt. Wor. Bro L. R. Terwilligar a handsome gold headed silk umbrella, which was suitably inscribed. This preentation was made to the Rt. Worthy Bro. for services he rendered to the lodge last year. Although both recipients were completely taken by surprise they were able to reply in a most appropriate manner.

BACHELORS GAVE A BALL LAST NIGHT

Large Number of Dancers Had a Rare Evening's Enjoyment

Under the uaspices of the bachelors of the city an assembly was held last evening in the Academy, Front St., which in every respect was a successful affair. A large number was present, including visitors from the surrounding country.

At 8.30, to appropriate music furnished by the Sprague Orchestra, dancing was commenced and indulged in until an early hour this morning, excepting at midnight, when toothsome refreshments were partaken of. Some of the costumes worn by the ladies were exquisite in design.

"VITAL" MAN IN GREECE.

M. Venizelos, the Cretan, who was recently made leader of the Greek Chamber, is the idol of the people, partly because he has had the courage to risk his reputation as a statesman in order to obey his country's call, and partly because he is not only a man, but the personification of an idea. "If for years Greeks have borne with misgovernment, mismanagement, and corruption, it is because they lacked a leader to put their aspirations into action," said a Greek deputy.

"The leader was found, a man of iron will, magnetic force. He is possessed of immense will power, but he is sensitive, and it is a grief to his friends to see how he has suffered since he left Crete from the revelations of corruption and immorality in Greek political life.

"It is our fear that he will succumb, and that, with his energies sapped by annoyances and anxieties of every kind, he will neither have the force and physical energy to kill forever the weeds of faction and corruption which smother the true life of Greece, nor the power and endurance to inaugurate the new era of liberty. For he is not a man to us; he is an incarnate idea. Should he fall, with him falls the spirit of reform and the hopes of Greece as a nation.

"The period which will follow this will be a terrible one. The regeneration of Hellas will be put back for a hundred years. His enemies have every interest in crushing him, for with the reforms instituted by M. Venizelos their sources of power and income will alike vanish. They care for nothing but their own selfish ends. They wilfully ignore the fact that the outcome of this political chaos and national degradation will be the crushing of Greece by some foreign enemy, or the subjecting of this country to the control of the powers. His first aim is the strengthening of the army and navy, his second is the purification of our national life. Should God grant to Venizelos ten years of life Greece will have entered on a new and glorious era of power and prosperity.

"A war with Turkey is inevitable, not perhaps immediately, but certainly within the year," added this deputy. "The situation of Greece is more critical at the present moment than at any period in the last fifty years, because the influences of corruption and immorality stand savagely at bay, and will not be crushed without a ferocious resistance. If they are triumphant, a civil war will probably result."—Athens correspondent of The London Morning Post.

Stars by Daylight.

It is worthy of remark that but for the brightness of the sky the stars could be seen in daylight. Even as matters stand some of the brighter of them have been seen after sunrise by explorers on high mountains, where the air is very clear and the sky dark blue. If we could go above the atmosphere the sky would appear perfectly black and stars would be visible right close up to the sun. Astronomers observe bright stars in daytime by using long focus telescopes, the dark tubes of which cut off the side light, and persons in the bottom of deep wells have noticed stars passing overhead, the side light being reduced by the great depths of the wells.

FAILURES IN 1910

Both in Canada and the United States there were fewer failures but greater liabilities in 1910 than in 1909. In Canada (Newfoundland also being included) there were 1,463 failures, compared with 1,588 in 1909, and 1,715 in 1908. The liabilities were $15,563,539 in 1910, $12,811,184 in 1909, and $17,582,304 in 1908. The assets were $7,022,858 in 1910, $6,195,515 in 1909, and $7,770,207 in 1908. In the United States the failures in 1910 numbered 11,588, compared with 11,845 in 1909, and 14,044 in 1908. The liabilities were $188,-599,702 in 1910, compared with $140,687,881 in 1908, and $295,901,-940 in 1907. The assets were $94,718,389 in 1910, $69,262,373 in 1909, and $168,438,290 in 1908. Bradstreet's notes that owing to the larger number of those in business and the lessened number of failures the commercial death rate was lower in 1910 than in all but two of the past twenty-nine years. The figures altogether are not discouraging.

ELECTRIC POWER

Mr. Thomas A. Edison, the wizard of electricity, predicts the speedy passing of the steam locomotive. To a Cosmopolitan Magazine interviewer, he said:

"The steam locomotive is blowing its last blasts for millions of people. The next generation of New Yorkers and New Englanders will first hear at school of steam locomotives and never will see them unless they go to some state that has neither much water power nor much population. Water wheels will make electricity to run all the railroads that traverse regions in which there is abundant water power. Whole systems like the Great Northern will be thus operated. In densely populated states electric locomotives will replace steam; regardless of whatever water power is available. The New York Central will be electrified from end to end. Nor will there be in all New England or New York a railroad operated by steam power."

PENSIONS IN THE UNITED STATES

So gigantic has the Pension List become in the United States that the New York Times is compelled to exclaim: "Our pension rolls, instead of testifying to the nation's gratitude, are now an unspeakable "testimonial to 'graft' and wholesale corruption. While the beneficiaries of our policy were dying off at the rate of 2,500 to 3,000 "monthly the amounts annually appropriated since 1904 have leaped "from $140,000,000 to nearly $199,000,000. When will the scandal "cease?"

This scathing condemnation of what, on the face of it, must be a fraud, is called forth by the introduction of and passage through the House of Representatives in Washington, of a bill regarding pensions for the veterans of the Civil War, which bill adds to the pension list of $153,000,000 for 1910 no less a sum than $45,000,000, which additional sum goes, says The Times, into the pockets of a large body of the grafters.

Commenting upon this pension expenditure, a contemporary adds: "Over four billions of dollars have been spent by the United States Government in connection with the pension system since the war, and while forty-six years have elapsed and the men whom the pensions were intended to assist have of necessity dwindled in number, the annual appropriation has increased, and increased enormously, instead of decreasing. The list was declared 'swollen beyond account' in 1872 by James A. Garfield, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and then the pensions totalled the (comparatively) modest sum of $29,-000,000. 'We may reasonably expect,' added Mr. Garfield, 'that the expenditures for pensions will hereafter steadily decrease, unless our legislation should be unaccountably extravagant.' And now in 1911, when the ranks of the war veterans have been decimated by the death roll of nearly fifty years, it is proposed to add nearly $170,000,000 to the sum that was sufficient seven years after the war to provide for the needs of unfortunate survivors."

This is one of the benefits of universal suffrage. The populace, who are the voters, demand it, and the politicians, who want the vote, do not oppose it.

WHY UNCLE SAM WANTS RECIPROCITY

Mr. Foss, of Boston, one of the principal advocates of reciprocity in the United States, says in an address:

"Geographically Canada is a part of the United States as much as "is the territory west of the Mississippi River; and there is no more "reason why there should not be trade freedom between the two countries than between the groups of States east and west of the Rocky "Mountains. And with trade union guaranteed, the vexed question "of political union, with which sooner or later we must deal as a concrete issue, would be very near its solution. All the signs of the "times, all the demands of the age are pressing in the direction of continental unity, commercial, political and social, and the longer we "resist the pressure the longer we set our faces against the dawn of "our greater prosperity."

Mr. Foss has evidently not forgotten the reason advanced by Sir Richard Cartwright some years ago when advocating unrestricted reciprocity and continental free trade, that the adoption of the principle would practically make Canada a northern state of the Union.

The statesmen of the Republic at that time thought that coercion and high tariff would accomplish what Sir Richard had predicted at a much earlier period, and rejected all overtures made by Canada for freer trade relations between the two countries. Having, when too late, discovered their error, they are now seeking to accomplish that which they then rejected.

Canada to-day can stand alone, and wants not the aid of the United States in either her fiscal or commercial policy; hence the less we have to do with our neighbors in trade the better it will be for Canada.

If the United States wants our raw material, all it has to do is to lower its own tariff. If it will not do that in its own interest, then let it suffer.

DANCED SO WELL GOT TOO SLIM

NEW YORK, Jan. 18.—Four chorus girls who have been appearing with Elsie Janis in "The Slim Princess" in the Globe Theatre, have learned to their sorrow that dancing is a weight-reducer. Saturday night, after two strenuous weeks on Broadway they were taken from the cast.

"You are fat no longer," said the stage director. "When we engaged you it was because you were exceedingly fat. We wanted you to contrast with Miss Janis and make her appear slim. But now you've lost so much weight we must get other fat girls."

Alice Gaither, who had tipped the scales at 236 pounds, weighed only 216. Lucile La Verna, was a mere shadow of her former self, having dropped from 245 down to 212. Maybelle Carruthers, who had been a buxom beauty of 255, was a graceful girl of 225. And the fourth, Grace Marlborough, had dropped from 237 to 219.

"We did it working hard to make the show a hit," expostulated Miss Carruthers. "I think it's a shame to suspend us when we've been doing our duty. If we'd stopped dancing or had shirked our work, we'd still be as fat as they want us, but because we did not loaf any they give us the gate. I call it a crying shame."

Four other fat girls have been engaged to take the places of thinner ones taken off. The new fat girls are Zena Vink, weighing 243 pounds; Eleanor Panzoffer, 256 pounds; Bertha L. Estelle, 248 and Adeline Clark, who admits only 238 pounds, but hopes to take on two pounds more by the time the girls "weigh in."

Meanwhile the four girls who lost their excess avoirdupois will be put on half salary until such time as they get fat enough to resume their roles in "The Slim Princess." A couple of weeks may make the newcomers as thin as rails.

WARD ELECTIONS FOR NEXT WEEK

At noon on Tuesday next, the 24th inst., nominations for Aldermen to fill the vacancies in Foster and Coleman Wards will take place. If more than one candidate is placed in nomination in either ward, the election will take place the Tuesday following.

GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE.

On account of the tremendous success of his act, the management of this theatre has decided to retain Enoch for the balance of this week, when he will perform a number of new tricks under water. At each performance he will show how to keep afloat in case of drowning and will illustrate the same. This is your last opportunity to see this wonderful exhibition.

Stone and Mackey present an act different from all others. Mr. Stone is a harpist and singer of no mean ability, while Miss Mackey possesses a sweet soprano voice. Their act entitled "Twenty Minutes From Ireland," has been a feature on every bill.

Nebur and Cacum, presenting a musical playlet, "His Last Dollar," are spoken of very highly by both press and public and will no doubt be favorites here.

All new pictures and illustrated song completes one of the biggest and best bills ever oeffred to the public of Belleville.

URGES HUSBANDS FOR TEACHERS

WHITE HORSE, N. J., Jan. 17.—"Hundreds of women school teachers would wed to-morrow if they could retain their positions and be sure of no financial difficulties in the future domestic life," said Mrs. Anna Oliphant, of this place, in telling why she organized the School Teachers' Relief Society. That organization will conduct a campaign to bring about laws permitting women teachers to be married and still retain their positions as teachers.

Mrs. Oliphant was a teacher for almost 25 years and is being aided in her campaign by many other teachers. Their contention is that no city has a right to prevent women from becoming married by depriving them of a means of livelihood as soon as she takes a husband.

"Such a custom," Mrs. Oliphant said, "is inhuman. It is an outrage against nature. This rule of forcing women teachers to remain single has changed sweet natures of thousands of girls who would have made good wives to grouchy dispositions by forcing them into old maidhood.

"The fact that a teacher is married and has children should not debar her from the means of a livelihood, even if her husband is alive and has employment. Let us cut down the number of old maids instead of increasing it. Give the hard working woman a chance of retaining her position as other women do. Teachers sometimes love men who do earn as much as they do."

PLANS TO LICENSE ALL WHO TIPPLE

INDIANAPOLIS, Jan. 17.—Representative Colvert, of Benton county has prepared a bill which he says will greatly augment the revenues of the state and at the same time prevent drunkenness. The bill provides the taking out of licenses by all persons wishing to drink and these can be issued only on a showing that the drinker is a man who does not let the habit interfere with his business.

"We have personal licenses to hunt and fish and do other things, and follow out certain occupations, so why not a license to drink. It would be a source of heavy revenue to the country and all money derived from the sale of licenses could be turned over to the educational fund. It is like this: Licenses could be issued in the form of small pocket card permits, reading that the holder has been licensed to drink, it having been shown that he does not get drunk or disorderly."

When apples have to be cored, but served whole, it is advisable to core them before peeling them, as they are then less liable to break.

about which we hear so much does not mean living on one food exclusively, but on foods that harmonize.

Certain elements of nutrition are essential to health, but all these elements cannot be obtained from any one food—hence the necessity for a variety.

Deficiency of one or more of these elements, such as iron, for instance in the blood, will cause anaemia, run down condition and sleeplessness.

If you are one of the unfortunates who have drifted into this state change your diet, eat foods that are rich in the mineral elements of nutrition, and take Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, which contains no oil and supplies iron to the blood in the most easily assimilated form.

Vinol creates an appetite, aids digestion, makes pure, healthy blood. In this natural manner it builds up the run-down, weak and debilitated. If you don't find this to be a fact we will return your money, if you will try a bottle. J. S. McKeown.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"To me?"

"Yes. It deals with an important matter too. It concerns Enid."

"Mr. Traill has written to me about Enid?" repeated Brand, stopping his industrious polishing to see if Pyne were joking with him.

"That's so. See, here is his letter. It will tell its own story. Guess you'd better read it right away."

The young man picked up one of the sealed letters on the table and handed it to the other.

Setting aside a glass chimney and a wash-leather, Brand lost no time in reading Mr. Traill's communication.

Save that his lips tightened, and his face paled slightly, there was no outward indication of the tumult the written words must have created in his soul, for this is what met his astonished vision:

"Dear Mr. Brand—I hope soon to make your acquaintance. It will be an honor to meet a man who has done so much for those near and dear to me, but there is one reason why I am anxious to grasp your hand which is so utterly beyond your present knowledge that I deem it a duty to tell you the facts, to prepare you, in a word.

"Circumstances have thrown me into the company of Lieutenant Stanhope. We had a kindred inspiration. He, I understand, is in effect, if not in actual recorded fact, the accepted suitor of your adopted daughter, known as Miss Enid Trevillion. I, although an older man, can share his feelings, because I am engaged to be married to Mrs. Vansittart, a lady whom you have, by God's help, rescued. Hence, Mr. Stanhope and I have almost lived together, ashore and afloat, during these troubled days. Naturally, he spoke of the girl he loves and told me something of her history. He described the brooch found on her clothing, and a Mr. Jones, retired from the lighthouse service, who was present when you saved the child from speedy death, informs me that her linen was marked 'E. T.'

"These facts, combined with the date and Mr. Jones's description of the damaged boat, lead me to believe that the girl is my own daughter, Edith Traill, whom you have mercifully preserved to gladden the eyes of a father who mourned her death, and the death of her mother, for nineteen years.

"I can say no more at present. I am not making inferences not justified in other ways. Nor am I setting up a father's claim to rob you of the affections of a beautiful and accomplished daughter. I will be content, more than content, if she can give to me a tithe of the love she owes to you, for, indeed, in Mr. Stanhope and in all others who know you, you have eloquent witnesses.

"Yours most sincerely,
"Cyrus J. Traill.

"P.S. Let me add, as an afterthought, that only my nephew and you have received this information. The agonized suspense which the ladies must have endured on the rock is a trial more than sufficient to tax their powers. If as I expect, Mr. Stanhope meets you first, he will be guided wholly by your advice as to whether or not the matter shall be made known to your Enid—to my Edith—before she lands."

Brand dropped the letter and placed his hands over his face. He yielded for an instant to the stupor of the intelligence.

Pyne, as Constance had done, came near to him and said, with an odd despondency in his voice:

"Say, you feel bad about this. Guess you'll hate our family in future."

"Why should I hate anyone who brings rank and fortune to one of my little girls?"

"That appears to be settled. All things have worked out for the best. Most certainly your excellent uncle and I shall not fall out about Enid. If it comes to that, we must share her as a daughter."

Pyne brightened considerably as he learnt how Brand had taken the blow.

"Oh, bully!" he cried. "That's a clear way out. Do you know, I was beginning to feel scared. I didn't count a little bit on my respected uncle setting up a title to Enid!"

CHAPTER XVI.

STEPHEN BRAND EXPLAINS

They were interrupted. Elsie, with her golden hair and big blue eyes, pink cheeks and parted lips, appeared on the stairs. All that was visible was her head. She looked like one of Murillo's angels.

"Please, can Mamie 'n' me see the man?" she asked, a trifle awed. She did not expect to encounter a stern-faced official in uniform.

"What man, dearie?" he said, and instantly the child gained confidence, with that prompt abandonment to a favorable first impression which marks the exceeding wisdom of children and dogs.

She directed an encouraging sotto voce down the stair:

"Come right along, Mamie."

Then she answered, clasping the hand of Pyne extended to her, but eyeing Brand the while:

"The man who brought the milk."

"He has gone away, sweetheart," he said, "but when he comes in the morning I shall send for you and you will see him. You are the little girl who was injured, eh? Are you getting better?"

"My elbow is stiff, but it doesn't hurt. I was feelin' pretty bad 'fore the milk came, but Mamie 'n' me had a lovely lot, an' some beautiful jelly. Fine, wasn't it, Mamie?"

"'Squizzit!" agreed Mamie.

"I think I'd like being here if there was more room," said the child. "An' why isnt there any washin'? Mamie 'n' me is always bein' washed 'cept when we're here."

"Surely you have not kept your face as clean as it is now ever since you left the ship?"

"Oh, no," put in Mamie. "We've just been rubbed with a hanky."

"And sent out to pay a call?"

"Not 'zackly," said truthful Mamie. "Mr. Pyne told us to wait near the door—"

When Pyne quitted the kitchen his intent was to reach Brand without delay. As he passed Mrs. Vansittart's bedroom he paused. Something had delighted him immeasurably once the first shock of the intelligence had passed.

He seemed to be irresolute in his mind, for he waited some time on the landing before he knocked at the door and asked if Mrs. Vansittart would come and speak to him.

"Are you alone?" she demanded, remaining invisible.

"Yes," he said.

Then she appeared, with that borrowed shawl still closely wrapped over her head and face.

"What is it?" she said wearily.

"You have had a letter from my uncle?"

"Yes, a charming letter, but I cannot understand it. He says that some very important and amazing event will detain him in Penzance after we reach the place. He goes on—but I will read it to you. I am quite bewildered."

She took a letter from her pocket and searched through its contents until she found a paragraph. She was about to read it aloud when someone came down the stairs. It was one of the officers, yet Mrs. Vansittart was so flurried that she dropped the sheet of paper and bent to pick it up before Pyne could intervene.

"Oh, bother!" she cried. "I am dreadfully nervous, even now that we are in no further peril. This is what I wish you to hear."

And she read:

"Nothing but the most amazing and unlooked for circumstances would cause me to ask you to postpone the date of our marriage for at least a month after you reach shore. This is not the time, nor are your present surroundings the place for telling you why I make this request. Suffice it to say that I think, indeed, I am sure, a great happiness has come into my life, a happiness which you, as my wife soon to be, will share."

The American, whilst Mrs. Vansittart was intent on her excerpts from his uncle's letter, studied all that was visible of her face. That which he saw there puzzled him. She had suffered no more than others, so he wondered why she wore such an air of settled melancholy. Throughout the lighthouse gloom was dispelled. The sick became well, the lethargic became lively. Even the tipplers of methylated spirits, deadly ill before, had worked like Trojans at the rope, as eager to rehabilitate their shattered character as to land the much-needed stores.

What trouble had befallen this woman so gracious, so facile, so worshipful in her charm of manner and utterance during the years he had known her, that she remained listless when all about her was life and joyance, she, the cynosure of many eyes by her costumes and graceful carriage, cowering from recognition? Here was a mystery, though she had repudiated the word, and a mystery which, thus far, defeated his sub-conscious efforts at solution.

She lifted her eyes to his. Her expression was forlorn, compelling pity by its utter desolation.

"What does he mean?" she asked, plaintively. "Why has he not spoken clearly? Can you tell me what it is, this great happiness, which has entered, so strangely, into his life and mine?"

"I have never met any man who knew exactly what he meant to say, and exactly how to say it, better than Cyrus J.'" said Pyne.

"But he has written to you, surely. Does he give no hint?"

"His letter is a very short one. To be candid, I have hardly made myself acquainted with its contents as yet."

"You are fencing with me. You know, and you will not tell."

Her mood changed so rapidly that Pyne was not wholly prepared for the attack.

"It is a good rule," he said, "never to pretend you can handle another man's affairs better than he can handle them himself."

He met her kindling glance firmly. The anger that scintillated in her eyes almost found utterance. But this clever woman of the world felt that nothing would be gained, perhaps a great deal lost, by any open display of temper.

She laughed scornfully.

"Mr. Traill is certainly the best judge of those worthy of his confidence. Excuse me if I spoke heatedly. Let matters remain where they are."

"Just a word, Mrs. Vansittart. My uncle has written you fairly and squarely. He has not denied you his confidence. If I understood you, he has promised it to the fullest extent."

"Yes, that is true."

"Then what are we quarreling about?"

He laughed in his careless way, to put her at her ease. She frowned meditatively. She, who could smile in such a dazzling fashion, had lost her art of late.

"You are right," she said slowly. "I am just a hysterical woman, starting at shadows, making mountains out of molehills. Forgive me."

"The old man shied at telling her outright. I wonder why. He is chock full of tact, the smoothest old boy I ever fell up against. He thinks there may have been little troubles here, perhaps. Well, I guess he's right."

In the service-room he found Brand cleaning a lamp calmly and methodically. All the stores had been carried downstairs, and the store-room key given over to the purser.

"I am glad you have turned up," said the lighthouse-keeper. "Oblige me by opening that locker and taking back the articles I purloined recently. If the purser asks for an explanation, tell him the truth, and say I am willig to eat this stuff now for my sins."

Pyne noticed that Brand's own letters lay in a small pile on the writing-desk. With two exceptions, they were unopened. As a matter of fact, he had glanced at the superscriptions, saw that they were nearly all from strangers, and laid them aside until night fell and the lighting of the lamps would give him a spare moment.

"I'll do that with pleasure," said the American, "but there's one thing I want to discuss with you whilst there is a chance of being alone. My uncle says he has written to you."

DESERTS OF ARABIA.

Sand Dunes That Resemble the Billows of the Ocean.

In Arabia there are two great areas of sand dunes, one in the south, called the Roba el Khali, and one in the north, called Nafud. The southern desert is entirely unknown to Europeans, while the northern has been crossed at one point by a few travelers. The edge of this great sandy waste is, I think, the most impressive natural phenomenon I have ever seen. As I approached its western edge it seemed as if a long wall of red sand barred further passage. It began quite suddenly, without any warning of its proximity. In a few paces we passed from the hard desert on to the soft sand hills, and the camels stood with their feet in the first waves of this great sand desert of Arabia. Here was a "desert world of new and dreadful aspect" indeed. It was undoubtedly "new" to western eyes, and therefore of extreme interest, and it was certainly "of dreadful aspect," for the glare of its sands closed one's eyes and seemed to overpower one. What struck me most was the color of the sand hills in the morning light—every shade of yellow and red—but in the midday heat the color seemed to change to a glaring white.

In this region the prevailing wind is from the southwest, and therefore all the dunes gradually sloped toward the west, steep sided toward the east. The sand, on the whole, was hard; nevertheless traveling was toilsome in the extreme. Traversing this immense ocean of sand waves we clambered to the crests of giant sand dunes, only to find the leeward side of the dune too steep to descend, and accordingly we had to tramp along the crest of the hill in order to find a more easy descent. Then we were hidden in the great folds between the dunes, hemmed in by hot sandy walls and almost suffocated by the heat. In many ways this stretch of desert was similar to the sea. Its sand dunes had all the appearance of billows.—Wide World Magazine.

No matter how exasperating she may be, a man does hate to quarrel with his wife when she is a good cook.

Some men play in such hard luck that they are always cast for the worm in every enterprise.

Johnnie Knew.

"Is that so?"

"Yes."

"Their little boy Willie ain't got any, ma."

"Why, Johnnie! Why do you say that?"

"'Cause I licked him yesterday and it all ran out."

A Test.

Did you ever see a rabbit rigged for flight?
Did you ever see a lobster wield a sledge?
Did you ever see a whale and gopher fight?
If you didn't then I guess that you're all right,
And I will not have to make you sign the pledge.

No Shirking.

"What are you lying there on the ground for, young man?"

"I am taking the sun cure for a headache, father."

"Well, you get up and go to work or you will be taking the dad cure from the toe of my boot in about a minute."

Knew What They Deserved.

"Did the story end happily?"

"Sure. Everybody killed himself in the last chapter."

"Horrible!"

"You would say they got their just deserts if you had read the book."

Appropriate.

"Why do you bury yourself here?"

"Because I like it."

"Oh, I see."

"See what?"

"You are a dead one."

No Cause.

"My debts don't worry me."

"Why?"

"They spend all their energy upon my creditors."

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—A telegram was received Tuesday by Hon. G. P. Graham, Minister of Railways and Canals, from Charles M. Hays, president of the G.T.R., containing an offer to negotiate with the Government respecting the Hudson Bay Railway. While no terms were mentioned, it is surmised that the Grand Trunk Pacific would desire a lease similar to the one under which it will operate the National Transcontinental.

A similar offer, it is said, has already been received from the C.N.R., and it is hoped that these terms may be received from one of the other companies. The present proposition contemplates the construction of a line by the G.T.R. from Saskatoon to the Pas Mission.

McCurdy's Flight on Jan. 26.

Washington, Jan. 19.—The course of the aeroplane flight next week from Key West, Fla., to Havana, Cuba, which will be patrolled by a flotilla of torpedo boat destroyers of the U. S. navy, for the guidance and protection of J. A. D. McCurdy, the Canadian airman.

The flight will be attempted on Jan. 26. The distance from Key West to Havana is between 80 and 90 miles as the crow flies.

Twenty-Three to Die.

Tokio, Jan. 19.—D. Kotoku, his wife and 23 fellow anarchists, were yesterday sentenced to death for having conspired against the life of the Emperor and other members of the imperial family. Two other men, similarly accused, were released.

We hear much of the bracing effect of cold, but it seems to have a depressing effect on street thermometers.

What Has Dandruff Got To Do With Baldness?

You see the statement every day that the one cause of baldness is dandruff. But is it?

It is equally true that you know men with a shock of hair you can hardly pull a comb through, who have carried around a dandruff laden collar as long as you have known them.

You have also seen men whose scalp was kept as clean as a baby's whose hair was surely departing.

That dandruff talk sounds well and convinces a good many of us, but let us not fool ourselves.

Of course dandruff isn't a good thing to carry around, but it is only an indication.

The same trouble that causes the hair to fall out usually causes dandruff, so if you get at the cause and arrest the loss of hair, you will stop dandruff too.

Those who use Nyal's Hirsutone find it the most satisfactory hair healer and hair dressing they have ever used.

It does stop the hair from falling out.

It will also stop dandruff.

Your Nyal Druggist cheerfully recommends it—$1.00 and 50c in sprinkler bottles.

FOUND—A POCKETBOOK

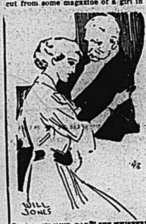
The Story of Its Restoration and Its Contents.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

It lay in the gutter as Pauline picked her dainty way across the street. She saw it and rescued it from the mud—a long flat pocketbook of Russia leather, such as a man might carry. It was bulky with letters or papers or perhaps money. Pauline slipped the pocketbook into her muff and hurried on her way home.

When she reached her own room she spread the contents of the leather book on her dressing table. There was a large package of banknotes, $400 in all, together with a picture, a portrait cut from some magazine of a girl in a black velvet gown wearing a black velvet picture hat and holding a long stemmed rose in one hand.



"YOU DON'T MIND, DAD?" SHE WHISPERED.

Pauline looked at the picture with rising indignation, for it was a half tone reproduction of Fleming's portrait of herself. The original picture hung in her father's study downstairs.

There was a single line under the picture which had evidently illustrated some special article on Fleming, the painter. It read, "An example of Fleming's delicate portraiture."

The next day Pauline caused to be inserted in a morning paper a brief advertisement:

Found.—A pocketbook. Owner may call and prove property. No. 86 W. — street.

A continuous line of people who had lost pocketbooks of some description kept the Cameron servants to rigid attendance upon the door.

Four o'clock came and not one applicant had aroused that assurance in Pauline's breast that here was the man who had carried her picture within his pocketbook.

Again the bell rang, and the servant ushered in a tall slender man, immaculately dressed, whose air was that of Pauline's own world.

His quick glance swept boldly from Pauline's lovely dark face to the luxuriously furnished room, in one corner of which sat Pauline's maid, quietly alert.

"You have found my pocketbook, I believe," said the man pleasantly. "Awfully careless of me, you know, to drop it. Found it in Broadway, I suppose?"

"No," said Pauline graciously, "I didn't find it in Broadway. What color was the book you lost and what was its size?"

"Dark green Russia—about eight inches long."

"What did it contain?" asked Pauline.

"I'm sorry, but your description doesn't fit at all," said Pauline pleasantly, and she wondered at the ugly frown that crossed the man's brow. It was not so much a frow of disappointment as an expression of baffled rage.

The callers came at long intervals, and they were all men. Some were young and others were old, and each one offered a description that nearly fitted the pocketbook she had found. At last the callers dwindled down to one last straggler, a most prepossessing young man whose manners were especially engaging.

"I'm such a careless beggar," he explained to Pauline; "I'm always losing something or other."

"Of course I must ask you to identify the pocketbook," hesitated Pauline. Here, she felt, was the real owner of the article.

"It was a dark Russia leather, almost new, about ten inches long. It contained between $300 and $400 in bills—and something else. There was no mark of identification in the way of letters or anything of that sort. I dropped it somewhere near the park about the Sixties or Seventies—that is, I missed it shortly after I passed West Seventy-second street and went back to search for it, but it could not be found." He spoke rapidly and positively, and Pauline felt a little thrill that she had at last discovered the real owner.

Nevertheless she was rather piqued by the fact that although he might have cared enough about her picture to carry it within his pocketbook the claimant did not seem to recognise by any outward sign that the original of the picture sat before him. Consequently she pressed the point to her own chagrin.

"And the other article contained in the book?" she asked. "If you will identify that"—she paused suggestively.

For an instant he hesitated, then spoke with decision. "From its character you will understand why the subject is a delicate one."

"Here is the pocketbook," said Pauline smiling. "I am sure it is the one you lost, and I am very glad to restore it to you."

The owner almost snatched the book from her hand, so eager did he seem to recover his property. He stammered hasty words of gratitude and without opening the pocketbook thrust it in his pocket and took his leave with apparent relief.

When she was alone Pauline smiled rather maliciously as she took from a table drawer the clipped picture of herself and carried it to her room.

That night at dinner her father spoke somewhat vexedly. "Do you recollect Pauline, my dear, that I promised you should have that set of furs in Wickel's?"

"How could I forget, dad? You don't mean that you have really ordered them for me?" cried Pauline delightedly.

"I was about to do so yesterday when I lost my pocketbook. I'd been to the bank and drawn the cash, was bringing it home to you, when somehow, somewhere not far from home, I lost the confounded thing. You'll have to wait another week for the furs, puss."

"What sort of pocketbook was it, dad?" asked Pauline mechanically. The question seemed a natural one enough now—she had interviewed so many lost property owners that day.

"New one I bought a week ago, red Russia, had four hundred in it and a clipping of some sort about queer uses of electricity."

"Dad!" cried Pauline tragically.—

"Well?" asked her father. "I know it was careless, but"—

"It isn't that, but I believe I found that very pocketbook yesterday. I advertised it in this morning's paper."

"Well, by Jove, where is it?" asked her father, with keen interest.

"I don't know where it is now," confessed Pauline. "I've interviewed dozens of people today. It does seem as though the streets must be strewn with pocketbooks, so many have been lost. I was most particular about identification, and it happened that the last young man who called described the pocketbook so accurately that I gave it to him."

Mr. Lester knitted his brows thoughtfully. "That's very queer, Pauline. You better tell me all about it and be sure and recollect all you can about the people who called in regard to the matter. You see, there are many dishonest men, and women, too, for that matter, who make a business of answering advertisements of that sort. Sometimes they can guess very accurately at the appearance of a lost article. Indeed, so clever are they that they manage to possess themselves of many articles to which they have not the slightest right. Did you find a clipping in the book?"

Pauline flushed at her own vanity in attributing the possession of her picture to some infatuated young man when it was that dearest of men, her father, after all, who had preserved her likeness.

"I didn't notice the clipping, dad," she said, "but I did find a magazine reproduction of my portrait—that and the money."

"I certainly did not have your picture, Pauline, but that is a detail. Tell me what you can about the people who came today."

Pauline did so, omitting no incident that she could remember and calling upon her maid to substantiate any doubtful points in her narrative. When she had concluded Mr. Lester shook mirthfully.

"Never mind, Pauline; but it is rather funny, you know. I'm afraid there was more avarice than romance in the situation. Very likely the last half dozen men who called were in league to claim the pocketbook. By clever guessing and the process of eliminating certain facts the last claimant was able to give a rather accurate description of the article and so assured you of his ownership. There, my dear, don't feel badly. Almost anybody might have been deceived in the same way. Suppose you come to my study and show me the picture. You say you kept that."

Quite mortified and very penitent, Pauline fetched the clipping from her room and laid it on her father's desk. Mr. Lester adjusted his eyeglasses and looked critically at the clipping. Then he nodded approval.

"Very good indeed, Pauline." Then he turned the paper over and smiled humorously. "Some Peculiar Uses of Electricity," he read, handing the clipping to her.

Pauline looked and blushed painfully. "What a vain goose I am! Are you not ashamed to have such a foolish daughter? But it was a coincidence, wasn't it?"

Mr. Lester drew her down to his knee and kissed her gently. "There is more to this matter, Pauline. I happened into Frank Seymour's office today and picked up this clipping from his desk. He had just cut it from a magazine, and it lay 'electricity' side up. I read part of it and asked him if I might borrow the clipping. He seemed rather embarrassed. I understand the reason now. The sly young dog!"

"Yes and no, Pauline," he admitted between a sigh and a smile. "It is not unexpected, and when Frank comes send him to me, and you need not be afraid of the outcome."

Couldn't Be.

"I think Brown is out of his mind. Don't you?"

"No."

"He acts like it."

"That may be, but he never had a mind to get out of."

But There Was One.

"He is no fool."

"How do you know?"

"Cost me $25 to find it out."

"Well, he wasn't in that transaction."

Peace.

IT IS NOT IN THE BLOOD

Medicine Taken Internally Cannot Cure Eczema. It is Caused by Germs.

Eczema cannot be overcome by ordinary treatment and the old-fashioned way of dosing the system with drugs. Eczema is caused by a parasitic germ that bores into the skin. It is generally a contagious disease. Until the parasite is completely destroyed and removed, eczema cannot be cured. Fully one-third of skin diseases are in the form of eczema.

We so thoroughly believe that Rexall Eczema Ointment will overcome eczema and allied skin ailments, that we unhesitatingly promise to promptly return the money paid us for it if it should in any way be unsatisfactory to the user.

Because of its remarkable cleansing, antiseptic, germicidal, soothing and healing influence, Rexall Eczema Ointment has a very pronounced value in the treatment of skin diseases, especially where the form of ailment is of the chronic, aggravating sort. We highly recommend it for the dry scaly form or the weeping type, where there is a constant flow of ill-smelling excretion.

Rexall Eczema Ointment is very prompt in relieving pimples, blotches, skin discolorations, ringworm, acne, nettle rash, tetter, hives, insect bites and for healing sores and wounds. It is a pleasant smelling grayish-white ointment, and is very cleanly for use. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Sold only at our store—The Rexall Store.

POOL.

THE RING.

Jack Johnson will meet Sam Langford at Philadelphia within the next six weeks. Jack O'Brien got the men to agree to a six-round bout. While the figures have not been given out it is understood that the men will fight for a $10,000 purse, and that each will be required to deposit $2,500 within the next week. "Tony" Biddle guaranteed the purse.

Tommy Burns has cabled his acceptance of a fight with Bill Lang in London, April 17th. He expects Langford to beat Lang and in that event will meet his black fellow-Canadian.

When Sam Langford and Bill Lang the Australian heavyweight champion meet at London on the evening of February 12 they will wear 6 ounce gloves instead of the regulation 4 ounce mitts.

The crusade against the kidney blow, which started in England directly after the Welch-Driscoll battle has reached such a stage that it is highly probable English referees in future will be instructed to disqualify pugilists who use this palpably unfair blow.

Forcing the fighting so that he had his opponent at a disadvantage, Pal Moore, of Philadelphia, gained an easy decision over Matty Baldwin, of Boston, in a twelve-round bout at the Armory Athletic Club there. Moore had a clear lead in all but two of the rounds.

Packey MacFarland, of Chicago knocked out Jack Goodman, of New York, in the fifth round of a ten-round bout at the Fairmount Athletic Club, New York. The stock yards lightweight first floored Goodman for the count of nine with a right swing on the jaw, then when Goodman arose groggily sent him down for the count with a rain of blows on the face.

Philadelphia, Pa., Jan. 18.—As a result of Jack Johnson's sweeping defy offering to fight any man in the world six rounds for a purse of $10,000, the champion has been matched to meet Sam Langford here within the next six weeks.

HYMN OF PEACE

Andrew Carnegie has found a hymn for international peace that he prefers to "America." The metre is the same, but he prefers the new words. The poem was written by Prof. Geo Huntingdon, formerly librarian of Carelton College, who retired on a pension from the Carnegie foundation. Following are the lines of the verses:

Two empires by the sea,
Two nations great and free,
One anthem raise,
One race of ancient fame,
One tongue, one faith, we claim,
One God, whose glorious name
We love and praise.

What deeds our fathers wrought,
What battles we have fought,
Let fame record.
Now, vengeful passion, cease,
Come, victories of peace,
Nor hate, nor pride's caprice
Unsheath the sword.

Though deep the sea and wide,
'Twixt realm and realm, its tide,
Binds strand to strand.
So be the gulf between,
Gray coasts and islands green,
With bonds of peace serene
And friendship spanned.

Now may the God above
Guard the dear land we love,
Both east and west.
Let love more fervent glow,
As peaceful ages go,
And strength yet stronger grow
Blessing and blest.

Life Insurance for Dogs.

The people of Frankfort, Germany, have thought of a beautiful plan for making money. They have started a company to insure the lives of dogs. Henceforth when a Frankforter gets hard up he has only to purchase a dog with a quarrelsome disposition, insure its life for a good round amount and turn it loose in the neighborhood of some dog that has a better fighting grip than his own. If the Frankforters can escape the notice of humane societies and of dog lovers who might consider this insurance scheme a mean trick on the friend of man they may make a goodly profit out of their pets.

Pompeii.

Pompeii was overwhelmed on the night of Aug. 24, 79 A.D. The principal citizens were then assembled, it appears, in an amphitheatre where public spectacles were in progress. After a lapse of fifteen centuries a countryman, as he was turning up the ground on the farm where he was employed, found a bronze figure, which discovery led to further search in the course of which numerous other objects were brought to light, and thus, at length, was the whole city uncovered.

What's In a Name?

A prominent lawyer whose memory for names is bad recently called to a friend whom he saw passing on the opposite side of the street.

"Hey, there, Maloney," he called; "I want you to meet a friend of mine!"

The friend came across and said almost testily: "Why do you call me Maloney? You know my name is not that. My name is Walsh."

"Why stand on a mere technicality?" said the lawyer, laughing. The introduction followed.

FOLDED PAPER DODGE

Fraud Says Travers Used in Disposing of Stock.

Revelations of Convicted Manager of Farmers' Bank Are to the Effect That W. J. Lindsay Got People to Sign What They Believed to Be a Petition for Formation of Bank—Further Warrants Expected.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—For the first time in days there were no public developments in the Farmers' Bank case yesterday. This does not mean that there was nothing doing for all day long the bank offices was busy with the preparation of facts which will to-day be formulated into further charges in connection with the dissipation of the funds of the bank. Whether these informations which are to be laid will be followed by warrants or summonses is not known, but it is understood that at least one man prominent in the city's business affairs will be charged with implication in the crash.

For days it has been known that the former general manager, W. R. Travers, has stood ready to make a full and exhaustive disclosure of the doings of himself and co-conspirators since the bank's beginning and last night it became known that he had already made many statements involving W. J. Lindsay and others.

Travers declares that many of the subscriptions to stock which were obtained by Lindsay, were secured by a direct fraud. He says that one of the methods of doing this was to secure signatures to a paper which purported to be merely a petition for the formation of a bank, but which was folded in such a way that the unwitting signer bound himself to take quantities of the stock of the bank. Travers declares that in his desk at the bank's office are many complaints from those who were thus fooled and that some were bluffed into carrying out the contract to purchase shares so fraudulently secured while others who were prepared to make a finish fight of it were allowed to withdraw.

Praised By Jews.

New York, Jan. 19.—The delegates to the 22nd council of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, in session here, voted unanimously yesterday afternoon to hold the next conference at Cincinnati in 1913.

At the dinner last night the delegates listened to addresses by Theodore Roosevelt, Mayor Gaynor, Oscar Straus, Dr. David Phillipson of Cincinnati and Jacob H. Schiff, who also acted as toastmaster. Governor Dix sent a telegram of greeting.

Col. Roosevelt, as the guest of honor, was praised by the toastmaster as "one who more than any other American, living or dead, has taught the world the lesson that, equally with any other citizen of this country, the Jew is entitled to the square deal."

Four Children Burned.

Halifax, Jan. 19.—A disastrous fire, in which four of Gabriel Levy's children met their doom, took place on Tuesday on Little Tussock Island, near the eastern boundary of Halifax County. Little Tussock is inhabited solely by fishermen, the entire population consisting of about twenty families. At the time of the outbreak the thermometer registered 12 below zero, and as there is no fire brigade in the village, or adequate appliances for fighting the flames, the rescue party, which gathered from the neighboring cottages, experienced great difficulty in their efforts to assist the sufferers.

Lucky Orphans.

Kingston, Jan. 19.—While hundreds lost money through the failure of the Farmers' Bank, there are those who have been fortunate enough to draw money beforehand. A citizen quotes the instance of two orphans in Sharbot Lake, who had $1,100 on deposit. They drew the money ten days before the bank closed its doors.

Aviator Lit on Cruiser.

San Francisco, Jan. 19.—Eugene B. Ely yesterday flew thirteen miles in an aeroplane, made a successful landing on the cruiser Pennsylvania and an hour later rose from the cruiser and flew back to Selfridge Field, 12 miles south of San Francisco.

The feat was accomplished without a mishap.

Noted Explorer Dead.

London, Jan. 19.—Sir Francis Galton, the noted explorer and writer, died Tuesday night. He was born in 1822, and knighted in 1909. He explored Damaraland and South Ovampoland, Africa, in 1850-52. For many years he was on the council of the Royal Geographical Society.

The Situation.

"Stupid!"

"Yes."

"That shows you don't know anything about it."

"Well, what is there exciting about it?"

"Exciting? Why, the struggle to escape is the most exciting thing you ever saw!"

Wound It Up.

Their love ran along like the brook in the song
Till once in a frenzy he slapped her.
She packed up her trinkets and whispered, "So long."
And that was the end of the chapter.

Human Nature.

"There will be no more divorces in Portugal."

"I thought the new government was going to give them out just for the asking."

"It is."

"Then what will stop them?"

"If people can get them they won't want them, will they?"

It is no crim to steal an umbrella on a rainy day in New Jersey. Will all persons who indulge in that pastime please go to New Jersey to oblige the rest of us.

GREENLEAF & SON

THERE is only one woman who makes anything by resorting to tears, and she is the one who appeals to her average male acquaintance.

Even when a humorist dies it is hard to get his acquaintances to take him seriously.

A man is apt to think that well spent money is that that his wife didn't get.

Ever notice how smoothly things seem to run that have never had the benefit of your advice?

An empty head is seldom either heavy or stupid.

Having a good time is rather expensive when times are bad.

It is being a good fellow that tends to render him good for nothing.

The second time a man marries he can't plead either inexperience or illusion to account for it.

Anybody would like to be honest, but everybody makes it so hard for him.

There are plenty of us who have good principles that have no interest for us.

Some women find it so difficult to be pretty that it makes them cross all the time.

A hobo is a man who is too lazy to work and whose sense of fair play has caused him to give over caring much for the products of labor.

Saving Quality.

In trying patiently to climb
The man need not be dense
Who doesn't think it is a crime
To show some common sense,
Who ventures in that way to plod,
Although some folks may call him odd.

For common sense will pull him through
When genius calls for aid.
It will assist him to pursue
His calling or his trade,
And then the fickle ones will say
He is not made of common clay.

Not making his achievements hum
With clatter and display,
But doing little things that come
Along from day to day,
On duty striving to attend
And thus accomplishing his end.

Thus, to the very great surprise
Of those who love to knock,
Above the level he will rise,
And up will go his stock,
And when returns begin to show
They will declare, "I told you so."

Don't be afraid to limber out
Your stock of common sense.
When genius shakes its head in doubt
Just tell it to go hence.
Depend on it through thick and thin,
For in the long run it must win.

WANTS LOWER TARIFF

Meighen of Rat Portage Expounds National Policy.

It Was Intended as a Protection For Infant Industries, But Agricultural Implements Can Now Stand Alone He Says—W. E. Knowles Replies For Government Lamely Agrees, But Does Not Support Motion.

Ottawa, Jan. 19.—Arthur Meighen (Portage la Prairie) introduced his resolution calling for a reduction in the duties on agricultural implements in the House of Commons yesterday, thereby discounting the attitude of W. E. Knowles (Moose Jaw), a Liberal, whose notice on the order paper last year prevented other members from bringing up this question. Mr. Meighen made a careful and well-thought-out speech. His arguments were conclusive, and the statistics he offered were from Government returns.

Mr. Knowles, on the other hand, made a weak, almost apologetic reply. It is interesting to note that after Mr. Meighen had concluded his remarks, Hon. John Haggart, one of the Conservative old guard, left his place in the front, and went to Mr. Meighen's desk, congratulating him with the words, "Well done, old boy, well done." There was no division, and the subject will probably go to the foot of the order paper. It is doubtful when it will come up for final disposition.

In his opening sentences Mr. Meighen said there was no member on either side of the House who would not be compelled to admit the necessity for a sane protective scheme in Canada. The one exception, he remarked facetiously, was the member for Red Deer, Dr. Michael Clarke, an exotic plant, who by assiduous care was able to keep alive his free trade beliefs.

After referring to the policy of the Government on trade matters, Mr. Meighen said: "The gravest charge which I will always hold against this Government is that they preach a doctrine in which they have no real belief."

A second charge was that in attempting to continue the national policy, they had overlooked the guiding principle that, as the manufacturing industries developed and acquired a hold on the home market, it was essential that duties should be reduced in order to meet changed conditions. The Government, he thought, had become a slave to those who placed it in power and maintained it there.

Taking history for witness Mr. Meighen quoted from speeches of Sir John Macdonald and Hon. Geo. E. Foster to show that it was the intention of the founders of the national policy to give Canadian manufacturers a reasonable hold upon the home market before reducing the tariff. When in 1894 the tariff on agricultural implements was reduced from 35 to 20 per cent., Mr. Foster contended that the intention of the then Government was to create a condition that would tax the ingenuity of the manufacturers to retain the home market.

Mr. Meighen contended that one reason for the reduction of duties was that the manufacturers of agricultural implements were in a unique position, the exports being five to one, compared with the imports, and with one exception the exports exceeded the imports of any industry in Canada.

Proceeding, Mr. Meighen showed that the tariff on agricultural implements was not a revenue tariff. The revenue from that source was trifling in relation to the total customs revenue, and to that collected on other and much less important manufactures, it being only $283,633, or if plows were excepted, which represented the largest import item of agricultural implements, the duty under this head was only $92,974. Then, if the relation of imports to exports was the same throughout, the revenue from customs from this class, instead of being $61,000,000, would be under $19,000,000, which was obviously no tariff for revenue.

W. E. Knowles (Lib., Moose Jaw), replied to Mr. Meighen. He advanced the argument that binders, for instance, had increased in value since 1896, which accounted for the increased valuation.

Mr. Knowles said that, like Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he was a believer in free trade ideas as they have it in England. It would be impossible to have such a policy in Canada. He preferred the Government's policy in regard to the tariff to that of the Opposition. He had no quarrel with the present resolution, but why did Mr. Meighen ask for a reduction on duties on all commodities which the agriculturists required?

He then proceeded to deal with the question generally. It was about time, he said, that the infant industries of the country were able to stand by themselves. One of the infant industries was able to go to the United States and spend three million dollars in the purchase of a factory. This would indicate that the time had arrived when they should be able to go out and meet the competition of the world. But the manufacturers seemed to regard protection as a divine right.

Mr. Knowles, continuing, believed that the best policy for Canada at the present time was a tariff for revenue. A lower tariff would bring a larger revenue. The Government in the past had made considerable reductions in the tariff, and he hoped for further reductions in the future.

R. S. Lake (Qu'Appelle) said that, while Mr. Knowles had made a free trade speech, he had been careful to refrain from saying that he would support Mr. Meighen's motion.

It was almost six o'clock, but John Herron (Macleod) was able to place himself on record in favor of the resolution. He would have been pleased if it had gone farther, because he was of the opinion that the time had arrived when all the duty should be taken off binders, mowers and such articles, which are successfully sold in foreign countries against competition.

NO STRANGER DID IT.

Slayer of Lobinski Knew Him, Say the Police.

Berlin, Jan. 19.—The inquest on the body of Franz Lobinski, murdered last week in his little cottage near the village of Wellesley, was not finished yesterday. When it is resumed on Monday, Jan. 30, there are likely to be developments of a sensational nature, as a result of the work of Detective Boyd and High Constable Huber. The officers are at work on important clues, and so informed Coroner Glaister at yesterday's session.

In the meantime the feeling in the neighborhood is that the crime was committed by persons sufficiently well known to the old miser as to gain admittance to his house on a friendly call. It seems more than likely that they asked the loan of some money, and a quarrel followed the old man's refusal. It is known that the hammer with which the deed was done was kept ordinarily in a cupboard in the house.

Dr. Marty of New Hamburg and Dr. McEachren of Linwood, the physicians who conducted the post-mortem on Monday, agreed in testifying that Lobinski's skull was fractured by the hammer found at the rear of the house. Three wounds were deep enough to penetrate the brain, any one of which would have caused instant death.

Rudy Leis, the neighbor who discovered the body, swore that the old man had shown him what money he had in the house. There was $130 in gold in the little tin box which was later found with the hammer and bottle containing paris green. He testified also that Lobinski carried $100 in bills in his possession. The deceased had told the witness that he possessed $1,200 in addition to his other property.

Simon Huber, a neighbor, swore that on last Wednesday evening, between eight and nine o'clock, he heard a sleigh going past his place down the lane towards Lobinski's, and he said he heard the bells as far as Lobinski's house, and then did not hear them any more.

FORESTRY CONVENTION

The Big Gathering Is Opened by Earl Grey.

Many Prominent Canadians Present at Congress of Delegates From All Over Canada—Addresses Are Delivered by Premier, Governor-General, Hon. Clifford Sifton, Sir L. Gouin, and Others.

Quebec, Jan. 19.—Hon. Clifford Sifton, whose work as the head of the Conservation Commission has aroused such widespread interest, delivered an excellent address at the afternoon session of the Forestry Association. He chose for his subject the question of "Forestry Problems and Forest Fires." At the outset he pointed out the early difficulties which beset the pioneers in forestry work. Despite the indifference on the part of the public. Mr. Sifton contended that no movement in modern times had made such genuine progress as the conservation of our forests. He told of the early struggles he had to obtain a vote of $15,000 for the establishment of a forestry school in connection with the Department of the Interior. Since the establishment of that school no less than 15,000,000 trees had been planted in the western provinces.

His Excellency, Earl Grey, in opening the meeting dwelt on the beneficial results which had flowed from previous conventions and from the establishment of the Commision of Conservation and from the work of the Canadian Forestry Association. Earl Grey held that as pioneer conditions were now past, wasteful methods of handling forests which were allowable in early times should now be changed; that effort should now be directed to protection of existing forests and to the reproduction of desirable species of trees on lands cut or burned over.

He urged Canadians to be up and doing in order to save this great national heritage. He drew from his own observations in various parts of the world a picture of the dangers which confronted Canada if deforestation was allowed to go on unchecked, while on the other hand he pointed to some of the older countries which are now deriving a permanent and increasing revenue from their forests.

Addresses of welcome were delivered by Sir Lomer Gouin, Premier of Quebec, and Mayor Drouin. Other addresses were delivered by representatives of the various provinces, the United States, the churches, universities, chambers of commerce, manufacturers, etc.

Hon. Clifford Sifton, in his address in his usual vigorous style, said the time for talking was past and that now there should be action. He referred particularly to the loss from fires and the danger of waterpowers being alienated from the people. He pressed for the extending of the fire protection system throughout Canada, and told what has been done in various provinces in this respect.

Hon. Jules Allard, Minister of Lands and Forests for Quebec, dealt with the improvements made in the regulations in the last few years, which had resulted both in increased care of the forest and increased revenue. He took occasion to refute a statement going about that the developed waterpowers of Quebec did not exceed 50,000 horse-power, and showed how large an asset the waterpowers of Quebec were.

R. H. Campbell, Dominion superintendent of forestry, who has charge of all the forest land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, and in the 40-mile belt along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia, told of the areas and purposes of the forest reserves in providing timber and fuel for settlers and in protecting the headwaters of streams. This latter was the main purpose of the great reserve formed last year covering the eastern slope of the Rockies. He emphasized the point that the aim was to conserve the benefits of the reserves for all the people, and to this end he said it was necessary to reserve timber lands from settlement, so that the timber might be managed for the benefit of the people generally, and that a permanent policy of management might be carried out.

At the last moment H. S. Graves, chief forester of the United States, was unable to come, but sent one of his lieutenants, J. G. Peters, to take his place.

A letter of regret was also received from Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines for Ontario, spoke of the present conditions in regard to lumbering in Ontario and the change in the methods of sale from the bonus system to the plan of selling at so much per thousand feet on the stump. He also spoke of the reorganization of the fire-fighting service of the province and what had been done in regard to making permanent forest reserves and in extending Algonquin National Park.

Hon. A. K. Maclean, Attorney-General and Commissioner of Lands of Nova Scotia, dealt chiefly with the results of the forest survey of the province during the past two years under the direction of Dr. B. E. Fernow, dean of the faculty of forestry of Toronto University. The purpose of this survey is to show just where the province stands, that measures may be taken to conserve what is left.

Hon. W. C. H. Grimmer, Surveyor-General of New Brunswick, told of the importance of the forests as revenue-producers and the measures that are being taken to protect them, especially from fire.

In the evening the delegates were banquetted by the Government.

Death of Former Kingston Man.

Brockville, Jan. 19.—Word was received here yesterday of the death at Hornell, N.Y., of Dr Frank H. Koyle, for a number of years a prominent resident of Athens and later of Brockville. He was a graduate of Queen's College, Kingston.

TO BAR WOMEN.

Ladies and Children Kept Out of the Schenk Trial.

Wheeling, W.Va., Jan. 19.—All women and children will be barred hereafter from the trial of Mrs. Laura Farnsworth Schenk. This was announced by Judge Jordan in court yesterday after a great deal of testimony unfit to print had been given in examination by medical witnesses.

Among those excluded from the court room by order of Judge Jordan was a fifteen-year-old girl, who had stood before the court room door nearly an hour waiting admission before court convened. Three boys were also banished from the room despite their protests that they were old enough to attend.

There was an imposing line-up of medical and scientific men upon the prosecution's side of the counsel tables when the trial was resumed, six doctors and chemical experts being seated beside Prosecuting Attorney Handlan.

Mrs. Schenk showed few traces of worry over blows of the day before against the defence when she hurried into the room. She engaged in a ten-minute conference with her attorneys and seemed cheerful over the day's outlook.

Dr. L. E. Burns, an expert diagnostician, who answered a 1,500 word hypothetical question on Tuesday by declaring under oath that Schenk had been poisoned, was the first witness called to the stand.

His cross examination was immediately commenced by counsel for Mrs. Schenk, and the testimony adduced was mostly of a technical nature.

"In your opinion was the blue line on Schenk's gums caused by lead poison in the system?" Dr. Ackermann was asked.

"Yes."

"Why did you instruct Mr. Schenk to take meals only at the hospital and none from his home?"

"I reasoned that lead poison could only come from his home."

Local Option Deputation.

Toronto, Jan. 19.—A local option deputation waited upon Hon. W. J. Hanna yesterday afternoon with requests for more rigid enforcement clauses in the law.

Among those present were: Rev. G. A. Woodside, Rev. W. J. Cadman, R. D. Little, Wm. Leggett and T. Jamieson of Owen Sound; Rev. J. McKenzie and N. B. Allan, Shelburne; Rev. Henry Harper, Orangeville; Rev. J. Buchanan, North Dundalk.

The deputation from Owen Sound asked that the lessee be held responsible for the illegal sale of liquor on his premises. It was stated that an elaborate system of subletting had been evolved there.

Hon. Mr. Hanna said that if the deputation could submit a more effective clause than the present one the Government would adopt it.

Another request was that the right of search be extended to the person of the bartender.

Would the deputation favor going to the extent of the Manitoba Act and endorse unlimited search? asked the Provincial Secretary. The question was not answered.

The deputation asked that all persons providing accommodation for travelers in local option municipalities should be licensed.

Hon. Mr. Hanna pointed out that this might be a hardship, as some residents might be willing to receive acquaintances but not strangers, as they would be compelled to if licensed.

An increased in the penalties was also requested.

Redmund Is President.

Dublin, Jan. 19.—John E. Redmond, who was yesterday unanimously re-elected president of the United Irish League; T. P. O'Connor, Joseph Devlin and Daniel Boyle, the Irish members of Parliament who visited the United States and Canada last October for the purpose of arousing interest in the cause of home rule, were the guests of honor last evening at a dinner at the Mansion House, arranged as a compliment for the success of their mission across the sea.

During the course of his speech Mr. Redmond declared that the veto power of the House of Lords would be abolished before the coronation, without the creation of the new peers. He said that so long as the Liberals abided by their pledges on the veto and home rule questions, the Irish party would support them, without regard to any minor issues, but, he added, the smallest deviation would mean instant change in the party's attitude. He did not object to the home rule bill being so drafted as to fit in with a larger plan.

East Against West.

Montreal, Jan. 19.—At its closing meeting here yesterday afternoon the retiring council of the Montreal Board of Trade instructed its transportation officers to appear before the Railway Commission and oppose the application of the Vancouver Board of Trade for a reduction in the rate charged by the C.P.R. from British Columbia coast points to points east of the Rockies in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, so as to place them on an equality with the rates charged to the same points from Montreal, Toronto and eastern points, from which the actual rail haul is longer.

The board bases its opposition on the ground that it is unfair to expect the railway to haul freight across the Rockies for the same money as it receives for the haul across the level prairies.

THE MOTHER OF FIFTY.

Proud Boast of Widow Van Wyk of the Transvaal.

In the district of Kroonstad, in the Transvaal, lives the widow Van Wyk, whose history, matrimonially and otherwise, is—not to put too fine a point upon it—somewhat out of the common. Born on October 20th, 1832, Mrs. van Wyk (nee Theila M. de Beer) began what was to prove an eventful matrimonial career at the age of eighteen, when she married Petrus Jacobus Lubbe.

At the end of two years she became a widow with one child. After being a widow for ten months (says The Volkstem) she married Nicolaas Marthinus Pretorius, a widower with four children. After living with him for a year and five months he also died, leaving her with five children. After five months she married, for the third time, David Stephanus Pieterse, a widower with seven children.

With him she lived eleven years and had seven children, when he also died. After five years' widowhood she married, for the fourth time, Daniel Lodewikus Cronje, a widower with eight children. With him she also lived eleven years and had four children, when he, too, died. Five years later she married, for the fifth time, Hendrik Klopper.

With him she also lived eleven years, and had ten children, when he also died. After two years she married for the sixth time, on this occasion with Coenraad Hendrik van Wyk, a widower with five children, Wyk, a wodower with five children, and with him she had four children.

After having lived together for eleven years he also died. She had thus fifty children who call her mother, and about 270 grandchildren. She is still alive at the age of seventy-eight years.

Busy Queen Mary.

In business matters Queen Mary is clear and expeditious, methodical and systematic. Her mornings are generally taken up with attending to the voluminous correspondence that arrives by every post.

Her secretary and lady in waiting submit their letters and the Queen gives instructions concerning them. According to The North American Review she quickly grasps the main issue of a question and soon makes up her mind.

She has never been known to lay aside a matter on the ground that to express an opinion thereon is irksome or difficult. But should any letter require further consideration it is held over for a day, when a decision is given and almost invariably adhered to.

Every consideration is shown to those privileged to serve the Queen, and before signifying her pleasure as to the personal attendance of members of her houshold she will often inquire whether they may not have some other engagement the breaking of which would be inconvenient to them.

Busy though the Queen is—and one who has known her for 20 years has never seen her unoccupied—she is intimately acquainted with and takes part in all that relates to the management of the household. Every servant is known to her, and their conduct is as much a matter of concern to their royal mistress as that of any one else. In fact no detail of life wearies the Queen, hence the reason that her sympathies are wide and all her days full of work.

After, Not Before.

To lie in state is counted great,
A special honor giving.
And is for those, you may suppose,
Who do not lie while living.

ONTARIOS MET THEIR WATERLOO

KINGSTON, Jan. 18.—The Frontenacs, junior Canadian hockey champion, made a light lunch of the Belleville juniors here to-night in their O. H. A. scheduled game. At Belleville on New Year's Day the locals defeated Belleville by a score of 9 to 0. To-night the "Speed Boys" developed a great scoring streak, and tallied 24 goals to Belleville's 2. About 1200 spectators were on hand, and saw some spectacular stick work and speedy combination on the part of the Frontenacs.

Belleville played a hard, steady game and are a good bunch of boys who will be heard from next year. Marchand in goal, Davidson at point and McCammon at cover worked like well-drilled corps. On the forward line Hunt, Brouse, Millan and Boyer played like veterans. The teams:—

Referee, George Van Horne, Kingston.

TRUAISCH AMENDS HIS DECLARATION

Mr. F. J. Truaisch, Montreal, proprietor of the Lipton Cafe, has filed an amendment to his declaration in the case against the License Commissioners, seeking the renewal of his license.

In the amendment, which was allowed by the Practice Court, Mr. Truaisch alleges that he was never notified that any opposition would be made to the renewal of his license; that renewal was refused on the ground that his premises did not have the proper equipment; that proof of such deficiency was never made; that the premises of the Lipton Cafe are provided with all the equipment required by law and that the decision of the commissioners, in refusing confirmation of the license was ultra vires.

A Sure Cure.

Mother—I'm afraid Gwendoline is setting her heart on that young Penniless.

Father—You think so?

Mother—I am almost sure of it.

Father—Well, he is not a fit person for her to marry. He is as poor as a rat and has no prospects. Something must be done to set her against him.

Mother—I have thought of that and have hit upon what I think is an excellent plan.

Father—Yes? What is it?

Mother—We must tell her that we want her to marry him.

The Park of the World.

Kioto, Japan, is spoken of as the "park of the world." Everything here is beautiful. It was formerly the capital of the empire. It has a population of 380,000. Within the city limits are 378 Buddhist temples and eighty-two Shinto shrines. The principal products are pottery and porcelain, cut velvets, cloisonne wares, brocades and embroideries. The beauty of the products is significant of the beauty of the place.

His Queer Way.

Little Girl—Mother, is Uncle John deaf?

Mother—No, dear. Why?

Little Girl—Every time he gives me five cents he says, "What do you say?" and I'm never saying a word.

Date of the Row.

The Bachelor—Yes; she has threatened to make things unpleasant for him. The Benedict—Is that so? When are they going to be married?

CAPE HUNTING DOGS.

A Terror to African Game and the Despair of Sportsmen.

Hunting where and in whatever country he likes, without leave or license, the Cape hunting dog is not only a terror to many kinds of African game, but the despair of sportsmen generally. Once afoot with his game, says Baily's Magazine, a kill becomes almost an absolute certainty. He needs no help.

He stands twenty-five to twenty-seven inches high, with good galloping quarters, rather long but very muscular legs, with strong feet and toes. The ears are very large and erect, beautifully formed to catch the faintest sound when working in thick coverts. Added to this he has a very keen sense of smell.

The jaws are wonderfully strong, with beautiful white teeth. They can break bones which few animals except the hyena could crack, and the strength of the latter's jaws is proverbial.

Their mode of hunting is very clever. Having found and started a buck, some of the fleetest dogs gallop forward ahead of the main pack, keeping on either side to prevent the buck turning and doubling back. As these dogs tire they fall back, and others take up the running in their place. When the quarry tires the pack closes in, and all their energy is devoted to killing by tearing out the viscera.

Some writers say the pack takes the form of a crescent when running their prey, gradually closing in as the game tires. All agree that the short time taken in running down a buck is simply marvelous, a quarter of an hour being the estimated time in hunting, killing and consuming a buck under ordinary circumstances.

The wild dog is not at all fastidious as to what food he shall take, but he levies toll on any sort of buck or antelope he finds handy. Gnu, sable and waterbuck are said to be his favorites, but he has been known to pull down a buffalo when pressed for food. Needless to say, when attacking a powerful animal like this some of the dogs meet with a sudden death, and these are consumed by the surviving members. They always seem ravenous for food and their appetites nearly insatiable. There is no record of their having attacked a white man.

The Right Number.

A teacher in giving a lecture to the members of her junior hygiene class had cautioned them against eating anything hard, such as nuts, hard candy, etc. A small boy held up his hand.

"What is it, Sammie?" she inquired.

"Say, did you ever see any of these here candy jaw breakers?" he asked.

"Ye-s, I believe so," she hesitated wonderingly.

"Well, Willie, here," indicating another boy in the class, "stood right in front of Gregorie's store yesterday and et five of them right down."

"Ate," corrected the teacher.

"Aw, was it eight? I was thinkin' it was only five."

The Inevitable.

"You don't resent that successful candidate's proud and haughty manner?"

"Nope," rejoined Farmer Corntossel. "The fact that he's in politics is all the guarantee I want that sooner or later he'll meet with some kind of a terrible finish."

THE BEST REMEDY

For Women—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleville, Ont.—"I was so weak and worn out from a female weakness that I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took several bottles of it, and I gained strength so rapidly that it seemed to make a new woman of me. I can do as good a day's work as I ever did. I sincerely bless the day that I made up my mind to take your medicine for female weakness, and I am exceedingly grateful to you for your kind letters, as I certainly profited by them. I give you permission to publish this any time you wish."—Mrs. ALBERT WICKETT, Belleville, Ontario, Canada.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will cure female weakness and so successfully carry women through the Change of Life as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female ills—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you want special advice write for it to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

grew. Then the darkeys went out in 'dug outs' and gathered them."

"SHUCKING" THE OYSTERS.

There was a brief picture of the negroes' cabins, where the men sat "shucking" the oysters, throwing the shells in a big heap on the dirty floor while the oysters themselves would be thrown into a barrel in the corner open to the air supplied in a room which was living and sleeping apartment for a none too clean lot of barefotted pickaninnies.

There was also a hint at the old swash-buckling days around the oyster, when the press-gang would go out and seize men, drunken and disreputable perhaps, on the street, place them on the oyster boats, and then if they refused to work, shoot them by the dozen and throw them overboard, where they could tell no tales.

GUARD AGAINST TYPHOID.

"How about contaminated waters and the stories of typhoid?" asked the scribe, perhaps following a logical train of thought after the last story.

Mr. Mosley leaned forward and spoke impressively.

"There are analysts with a dozen letters after their names working hours every day in laboratories to analyze the waters from the different oyster beds. When they find any contamination there, the bed from which they came is destroyed. Of course we can't control the waters of the sea, but we can control the situation of the bed. The ordinary oyster that we get—the kind that isn't under the pure-food law—is as different from the others as chalk is from cheese. These big every-day oysters are simply 'bloted,' perhaps 'floated,' too."

BLOATED AND FLOATED.

Mr. Mosley went on to explain that these bloated oysters are, after being taken from the shell, placed in ordinary fresh water for a time, which soaks into and makes them twice the size they should be, and of course detracts from their natural flavor.

The floated oysters are those which while still in the shell, are placed in floats—probably in a Jersey creek—and left there until the end of the ebb tide. As a result, towards the end of the ebb tide the water is practically absolutely fresh, and in this way the oysters get an elegant soaking or floating of fresh water for about six hours.

AMERICAN AND ENGLISH.

Most of the American oyster beds are situated along the Long Island Sound in the United States. In England, the Whitstable oyster ground, Essex, furnishes the best liked and highest priced oysters for the people of that country. There are beds, too at Colwell, at Mumbles' Head, Swansea, Wales, at Cleethorpe and other places. That at Cleethorpe is not a natural oyster bed, but the American oysters are constantly being transplanted there.

There are few oysters grown in Canadian waters, and these are found in their wild state along the shores of Prince Edward Island.

"BLUE POINTS" ALL YEAR.

The favorite Blue Point oysters are grown in but one place in the world—Great South Bay, off the south shore of Long Island, New York. And the Blue Points can be gathered any time of the year, regardless of weather conditions, for the Great South Bay, forty miles in length by five in width, never freezes to such an extent as to make passage impossible.

MISS VIVIEN GOULD.

The engagement of Miss Vivien Gould, second daughter of George J. Gould, and Baron Decies of England probably will be announced this winter, according to friends of the Gould family. While no member of the family will confirm the report, none will deny it, and it is a fact that Baron Decies is now a visitor at Georgian court, the magnificent country place of the Goulds at Lakewood.

Vivien Gould is to make her debut this winter. She is about half the baron's age. Although she was a maid of honor for her sister Marjorie when the latter married Tony Drexel, she was not officially "out," and her formal introduction to society, which probably will be in January, will surpass anything Mrs. Gould has ever given.

John Graham Hope Horsely Beresford, Baron Decies, succeeded to the title only a short time ago through the death of his brother. He will be forty-four years old on the 5th of next month. He is a distinguished soldier, being lieutenant colonel of the Seventh hussars, and won his D. S. O. in the campaign against the Mad Mullah in Somaliland. He served in the Matabele war of 1896 and in the Boer war four years later.

His peerage was created at the beginning of the nineteenth century in favor of the younger brother of the first Marquis of Waterford, who was the Protestant archbishop of Tuam.

Baron Decies is a noted cricket and polo player and is keenly interested in hunting and racing. He first met Miss Gould, it is said, at the home of Lord and Lady Maidstone, where she went on a visit with her sister, Mrs. Drexel.

Mrs. Glyn at Home.

Mrs. Elinor Glyn, the author of "His Hour" and "Three Weeks," is in private life Mrs. Clayton Glyn, the wife of an English squire and justice of the peace. She is described by those who know her as being very striking in appearance—tall and slender, with a very white face surrounded by masses of auburn hair. She dresses with an apparent desire for complete self extinction, for what one sees of her face, even when sitting next to her at luncheon, is the most fugitive of glimpses. She applies the same elusive tactics to her personality, and one acquaintance of hers declares that it must require successive cycles of lives fully to understand her. She is said to be addicted to spiritualism, to be sensitive to unfair criticism and to love luxury. She writes her books reclining on a soft sofa, not far—in winter—from a roaring fire. By preference she writes at night, and a favorite Persian cat is usually present. She is said to be subtle, charming and elusive. She tells one amusing story about herself. An American illustrated paper in publishing her photograph referred to her as a lady who was eternally trying, but without success, to get into society. Unfortunately the photograph they published showed her in the robes in which she was presented at court.

Don't Give Up Hope.

It is never too late to learn. A woman eighty years old has just matriculated at the Ohio State university. Such a tardy defiance of pickles and fudge almost breaks the record.

Good Form

A bridge or euchre party is a pleasant form of entertaining friends in the evening and entails but little effort on the part of a hostess, for unless she has four tables prizes are not necessary, and the supper served may be simple or elaborate, as she chooses.

While it is permissible to invite friends by writing the date and hour on one's visiting card, it is not really good form when both men and women are asked for the evening. For a formal evening affair a note should be sent, and the communication should be brief and read something like this:

> My Dear Mrs. Smith—Will not you and Mr. Smith play bridge with us on Tuesday evening, the 25th? We are asking friends to come at half past 8 and shall hope to see you. Cordially,
>
> ELIZABETH JONES.

Such a note requires an immediate answer, accepting or regretting, that a hostess may know without delay whom she is to expect.

In arranging an evening of cards a hostess should always regard herself as an extra and invite enough to play.

Women who entertain much know to their sorrow that it is not unusual for one person to stay away through illness, and so the hostess must play, and this would obviously be impossible if she has not figured herself as an extra.

Tables ready for playing should be in their places before guests arrive, and a name card at each place or written on the score will save confusion.

It is customary to wait until all guests arrive before starting the game, but if all wait for just one the hostess may give the signal for play and take the cards of the late one herself until he or she arrives.

Sweet Potato Pie.

Parboil sweet potatoes and when done peel them and grate. Measure the grated potato, and to a solid pint of it allow one-half cupful of butter and three-quarters of a cupful of sugar. Cream butter and sugar together, add the beaten yolks of five eggs, beat in the potatoes and flavor with cinnamon and nutmeg to taste and the grated rind of a half lemon with the juice. Stir in a wineglassful of brandy and, last of all, the whites of the eggs, beaten very stiff. Pour the mixture into a deep tin lined with puff paste and bake.

Nut Cake.

One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of sugar, three and a half cupfuls of pastry flour, four eggs, one cupful of raisins, one cupful of walnuts, one cupful of milk, vanilla to flavor; cream butter and sugar, add eggs, then three cupfuls of the flour in which two teaspoonfuls of baking powder have been sifted twice. Add the milk alternately with the flour, and lastly add the fruit and nuts, chopped and dredged with the remaining half cupful of flour. Bake forty minutes.

Yorkshire Pudding.

A very nice accompaniment to a roast of beef. The ingredients are one pint of milk, four eggs, beaten separately; one teaspoonful of salt and two teaspoonfuls of baking powder sifted through two cupfuls of flour. Mix very smooth, dip some of the drippings from the roast into a baking pan, pour the pudding in, put in hot oven, bake about half an hour, take out at last moment and send to the table hot with the roast.

Orange Marmalade.

Four tart oranges, two lemons, cut in small pieces; take out the seeds; put five pints of water over the oranges and lemons and one-half pint over the seeds and let stand twenty-four hours, then drain the water off the seeds and boil all two hours, then add five pounds of sugar and boil until it jells. This makes six or eight jelly tumblers.

PORTUGAL'S COLONIES

THEY ARE A POOR LOT OF BADLY RULED TERRITORIES.

Although She Stands Fourth Among the Powers in the Extent of Her Dominions, Portugal's Colonies Have Been Burdened With Officialdom and Absentee Landlords, Who Bleed the Natives.

Portugal possesses a queerer collection of colonies than any other nation. In mere area they extend to over 800,000 square miles, twenty-five times the extent of the mother country, with a population approaching ten millions, which is almost double that of the homeland. Brazil is, of course, not included in these figures, which place Portugal fourth amongst colonial powers; those exceeding it being the British Empire, France, and Germany in the order named.

Statistics, however, give a comparatively poor idea of Portugal's property abroad. It is very widely scattered, notwithstanding the circumstance that there remains not a solitary scrap of her once widespread dominions in the Western Hemisphere. All the remaining colonies are in Africa and Asia, about 790,000 square miles in the former and 10,000 in the latter. Portugal, in this sense, is far more in the Dark Continent than even in Europe, and the fact is worth bearing in mind in view of the developments which may follow the establishment of the Portuguese Republic.

Hitherto Portuguese colonial methods have, at least in modern times, savored rather of comic opera. We have probably all read stories of how British gunboats, of the "flat-iron" type, put fear of international law into the hearts of Portuguese officials surely ensconced in fancied security far up African rivers. We have heard also of how a mere handful of Britishers has, quite unofficially, compelled the surrender of Portuguese forces entrenched in walled towns which might, or might not, belong to them.

That these tales may have had some foundation in fact no one who has come into contact with Portuguese methods will entirely deny. At all events most people who have had the misfortune to experience these methods will admit that they are more trouble than they have hitherto been worth either to Portugal or otherwise. It is, to begin with, extremely difficult to find a genuine Portuguese land settler in any Portuguese colony. Until now their people will not emigrate to countries under their own flag, although they go in considerable numbers to Brazil and to British colonies. The result is that Portugal, in her own colonial territories, is represented almost entirely by officials, military and civil, and by a few merchants who subsist because their nationality gives them some sort of a "pull" over their competitors. Here and there you may come across lands owned by Portuguese planters, but if you care to make enquiry the chances are that you will find the lands are under the control of salaried managers, Portuguese or otherwise, whose chief concern is to remit as much money as possible to their absent principals without being too particular as to how it is got out of the estates.

Portuguese East African is the most familiar instance of the dog-in-the-manger policy pursued in Portuguese colonies. Every schoolboy knows that its chief ports, Lorenzo Marques, Quilimane, Beira and Chinde, are the nearest, and in some respects the chief gateways to the Orange River and Transvaal Colonies, and to Rhodesia. No one who has not experienced them can realize the artificial obstacles with which the Portuguese have hitherto persistently blocked these entrances. The system which has prevailed with regard to customs and sanitary regulations at these east African ports has been exposed over and over again, and heartily anathematized by Britishers whose person and property have been submitted to its tender mercies.

The only possible way to enter them without working oneself into a fever—of which there is plenty present without that—is to bribe judiciously. Individually the officials may be suavity itself—sometimes they are very much the reverse—and they have to supplement their wretched pay as best they can during their tenure of office. But when all is done the aggravating fact remains that the elaborate regulations they enforce with an eye to the main chance are, in practice, utterly useless to prevent either the evasion of revenue duties or the introduction of human and cattle diseases into the hinterland. Add to this the fact that from Delagoa Bay to midway north of Lake Nyassa, Portuguese East Africa is conterminous for over a thousand miles with British territory in the same region, and it is easy to understand that South Africa as a whole will welcome any change of Government in Lisbon which will impose the ordinary safeguards and amenities of civilization upon the inhabitants of the Portuguese colonies of Mozambique and Lorenzo Marques.

For similar reasons, in the southwest of India, the Portuguese colony of Goa has long been a thorn in the side of British authorities. Old Goa used to be described—and is still so titled according to Portuguese official ideas—as the capital of the "State of India"; whilst there is a Portuguese saying to the effect that if you have seen Goa you need not trouble to look at Lisbon. Three hundred miles from Goa are Dimaun and Diu. Elsewhere in the East are Timor, Macao.

Angola is in West Africa; an area larger than France and bounded by Belgian, British, and German states. Such importance as it has attained is due to the railway connection through it to the coast from the copper mines on Lake Tanganyika and Katanga, 1,200 miles away; a line due to British energy and enterprise. It ought to be a flourishing region, but it is not so, very much for the same reasons as those which have kept back Portuguese East Africa.

Zam-Buk Will Give Ease in One Night

For badly chapped hands, cold cracks, frost bite, etc., Zam-Buk is the best known balm. Wash the hands or part affected in water as hot as can be borne. Dry with a soft towel and then smear the Zam-Buk well over the part. If it is the hands wear a pair of old gloves over night. By morning the pain will be gone. Then use Zam-Buk a few more times and the cracks will be healed. Mrs A. F. Phillips, of Ayers Cliff, Que., says: "I suffered terribly from chapped hands. At times my hands were so sore that I could have almost have cried with the pain. I thought I would try Zam-Buk and see what that wonderful healing balm would do for me. I obtained a supply and in a very short time my hands were cured."

Mrs. W. H. Baillient, of Port Hawkesbury, N. S., writes: "Some time ago my hands were very badly chapped. Ordinary ointments did not heal them, and I was advised to try Zam-Buk. To my great delight it healed my hands in a remarkobly short time."

BACHELOR WANTS TO BE JUDGE

CHICAGO, Jan. 17.—Municipal Judge Jacob H. Hopkins, a bachelor, has asked to be appointed to preside over the new court of domestic relations which will be opened February 1.

"I am an active candidate for that position," said Judge Hopkins.

"Seriously I do not believe it is any place for a married man for several reasons. Being a bachelor, I would certainly be a disinterested party. All sorts of cases involving domestic troubles will come before this court. I believe a bachelor has a much better chance of rendering unbiased judgment than the husband and father when family affairs influence his feelings."

A judicious flatterer adds a spice of adverse criticism to his praise.

Did you ever see a confirmed knocker who didn't get a rap every time he turned around?

Self confidence alone never moved any mountains.

You may be sorry you are alive, but don't let your next door neighbor guess the truth.

THEATRE MAN BADLY HURT

Strange Accident to Mr. Shivrick --Sword Flew Out of Actor's Hand

HAMILTON, Jan. 18.—Robert Shivrick, assistant manager of the Right House, met with a strange accident at the Grand Opera House to-night He had just got nicely settled down in about the eighth row from the front to watch the Imperial Russian ballet when the sword of Mikoil Morden, who with Anna Palova, is at the head of the company, came out of the handle and flew over the orchestra striking Mr. Shivrick. The sword did not cause any serious damage, but a wedge, a few inches long, used to fasten the blade in the handle, struck him on the forehead, penetrating to the brain. Mr. Shivrick, who was sitting beside Dr. Pryse Park, with whom he lives, was lifted out of the aisle and was able to walk to the back of the theatre. The wedge was removed with difficulty and the injured man hurried to St. Joseph's Hospital where he was immediately placed on the operating table. His condition is regarded as critical. The incident did not interrupt the performance and many did not know that anything unusual had happened, although some women in the immediate vicinity of where he sat threatened to become hysterical. The dancer was handed a new sword and the performance continued as though nothing had happened. The police investigated but took no action.

CHICAGO, Jan. 19.—A murder came to light here to-day, when a milkman came upon the body of a man, with an arm and a leg chopped nearly off.

The victim was well dressed; his hands were soft and well cared for, indicating that he was not a laborer. In his pocket was found a letter from a friend in the city, asking that the deceased to look after the writer's wife and family.

Nearby was found a short-handled axe, covered with blood and a few feet farther away were two revolver cartridges, empty.

The victim was about 30 years old and of medium build.

FOUR GRADUATED AT THE HOSPITAL

Four Young Ladies Completed the Course and Were Graduated--Highly Interesting Exercises --Mr. Johnson's Pertinent Speech--Dr. MaColl's Able Address to the Graduating Class—Annual Report Highly Favorable—Prospects of the Institution are Bright

Four nurses at the Belleville Hospital, namely, Misses Pearl Wilson Eva Batstone, Emily Deyell and Margaret Morrison, have completed their course and graduated. Last evening at the Hospital the graduating exercises took place, when the talented young ladies received their diplomas amidst the applause of the assemblage.

It was a representative gathering of the citizens at the institution, the assembly room being filled. It had been tastefully decorated with bunting for the occasion.

MR. JOHNSON SPEAKS.

Mr. J. W. Johnson, M. P. P., was chairman, and seated upon the platform with him were the young ladies who had graduated. They looked exceptionally neat and trim in their nurses' garb; Mrs. J. Lewis, President of the W. C. A., and other ladies who are members of the Association and take a deep interest in the work and Drs. Gibson, MacColl, Mather McCullough and Boyce were amongst those who occupied seats near the dais.

The chairman, after calling the meeting to order, requested the Rev Dr. Bishop to open the proceedings with prayer which was appropriate to the occasion.

Mr. Johnson then gave a brief address. He referred to the fact that it was the seventh graduating exercises which had been held under the auspices of the Belleville hospital and the Advisory Board of the institution were not only gratified at the attendance but also at the success of the graduaes. It was an evidence of the skill displayed at the hospital by those in control that the results of the evening had been achieved. All who of necessity had been inmates of the hospital were well pleased at the attention they had received. The speaker then referred to the fact that some thirty years ago the hospital was established in spite of difficulties by a noble band of ladies, and their good work was being carried on to-day by another band of self-sacrificing ladies In and out of season these good women are alive to the interests of the institution. He then referred to the fact that some time ago Dr. Bruce Smith, Government Inspector, had recommended the with-holding of the government grant unless certain im- were made. This had been done and a new addition to the hospital was about completed. When this was done it would be his, (the speaker's) pleasure to invite D. Smith and members of the Government to visit and inspect the hospital' (Applause.) This work had largely been the result of the ladies' persistent efforts to have an up-to-date hospital. No endowment had been given but the citizens had willingly contributed, and the City Council had also aided. The speaker referred to such contributors as Mr. H. Corby R. Tannahill, and T. Ritchie, who took an active interest in the institution. No more skillful treatment could be secured than in our hospital even though it was not so large as

Whiskey Bottles Packed In Barrel With Frozen Water

COBALT, Jan. 19.—Chief of police Calbick returned this afternoon from Kelso, where Constable Lefebvre seized sixty cases of liquor being shipped into the gold country. A very ingenious method was used for concealing part of the shipment, consisting of five cases. The bottles were packed in straw in a barrel filled with water, this was allowed to freeze, the barrel head replaced and the whole painted. Lefebvre discovered the goods because the bung of the barrel was forced out by the freezing water This was consigned from Toronto to the East Whitney Mining Company The balance was packed in cases and addressed to fictitious names in small lots. Sam Morgan, Cobalt, was summoned to explain the matter, as he was said to be endeavoring to get the shipment through.

WINE RIOTS IN FRANCE

Many Thousands of Dollars Worth of Liquor Was Let Loose in Streets

PARIS, Jan. 19.—The series of wine riots which has broken out in the champagne district is seriously occupying the attention of the Government, which to-day decided to despatch troops to end the disturbances in the Rheims district, where the local authorities are helpless.

Although the misery of the wine workers, resulting from poor crops and small wages, is recognied officially, it is pointed out that large sums already have been appropriated by Parliament to alleviate the sufferings.

Last night 2,000 men and women from the surrounding country marched into Hauteville, carrying red banners and singing revolutionary airs. They broke into several wine cellars and, smashing the casks, poured the contents, valued at thousands of dollars, into the streets, until the thoroughfares fairly ran with champagne. Thousands of bottles of wine were smashed.

(Intelligencer Special.)

TORONTO, Ont., Jan. 20.—Messrs. The Crown Attorney was not ready to proceed with the case, and it was adjourned until next Thursday.

CLAIRVOYANTS ROB FARMER OF $4480

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 19.—In his anxiety to sell his elevator at Hanna City, Alva Stewart came to Peoria, visited a couple of clairvoyants in an effort to find a buyer, and now he is out $4,480. The discovery was made yesterday morning.

Some few days ago Stewart sold his farm near Hanna City for $4,480, and placed the money in a Peoria bank. He told the clairvoyants his desire to sell his elevator, and they convinced him that with but little trouble the buyer, through a few seances could be located at their direction.

He brought his money from the bank to their parlors, in a canvas bag, and placed it on a stand. The room was darkened, the spirits were summoned and then the lights turned on again.

Stewart was told to take the money back to the bank, but not to open the bag for several days. To open the bag, they told him, would ruin everything. Yesterday, the time being up, he went to the bank and opened the bag. He found nothing but old waste paper.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

An aviator alighted on a ship, just as would a real bird which had been blown off shore.

Free Trade within the Empire would raise the standard of living in Britain, says the London Morning Post. Probably, but it wouldn't do a thing to Canada.

A lot of the London poor house inmates, let out when the old-age pensions were extended to their class drew their weekly dole, spent it on more or less moderately riotous livin in a day and went back to the poorhouse. This is not surprising Pauperism takes the manliness out of men and makes them poor of spirit as they are of wealth. The old-age pension, if it reduces pauperism, will do it because it will get to the people before they enter the poorhouse.

The fact, just came to light, that the Dominion Government has lost a hundred thousand dollars because an official responsible failed to send a certain notification to the guarantee company in connection with the Quebec bridge erection after the collapse of that structure, is one of those discouraging things that sometimes happen in connection with governments One thing is certain, namely, did such happen in connection with a private company, the official whose carelessness is responsible, would be looking for another position in twenty four hours.

The Pennsylvania grafters who made a lot of money out of the building of the Capitol, have been made to disgorge to the extent of over a million dollars. Whether or not the American grafters are superior in their skill and daring to the Canadian variety may be regarded as for the present, an open question; but there is no doubt that the American people in their methods of dealing with their grafters can give the Canadian people valuable pointers. The records of Canadian graft are black enough for a young country; but the records of Canadian grafters made to disgorge is not very imposing.

FINE MUSIC BY THE TERRITORIAL BAND

(From the Toronto News, Nov. 24.)

Commissioner Coombs of the Salvation Army, may be justly proud of his Territorial Staff Band, which, although a comparatively young organization, has already won for itself a front rank place in the Canadian musical world, and this in spite of a difficulty that does not confront any other musical combination, namely the limited supply of the music to be played. While the world's market of compositions is open to any band, the music at the disposal of the Territorial Staff Bank is either in composition or arrangement the productions of some member of the Army, and which has passed the critical ear and scrutinizing eye of an expert musical board which sits in regular periods in London, England, and which considers only such pieces as are suitable and fitting with the methods adopted by the Army for the prosecution of its work. It is not intended, however, to infer that the music is such as can only be appreciated in Army circles—not by any means. The marches are inspiring and the selections often include old and familiar hymns and tunes which form the ground work for brilliant and attractive arrangements.

The members comprising the Territorial Staff Band are, with one or two exceptions, officers of the Salvation Army, and are attached to the Territorial Headquarters in Toronto in various capacities, such as departmental heads, assistant managers, accountants, cashiers, architects, secretaries, clerks, etc.

Not only does the term made by the Salvation Army apply to the music played by this organization, but the instruments used are manufactured at the Army's own factory, and the splendid scarlet tunics worn are the productions of the tailoring department, and even the players themselves have been trained since entering into the ranks, and in this direction great credit is due to Brigadier H. Morris, the bandmaster and conductor of the band.

The mission of the Territorial Staff Band is a particularly praiseworthy one, as its object is purely evangelistic and no monetary consideration is being received by any of its members.

Since the inauguration of the band it has held itself in readiness to respond to the invitation from even the smallest town. The programme during such engagements includes civic receptions, services in government institutions, such as prisons, houses of refuge, hospitals, and of coursea number of public services both in and out of doors.

These engagements are not allowed to interfere with the regular duties of the bandsmen at headquarters, and usually the band leaves on Saturday afternoon, returning to the city by the earliest possible train on Monday morning. Wherever the band has appeared it has met with enthusiastic receptions by the public and press, the largest buildings available have been crowded, and men of prominence including members of Parliament, Mayors and captains of industry have considered it an honor to preside at their services.

On the occasion of the visit of General Booth to Canada last year, the Territorial Staff Band was privileged to accompany him to Montreal, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces.

The composition of the Territorial Staff Band is purely brass, and along similar lines to the "Bess's of the Barns" and "Black Dike" bands, but it does not excel alone in this direction, but can include in its repertoire selections from an excellent male voice choir and quartette, also vocal and instrumental solos by soloists of exceptional ability.

The band will appear in Belleville to-morrow night and Sunday.

FAMILY REUNION ON WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs. James Wallace Congratulated by Many Friends —Happy Evening

On the 19th of January, 1881, Mr. and Mrs. James Wallace, of this city, were married, and yesterday was the 30th anniversary of that auspicious event. In commemoration of the affair a family reunion was held last evening which proved to be a pleasant function. Only the immediate members of the family were present, including Mr. and Mrs. I. Wallace, who were married yesterday. Mr. and Mrs. James Wallace were the recipients of a number of beautiful and useful gifts, including a handsome punch bowl and tumblers. This was a gift from the employees of the establishment. Among other gifts were two sets of pearl handled knives and forks. The supper provided in the dining hall was a sumptuous repast. The unanimous wish of all present was that Mr. and Mrs. Wallace may be spared for many years to come to enjoy life.

VICTORIA CROSS MAN IS IN BELLEVILLE

He Served In Army and Navy and Won His Mark of Valor At Ladysmith

Thomas Reynolds, formerly first-class petty officer of the British cruiser Powerful, the two 4.7 guns from which were the means of preventing the Boers from capturing Ladysmith, was a visitor at The Intelligencer office to-day. Mr. Reynolds, who won the Victoria Cross at the relief of Ladysmith, where he lost his right eye, also served in the 9th Lancers in Afghanistan and saw a good deal of fighting in 1879, 1880 and 1881 with the hill tribes, who are a tough subject for any regular troops to encounter. He also wears the Afghan medal and star for service during Lord Roberts' march from Candahar to Cabul, during which there was some stern fighting. Mr. Reynolds has been given employment on the C. N. R. construction at Giroux's camp.

FORMER RESIDENT DIED ABROAD

From the La Grange, Ill., Citizen of the 7th inst, we learn that a former much respected citizen of Belleville has passed away in the person of Mrs. Robert Simpson, who for many years resided at the corner of Emily Street and Bleecker Ave.

The La Grange Citizen of the 7th inst. states that Mrs. Simpson was an invalid for some eight years before her death and that she was buried in Kingston.

It will be remembered that Mrs. Simpson's only daughter was one of the most successful teachers Belleville's Public Schools has had, and that she married Dr. R. F. Worth, with whom she moved west.

Mrs. Simpson was for many years a much-appreciated and active member of Bleecker Ave. Methodist Church in this city.

CHURCHES HAD A PROSPEROUS YEAR

Membership Increased--Financial Results Satisfactory--Progress in all Departments

The Presbyterian churches of the city, namely St. Andrew's and John Street, had their annual meetings on Wednesday night and satisfactory progress all along the line was reported.

ST. ANDREW'S.

By the statement of the Kirk Session it was shown that 38 additions had been made to the membership during the year, 28 by profession of faith and 10 by certificates from other congregations. Eighteen names had been removed from the roll—16 by certificate and 2 by death. The total membership of the congregation now numbers 335.

The report of the Board of Management shows that the receipts from all sources were about $4740.34.

The Sunday School report shows that the average attendance was 198 scholars, teachers and officers. The enrollment of scholars is 243, 31 teachers and officers.

The following changes were made in the Board of Managers: Messrs. J. McIntosh and A. Gillen were elected to take the place of Messrs. Wm. McIntosh and J. A. Laidlaw, retiring. The only other change was in the election of Mr. W. Leslie to the Treasurership, vacated by Mr. B. Mallory.

JOHN STREET.

The various financial statements were read and showed that the past year was the best in the history of the congregation. The total amount collected for all purposes was $4,600, of which $1,430 were for missions and other benevolent purposes. During the year 39 new members were received, and 28 removed from the roll by death and removals, leaving 226 on the roll. During Mr. Drumm's pastorate of eight years 229 members had been added to the church.

Messrs. W. C. Springer, J. Oman, W. S. Cook, I. Moore and S. Robinson were elected to fill the vacancies on the Board of Managers. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Rev. A. H. Drumm for his excellent services during the past year. Similar votes of thanks were given to Mr. James Little, treasurer of the board, Mr. R. Templeton, treasurer of the session, and the various societies and organizations of the congregation for their zealous and effective exertions during the year.

GIVEN AWAY BY HER FATHER

The following account of a wedding at Toronto is of local interest, the bride being the daughter of Mr. S. G. Beatty, who was for many years a popular resident of Belleville.

"Oakdene," the residence of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Beatty, Isabella street Toronto, was the scene of a charming wedding on Wednesday afternoon when their daughter, Norton, became the bride of Mr. Bruce Macdonald, son of the late W. Macdonald, K.C. Roses and carnations mingled with smilax and palms decked the drawing room for the ceremony at which Rev. Dr. Rose officiated, and an orchestra played the bridal music. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, was attired in a lovely robe of white chiffon and lace and pearls over satin. A coronet of orange blossoms held in place her beautiful rose point veil, and she carried a shower of roses and lilies, and wore the diamond ring, her gift from the groom. Mrs. Jack Boeckh, as matron of honor, was her sister's only attendant. Her frock of pink chiffon over satin, was adorned with tiny pink roses, and she wore a lingerie hat with huge pink bows, and carried an old fashioned round nosegay of roses and violets. Mr. Mock McGivern was best man. A reception for the immediate friends and relatives was held later by Mrs. Beatty, who was wearing painted black chiffon over pale blue. On departing later for their new home in Uplands, Cal., the bride travelled in sapphire blue cloth with black lynx furs and hat to match.

Gentlemen:

"I am a reader of the ———Weekly and I notice they give you a great deal of criticism of late.

"When they first began to criticize you I became somewhat interested and began to wonder what your Grape Nuts breakfast food was like, and as my curiosity got the best of me, I bought a package and liked it so well have used several packages. And to my surprise I fined that I am gaining in weight and feeling fine.

"Since using Grape-Nuts I have talked with several people about them and they all think as I do, that they are the best breakfast food on the market to-day.

Respectfully,

GRAFTING WAS UNCHECKED

Mr. Northrup is doing excellent service on the Public Accounts Committee at Ottawa in connection with the investigation which is now being made into the management of the Printing Bureau, and the more the matter is probed the more scandalous become the disclosures. On the 17th inst. Mr. J. O. Patenaude was on the witness stand. He was formerly assistant to Frank Gouldthrite, late superintendent of stationery. Mr. Patenaude admitted to Mr. Northrup that he was awar that for two or three years there had been overstocking and that exorbitant prices were being paid. He testified that these facts had been reported to the Secretary of State in 1909. Mr. Northrup asked if, after the Minister had been informd, buying went on just the same, and overstocking continued.

Mr. Patenaude—"Yes. Nothing was done until the summer of 1910."

"Were you aware that an extraordinary increase in price was being paid?"

"Yes." He added that it was common conversation at the Bureau. He knew that the most expensive papers were being sent to the penitentiaries.

And that is the way in which the public money has been squandered by grafters, even in Ottawa, under the nose of the Government; but the Printing Bureau affords only an inkling of what has been done on a vastly greater scale in the great spending departments.

Happily the day of reckoning cannot be much longer delayed.

BRITISH TRADE AND INVESTMENT

Striking proof of the immensity of the wealth of the United Kingdom is found in the figures prepared in London by experts at the close of the year as to the overseas investments during the past twelve months. A prominent feature of the figures is the tremendous development which has taken place in what may be called imperial securities, representing as they do, loans to integral parts of the British Empire.

During the year no less a sum than £83,000,000 ($415,000,000) was loaned to British enterprises, of which Canada secured no less than £32,000,000 ($160,000,000), Autralasia £10,000,000, Africa £10,000,000 and India £14,000,000. Of the total of £83,000,000 lent to Great Britain over £21,000,000 was in the form of direct Government loans, £4,500,000 in municipal issues, and £14,000,000 for railway enterprises.

These figures afford very strong evidence of the change of spirit which has come over the minds of British investors in regard to the development of the Empire. Although vast sums of money are still loaned to foreign countries, notably to the United States and Argentina, it is worthy of note that out of a total investment of £515,000,000 in the past three years, nearly one-half, £228,000,000, was sent to the overseas dominions, and these are not the nominal values of the stocks and bonds, but the actual rate at which they were issued to the public.

Canada occupies a large place in these investments. Mr. George Paish, the editor of the Statist, who presented the figures to the Royal Statistical Society, says:

"The outstanding feature of the financing of our overseas Dominions during the past three years has been the extraordinary progress which has been made in the matter of industrial activity and prosperity in Canada, a progress which has been greatly stimulated by the use of British capital."

He further says that the visible capital sent to Canada during the past three years represents £100,000,000, and that the total investments in Canada must be nearly £400,000,000, and great as is this total we are given the assurance that there is plenty more from where that comes. Mr. Paish again says:

"Canada still needs a large sum of money for the completion of railways now under construction, and inasmuch as the Mother Country is proud of the great progress of her daughter and is willing to supply her with all the capital she needs to develop her resources, it is evident that our capital investments in Canada will reach a much greater total in a few years."

The estimates of the aggregate amount of money which may be regarded as invested by Great Britain abroad, both in her overseas dominions and in foreign countries, are striking. In the former case it is estimated that the aggregate amount of capital provided by British investment is no less than £1,554,000,000, while the total in the latter case is in another way on the assumption estimated at £1,638,000,000. Taking it that these figures are approximately correct, practically one-half of the wealth invested by the British people outside of the home country is in the various stocks of the overseas dominions. Considering the comparatively short period during which investment in Greater Britain has been proceeding the showing must be regarded as remarkable and very satisfactory.

THE MEETING WAS ILLEGAL

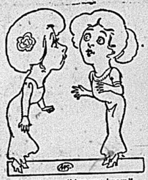
KINGSTON, Jan. 19.—The Kingston Presbytery met this afternoon to discuss the question of church union, which had been deferred from a meeting in Belleville last autumn until the regular March session, after a very warm debate. The meeting this afternoon was a special one called by the moderator and was objected to by Rev. Dr. Mackie, of Kingston, and others on the ground that it was illegal to discuss a matter which had been postponed until a definite time. The Presbytery upheld the protest and the discussion on the matter was not held. The Presbytery sustained the call of the Church of the Redeemer, Deseronto, to Rev. F. S. Dowling, of Brantford. Prof. S. W. Dyde, of Queen's University, principal-elect of the new Presbyterian College at Strathcona, Alberta, applied to the Presbytery for a license to preach, as his appointment requires that he be a minister of the Presbyterian Church. It will be granted.

DO WOMAN WANT VOTE

Do women really want to vote? asks a contemporary. With all the agitation that is being created by the suffrage associations in Great Britain Canada and the United States, do the other sex desire to have a hand in the controlling of the destinies of the nation? Judging from the polling in municipal elections it would not appear so. In Toronto, for instance, in the sixth subdivision in the Second Ward, there were 93 names of women on the regular viters' list. These women were entitled to vote for mayor, aldermen, controllers, and school trustees. They were all notified by official post card as to the place at which their votes could be polled Only 13 of the 93 turned out to vote. In the supplemental list of those entitled to vote for members of the board of education there were the names of 55 women and one man. All were notified by post card of the time and place of voting. The man voted but not one woman of the 55 women voted. In subdivision 4 of Third Ward there are 153 women board of education voters. They polled just seven votes. The experience of Toronto in getting women out to vote on all days is the same in other municipalities.

It would appear that they are either too busy or too indifferent to attend to their duties as electors, and this, more than anything else, is due to little attention paid to the plea of "votes for women."

In dealing with this question, "Kit" in the Mail and Empire, says: "The way the women of Toronto acted in regard to the Municipal Vote the other day is not encouraging for the Suffragists. Dozens of women never went near the polls and the few who did didnt know much about it. They lost an opportunity to learn how to manage when they get the vote political. Are Canadians at large anxious for the franchise? It certainly does not look like it. Of course we have not the pressing need for it which the British women have, but the movement is started here, and no doubt the vote will come our way Wouldn't it be a bit wise for women to wake up and learn something about votes and voting? The indifference shown by them towards the Municipal vote is startling. What is the cause of it, sheer laziness of ignorance?"



"You tell everything you know."
"I don't either."
"You do too."
"I don't talk as much as you do."
"No; you say very little."

Getting Into a Scrape.

Many years ago the wild deer that roamed through the forests of England used to dig holes in the earth with their forefeet. They pawed it out sometimes to the depth of several inches, sometimes a foot or more. These holes were called "scrapes," and travelers at dusk or night or those who were careless about their footing often tumbled into them. They were laughed at for their heedlessness when they came home covered with mud, and as this frequently occurred after they had been imbibing a bit they were said to have "got into a scrape." Some Cambridge students took up this expression, and thus it came to be applied to people who had got into difficulties of various sorts.

When the Turkey Said 'Good-bye'.

The five turkeys we had taken on subscription were stolen from us some time Wednesday night, and no trace of them has been found. We don't regret the loss so much because we'll be minus Christmas and New Year's dinners, but since the turkeys came we've written some sassy editorials about the meat trust, holding ourselves high and independent of it, and now we'll have to help out the blamed trust by purchasing a couple of cans of sardines to fill the void caused by the loss of the turkeys.

To Save One's Bacon.

"To save one's bacon"—that is, to make a narrow escape—is supposed to refer to the Dunmow flitch. For many centuries it was the custom at Dunmow, in England, to present a flitch of bacon to a married couple of twenty years' standing who would make oath on the Scriptures that they had never had a quarrel. To come close to a quarrel without an actual rupture was, in the popular dialect, "to save one's bacon."

Women and Shopping.

Smiles irradiated the floorwalker's face. Business had been poor, but it was picking up for that day. How did he know? Women were shopping in pairs and trios.

"They always buy so much more," he said, "when they come in bunches. When a woman shops alone she buys only what she needs or can afford, but when she shops with friends she buys what she wants them to think she can afford."

Inducements Wanting.

"Why does Willie Smifkins refuse to be a good boy just before Christmas?"

"Because," answered the boy who always knows the answer, "he belongs to one of those families that believes in giving none except useful presents."

DIZZINESS

Mrs. J. B. Renaud, of Goldrich St., Sturgeon Falls, Ont., says:

"I have suffered for months with a very weak stomach. I had dizzy spells, and at times could not retain any food at all. I tried any number of remedies and prescriptions but none seemed to relieve me until I tried Mi-o-na Tablets. I used one box only and they have completely cured me of my troubles. I am pleased to recommend Mi-o-na as I know it to be a remedy of merit."

Mi-o-na is sold by druggists everywhere at 50 cents a box, and is guaranteed to cure dyspepsia, indigestion sick headache, nausea, heartburn sour stomach, belching of gas, dizziness, heavy stomach, and car sickness, vomiting of pregnancy, and the after effects of over-eating or drinking—or money back. The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"That's an old story now," intervened Pyne quickly. "Climb up on my shoulder and have a look at the sea. Perhaps there may be a ship, too."

"What did Mr. Pyne tell you?" whispered Brand, pretending to make a secret of it with Elsie.

"There didn't seem to be 'nuff to eat," she explained, seriously, "so Mr. Pyne kep' a bit of biscuit in his pocket, an' Mamie 'n' me had a chaw every time we saw him."

"H'm," murmured the man, glancing up at his young friend as he walked around the trimming-stage with the delighted Mamie. "I suppose he asked you not to tell anybody?"

"We wasn't to tell Miss Constance or Miss Enid. An' they told us we wasn't to tell him about the sweet stuff they put in our tea. That is all. Funny, isn't it?"

Brand knew that these little ones were motherless. His eyes dimmed somewhat. Like all self-contained men, he detested any exhibition of sentiment.

"I say," he cried huskily to Pyne, "you must escort your friends back to their quarters. No more idling, please."

"An' you will really send for us tomorrow to see the milkman?" said Elsie. Notwithstanding his sudden gruffness, she was not afraid of him. She looked longingly at the great lamp and the twinkling diamonds of the dioptric lens.

"Yes. I will not forget. Good-bye, now, dearie."

The visit of the children had given him a timely reminder. As these two were now, so had his own loved ones been in years that might not be recalled.

The nest would soon be empty, the young birds flown. He realized that he would not be many days ashore before the young American to whom he had taken such a liking would come to him and put forward a more enduring claim to Constance than Mr. Traill made with regard to Enid. Well, he must resign himself to these things, though no man ever lost two daughters under stranger conditions.

When Pyne returned, Brand was ready for him. The struggle was sharp, but it had ended.

"I would like you to read your uncle's letter," he said. "I am clear in my own mind as to the right course to adopt. If Mr. Traill wishes to win Enid's affections he will not take her by surprise. Indeed, he himself recognizes this element in the situation. You will not rush away from Penzance at once, I take it?"

"No, sir," said Pyne, with a delightful certainty of negation that caused a smile to brighten his hearer's face. "I may not get clear of the rock for several days. There is much to place in order here. When the relief comes, I must help the men to make things ship-shape. Meanwhile, Stanhope—or Constance, whom you can take into your confidence—will smooth the way—"

"No, sir," interrupted Pyne, even more emphatically. "When you come to know my uncle you will find that he plays the game all the time. If Enid is to be given a new parent the old one will make the gift. And that's a fact."

Brand waived the point.

"The girls have plenty to endure here without having this surprise sprung on them," he said. "I will write to Mr. Traill, and leave events ashore in his hands."

So, for a night and the better part of a day, the pillar locked in its recesses some new doubts and cogitations. As between the two men a stronger bond of sympathy was created. Pyne, in those restless hours, was admirably tactful. He talked a great deal of his uncle. Soon, not only Brand, but the two girls, seemed to be well acquainted with a man they had never met.

With the morning tide the anarchy of the waves ceased. The children were brought to the lantern to witness a more majestic sight than the arrival of the "milkman." With the dawn the sun appeared, and the sea seemed to sink into long-deferred slumber under his potency.

The flood tide of the afternoon brought the unfailing tug, towing the Penzance life-boat. The crane was swung out and Jack Stanhope, as was his right, was first to be hoisted to the entrance and to exchange a hearty hand grip with Brand.

Behind the lighthouse-keeper were ranged many faces, but not that which the sailor sought.

"Where is Enid?" he asked, after the first words of congratulation were spoken. "Have you told her?"

"No. Here is Mr. Pyne. He will take you to the girls and tell you what we have decided."

The two young men looked at each other with frank friendliness.

"When we have a minute to spare you must take me to the gallery and explain just how you worked that trick," said Stanhope. "Brand's semaphore was to the point, but it omitted details."

"That is where I have the pull of you," responded Pyne with equal cordiality. "I don't require any telling about your work yesterday."

"Oh, people make such a fuss. What is there remarkable in guiding a boat through a rough sea?"

In such wise did young Britain and young America pooh-pooh the idea that they had done aught heroic.

Indeed, their brief talk dealt next with Enid, and Lieutenant Stanhope, R.N., did not think he was outraging conventionality when he found Enid in the kitchen, and took her in his arms and kissed her.

Constance and Pyne discovered that the tug as seen through the window was a very interesting object.

"You don't feel at all lonesome?" he murmured to her.

"Not in the least."

"It must do a fellow a heap of good to meet his best girl under such circupmstances."

"Mr. Stanhope and my sister have been the greatest of friends for years."

"Is it possible to catch up? The last few days on the rock ought to figure high in averages."

"Jack," cried Constance, finding this direct attack somewhat disconcerting, "did my father say that any arrangements were to be made for landing?"

"Yes, miss," interposed a sailor at the door. "The skipper's orders are: 'Women an' children to muster on the lower deck.'"

Then began a joyous yet strangely pathetic procession, headed by Elsie and Mamie, who were carried downstairs by the newly arrived lighthousemen. The children cried and refused to be comforted until Pyne descended with them to the life-boat. The women followed, in terrible plight, notwithstanding the wraps sent them on the previous day. Each, as they passed Stephen Brand, bade him farewell and tearfully asked the Lord to bless him and his.

Among them came Mrs. Vansittart. Her features were veiled more closely than ever. Whilst she stood behind the others in the entrance, her glance was fixed immovably on Brand's face. No Sybilline prophetess could have striven more eagerly to wrest the secrets of his soul from its lineaments. Nevertheless, when he turned to her with his pleasant smile and parting words of comfort, she averted her eyes, uttered an incoherent phrase of thanks for his kindness, and seemed to be unduly terrified by the idea that she must be swung into the life-boat by the crane.

She held out her hand. It was cold and trembling.

"Don't be afraid," he said gently, patting her on the shoulder as one might reassure a timid child. "Sit down and hold the rope. The basket cannot possibly be overturned."

Pyne, helping to unload the tremulous passengers beneath, noted the lady's attitude, and added a fresh memorandum to the stock he had already accumulated.

"Who is that?" asked Brand from the purser, who stood beside him.

"Mrs. Vansittart."

Brand experienced a momentary surprise.

"She seemed to avoid me," he thought, but the incident did not linger in his mind.

The life-boat, rising and falling on the strong and partly broken swell, required the most expert management if the weary people on the rock were to be taken off in safety.

When Constance and Enid, followed by Stanhope, reached the boat after giving Brand a farewell hug, there was no more room. The crew pulled off towards the waiting vessel, and here a specially prepared gangway rendered the work of transhipment easy.

Mr. Traill was leaning over the bulwark as the life-boat ranged alongside. He singled out Pyne at once, and gave him a cheery cry of recognition. At first he could not distinguish Mrs. Vansittart, and, indeed, it must be confessed that he was striving most earnestly to descry one face which had come back to him out of the distant years.

When his glance fell on Enid, his nephew who was thinking how best to act under the circumstances, was assured that the father saw in the girl the living embodiment of her mother.

He thought it would be so. His own recollection of his aunt's portraits had already helped him to this conclusion, and how much more startling must a flesh and blood creation be than the effort of an artist to place on canvas the fugitive expression which constitutes the greatest charm of a mobile countenance.

Enid, having heard so much about Mr. Pyne's uncle, was innocently curious to meet him. At first she was vaguely bewildered. The sunken eyes were fixed on hers with an intensity that gave her a momentary sense of embarrassment. Luckily the exigencies of the hour offered slight scope to emotion. All things were unreal, out of drawing with previous experiences of her well-ordered life. The irregular swaying of the boat and the tug seemed to typify the new phase.

Pyne swung himself to the steamer's deck before the gangway was made fast, thereby provoking a loud outcry from the deserted children.

Grasping his uncle's hand, he said:

"Wait until you read Brand's letter. No one else knows."

So, Mr. Traill, with fine self-control, greeted Mrs. Vansittart affectionately, and handed her over to a stewardess, who took her to a cabin specially prepared for her. Her low-spoken words were not quite what he expected.

"Don't kiss me," she murmured, "and please don't look at me. In my present condition I cannot bear it."

Relatives of the shipwrecked passengers and crew, many of whom were waiting in Penzance were not allowed on board. This arrangement was made by Mr. Traill after consulting a local committee organized to help the unfortunates who needed help so greatly. The unanimous opinion was expressed that a few lady members of the committee, supplied with an abundance of clothing, etc., would afford prompt relief to the sufferers, whilst the painful scenes which must follow the meeting of survivors with their friends would cause confusion and delay on the vessel.

Pyne watching all these things, saw that Mrs. Vansittart did not meet his uncle with the eagerness of a woman restored to the arms of the man she was about to marry.

She was distraught, aloof in her manner, apparently interested only in his eager assurance that she would find an assortment of new garments in the cabin.

The millionaire himself was too flustered to draw nice distinctions between the few words she spoke and what he expected her to say. When she quitted him he walked towards the group of young people. They were laughingly exchanging news and banter as if all that had gone before were the events of a lively picnic. At last, he met Enid.

Pyne introduced his uncle, and it was a trying experience for this man to stand face to face with his daughter. In each quick flash of her delighted eyes, in every tone of her sweet voice, in every winsome smile and graceful gesture, he caught and vivified long-dormant memories of his greatly loved wife of nineteen years ago.

Somehow he was glad Mrs. Vansittart had not lingered by his side. The discovery of Enid's identity involved considerations so complex and utterly unforeseen that he needed time and anxious thought to arrange his plans for the future.

The animated bustle on deck prevented anything in the nature of sustained conversation. Luckily, Mr. Traill himself, whose open-handed generosity had made matters easy for the reception committee, was in constant demand.

Mrs. Sheppard had sent a portmanteau for Constance and Enid, so they, too, soon scurried below with the others.

The life-boat returned to the rock, where the four lighthouse men sent to relieve Brand were now helping the sailors to carry the injured men downstairs and assisting the sick to reach the entrance.

As soon as this second batch was transferred to the tug, the vessel started for Penzance; the Trinity tender would land the others.

There was a scene of intense enthusiasm when the steamer reached the dock. The vociferous cheering of the townspeople smothered the deep agony of some who waited there, knowing all too well they would search in vain for their loved ones among these whom death had spared.

The two girls modestly escaped at the earliest moment from the shed used as a reception-room. All the inhabitants knew them personally or by sight; they attracted such attention that they gladly relinquished to other hands any further charge of the shipwrecked people. So, after a few words of farewell for the hour, Stanhope piloted them to a waiting carriage and drove away with them.

Mrs. Vansittart did not emerge from her cabin until the deck was deserted. She found Mr. Traill looking for her. In a neat black dress and feather hat she was rehabilitated.

"Why didn't you show up earlier?" he asked in good-humored surprise. "The breeze on deck was first-rate. It brought the color into many a pale cheek. And the way in which the crowd let itself go was splendid. Look at these waiting thousands—quivering yet with excitement!"

"I am worn out," she said quietly; "take me to your hotel. You have engaged rooms there, I suppose?"

"Of course."

"When do you purpose leaving Penzance?"

"Well—er—that is part of the explanation I promised you."

"We can talk matters over in the hotel. Where is your nephew?"

For the first time, he marked her air of constraint.

"Believe me, Etta," he said hurriedly, "that what I have to tell you will come as a great surprise, but it should be a pleasant one."

"Anything that gratifies you will be welcomed by me," she said simply. "You have not said where Charlie is."

"Hiding in that shed. He refused Mr. Stanhope's offer of a rig-out on board. In his present disguise he passes as a stoker, and everybody wants to see the man who saved all of you."

"Have you a closed carriage here?"

"Yes."

"Let us go. Charlie can come with us."

Again he was conscious of a barrier between them, but he attributed her mood to the strain she had undergone.

In the shed they found Pyne; with him were the orphaned children; there was none to meet them. Kind offers were made to care for them until their relations should be forthcoming, but the man to whom they clung would not listen to any such proposal.

hospitals in other great cities. He concluded by congratulating the young ladies who had successfully graduated from such an institution.

Mrs. Col. Campbell was then called upon and gave a piano solo in her usual exquisite mannar.

DR. MACCOLL'S ADDRESS.

Dr. E. A. MacColl was next called upon and delivered the following address to the members of the graduating class.

It is my pleasant duty to-night to address you on the eve of your graduation from this training school.

"The old order changeth and giveth place to the new," may well describe the condition of nursing during the past decade and to foreshadow the future.

Until comparatively recent time nursing, as a business, was in the hands of anyone who, attracted by the remuneration, chose to take up that class of work. They had little or no education and no practical training. The nursing in hospitals that then were, was generally performed by the religious sisterhoods. Frequently, in spite of any organized training, that did very well.

Organized training schools are of very recent date, and their establishment arose from the experience of the army hospitals in the European wars especially the Crimea.

One of the earliest organized training schools was the Institute of Deaconesses in Kaiserwerth, Germany where, in after years, Miss Nightingale completed her early training which made her such a successful advocate of thorough training in nursing.

It was through her generosity in 1860 that a training school was founded in connection with St. Thomas Hospital, London. Other hospitals followed. The Order of St. John performed very satisfactorily the nursing of some of the other hospitals in London. This Order sent most of the nurses that went to the Crimea with Miss Nightingale.

The work done there, under Miss Nightingale's direction, was probably the greatest factor in bringing before the public the great advantages of trained nursing.

Various training schools began to be established in different countries. The New York Board of Charities made a special study of the system in St. Thomas and introduced it in Bellevue Hospital, New York. That was the first training school of any consequence in America, about thirty-five years ago.

During the first fifteen or twenty years, training schools for nurses made very little progress, from an educational standpoint, nevertheless their influence in the establishment of hospitals through the country was enormous.

Once the value of the systemized methods of caring mor the sick was realized, hospitals begon to multiply rapidly, and in almoust every instance a training school for nurses formed part of the organization, so that at the present time there are few towns that cannot boast of hospitals in which nursing is a least far superiar to that of by-gone days. In the first years of the schools but little thought and care was given to the theoretical part of a nurse's work. Her education was almost entirely of a practical kind and what she did with her hands was largely mechanical and little dominated by the mind.

The aids to study in the way of books especially prepared were very meagre. The subjects of dietary and hygiene were hardly attempted at all.

The only ethical training was that unconsciously experienced from discipline, and the unquestioning obedience of a junior nurse to her senior.

This brief sketch of the educational conditions of early days emphasize the great changes that have taken place in recent years, and are still making to improve nursing education.

As soon as the trained nurse became a factor in the every-day life of the community, the better pay began to attract the purely commercial woman with no aptitude for nursing. At the same time the public began to recognize the superiority of nurses who had a high general education and demanded them.

This caused the superintendents of training schools to exercise more care in selecting applicants, having due regard to their preliminary education as well as their personal qualities. At the same time great advances were made in the theoretical training, so as to keep pace with the practical. As a result we have the highly trained and educated nurse of to-day.

Nurses associations are now formed for the education and betterment of its members. Journals are devoted to theory and practice of nursing and are managed by nurses, so that at the present time we are able to say that the practice of nursing has emerged from the chaos of the past to become as true a profession as that of medicine which was evolved from the practice of the apothecaries and barber surgeons of earlier times.

In our training school here we have endeavored to equip you with a knowledge of your profession, as complete as you can get in any other hospital, even though it be larger. In fact I think that the training in a smaller hospital is in some respects better than in a large one.

In a hospital such as this you learn to rely on yourself to a greater extent than in a larger one, where very little is left to the initiative of the nurse, unless she should have the good fortune to have charge of a ward.

Further, you get a better practical knowledge of the diseases, which you will more commonly meet with in private work.

There is more room for originality than is possible under the stereotyped rules of larger hospitals. You come in closer touch with the patients and thereby learn more of the physiological side of your profession.

The practical knowledge you gain in the pharmacy is of great benefit and is very commonly not obtainable in the larger hospitals.

There have been occasions, where you have thought that your teacher was perhaps rather strict and critical of your work but later on it will be a source of great satisfaction to you to feel that you are absolutely sure of your technique and know that you have performed your work absolutely perfect. In nursing the slightest mistake may cost a life.

Methods in nursing, as in medicine are continually changing and you should endeavor to keep yourself conversant with the latest ideas and methods by reading the latest text books and some of the journals of your profession.

As soon as your interest in your profession begins to flag, then you become a less efficient nurse.

Be always prepared to take an undesirable case, as well as those more desirable.

There is nothing more provoking to a physician when he calls a nurse than to be catechised as to the kind of case it is before the call is accepted.

It shows that such a nurse is more concerned for an easy job than for her profession. The soft jobs won't come, and she is employed only when no other is available.

A case once undertaken should, if possible, be carried to its conclusion even if its environment may not be to your liking or the time of your proposed recreations are encroached upon. Leaving a case without good and valid reasons is sure to engender the resentment of the patients and friends. You are about to be called on to enter the homes of the community, and under circumstances of stress and misfortune. Becoming one of the family for the time being you see the dark corners of the home. It is only the necessities of your vocation that give you that knowledge, and it is a knowledge, that must always remain with yourself.

No circumstances whatever should induce you to betray the trust reposed in you, when you are allowed to invade the privacy of that home.

"The nurse deserves small trust who is not privy councillor to herself

"But couldst thou seize some tongues that now are free,

"How church and state would be obliged to thee."

You have chosen one of the noblest professions, the practice of which may be reduced to three things—to cheer to comfort, and support.

"To support as the patient may need.

"To comfort by the alleviation of avoidable pain and distress.

"To cheer with encouraging sympathy.

"To chase the clouds of life's tempestuous hours.

"To strew the short but weary way with flowers.

"New hopes to raise, new feelings to impart.

One would imagine that Shakespeare was under a nurse's care when he wrote:

"When your head did ache

"I knit my handkerchief about your brow

"And with my hand at midnight held your head

"And like the watchful minutes to the hour

"Still and anon cheered up the heavy time

"Saying, 'What lack you,' and 'where has your grief.'"

It is fortunate for the nursing profession that superior and educated women are taking it up. No woman can be too good for a life that saves life and comforts the living. Every refinement will teach you to refine the sick room and the sick. High intelligence gives you an insight into the minds and souls of those whose life and death it may be are in your hands.

That fine intelligence and idealism is necessary to lift the drudgery and disagreeable details of your daily work to their true place, as necessary for a high purpose, and therefore to be done with enthusiasm.

It needs an educated woman to see in the routine of the sick room the path to that ideal, which leavens drudgery with inspiration like His who washed the disciples' feet.

That the personal relationship between doctor and nurse is on the whole of the happiest, there is no need for me to emphasize. It rests in several factors, a community of interest, a due regard for the difficulties and dangers of each other's calling, a mutual confidence in matters pertaining to the welfare of the patient, and a natural respect, which increases with experience.

And now:—

"The nurse's lot is on you, to be found untired

"Watching the stars out, by the bed of pain

"With a pale cheek and yet a brow inspired

"And a true heart of hope, though hope be vain."

And now in conclusion may I be permitted to say that we will watch with interest your future career. Our good wishes go with you, and may you emulate that celebrated nurse whose recent death was heard with sorrow on two continents and of whom a celebrated poet wrote:

"A lady with a lamp shall stand,
"In the great history of the land,
"A noble type of good
"Heroic womanhood."

SUPERINTENDENT'S REPORT.

Miss Greene, lady superintendent presented a report which showed that during the past year there had been twelve pupil nurses. At present there were ten nurses at the hospital and very little sickness had appeared amongst them. There had been during the year many applications from young ladies desiring to enter the profession of trained nurses. The nurses from the hospital were taking their places by the side of nurses from larger institutions. At the outbreak of typhoid in the Cobalt the past season, two nurses from this city did good service. In conclusion, she admonished the nurses to women of character, pure in thought, and cheerful in their profession.

OTHER ADDRESSES.

Brief, but appropriate addresses of a complimentary nature were given by Rev. Dr. Bishop, Messrs. Evans, R. Tannahill, H. F. Ketcheson and Wm. Johnson. All should be their motto. However carefully they had been trained, there would come a time when difficulties will arise. When you are out in your profession and these difficulties arise be prepared and this referred to the good work done in the hospital.

Misses Daley and Wheddick, two nurses, rendered a duet very acceptably.

Dr. Gibson was next called upon to present the diplomas to the members of the graduating class and he certainly gave them come good advice. Work can only be done by work. Exercise the faculties you possess. Be self-confident, and calm when difficulties arise. Be always ready to handle cases whatever the case may be. As you go out from your school and into the larger field of life, show your training; the relation of you to your own school, was the closing thught of the doctor. The lady superintendent has been elected as the head of the Nurses' Association of Ontario. Copy her good features and success would result.

CLOSING PROCEEDINGS.

The diplomas were then presented and Mrs. J. Lewis pinned upon each graduate a pretty badge, emblematical of their profession. The young ladies were also presented with handsome bouquets.

The proceedings were closed by two solos from Mr. D. Cameron which were well rendered.

Light refreshments and coffee were then served to all who wished some.

The Great Star Arcturus.

The star Arcturus, which is known to be a sun for a faraway system of planets, is 11,500,000 times farther removed from us than is our solar luminary. His diameter is 71,000,000 and his circumference about 224,000,000 miles. Our sun is but 866,000 miles in diameter, a fact which proves that Arcturus is at least 551,000 times greater in bulk than is our "great orb of day."

Queen Amelie's Fortune.

All kinds of tales are being told about the pecuniary affairs of the royal family of Portugal. Queen Amelie is certainly in good circumstances, for her marriage portion was 3,000,000 francs and she inherited over 8,000,000 francs from her father, the Comte de Paris. The whole of her fortune has always been safely invested outside of Portugal. Queen Amelie was a beneficiary under the will of the Duc d'Aumale, and she will some day inherit another considerable fortune from her mother, the Comtesse de Paris, who is enormously rich.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Good Practice.

"Yes, sir," said a garrulous barber, "I was a ship's barber on a Pacific steamship for five years and was wrecked and cast away on an island in the south seas. I lived there for two years and never saw a human being, but when I was rescued I flatter myself I was a better shampooer than ever. I kept in practice all the time."

"How did you manage it?" asked the patron.

"I shampooed the cocoanuts."

Paris First In Hotels.

London has a marvelously cheap hotel for the submerged 10th—a great hall where one may sleep on a straw mattress, a board frame or the floor and have a breakfast of bread and soup, all for three cents. And this price pays the expense of the place. But Paris still stands first in hotels, if the French statement of having a guest house that provides a night's guest house that provides a night's lodging for one penny and pays a profit is true. It is a great room on the ground floor, used in the daytime as a factory, through the length of which as 9 p.m. are stretched several strong cables of hemp which are made taut by a windlass and peg in the wall. On either side of each cable is a row of chairs, and as the weary lodgers come in they take the chairs, and, sitting in them, lean forward, resting their arms on the rope and their heads on their arms, sleeping thus until at 6 a.m. an attendant with a mallet knocks out the peg in the wall. Down goes the rope with all who may be leaning upon it, and the room is ready for the work of the day. This may be a classic and familiar story to Parisians, but is not universally known to the world. As a profitable lodging house, where one who sleeps in comfort in his clothes may rest with more of comfort in half the space, the venture is certainly cleaner, cheaper, and more profitable than the London plan.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

DIFFICULTIES ENDED

Fishing Disputes Between Canada and U. S. Settled.

Sir Alan Aylesworth In House of Commons Reports on Recent Conference In Washington—Hon. W. L. M. King's Resolution Regarding Phosphorus Is Passed — No One Wants Commissionership.

Ottawa, Jan. 20.—In the House of Commons yesterday Sir Alan Aylesworth announced the result of his recent negotiations with United States authorities which practically constitutes a clearing up of the final outstanding issues with that country over the subject of the North Atlantic fisheries.

The agreement, which is in the form of a minute of the conference at Washington, signed by all parties present, applies only to Canada. Newfoundland could not reach an understanding with the United States, and in the agreement the republic reserves the right to re-open the questions involved, pending a final disposition.

In the place of referring the matter to a subordinate board of the arbitral court, Sir Alan said the different method of "diplomatic negotiations" had been adopted, which was considered by all parties as the most desirable method of getting rid of the differences, and in the event of a further reference being required, independent commissions are suggested.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King's resolutions concerning the prohibition of the sale of manufacture of opium, cocaine, morphine, and matches made from white phosphorus, were passed.

When the orders of the day were called, Sir Alan Aylesworth rose to give a statement to the House regarding his recent visit to Washington to adjust the final differences in The Hague tribunal.

As a result of the recent conference at Washington, at which a dozen meetings were held, the existing difficulties had been satisfactorily cleared away. In default of this method being successful, it was suggested that a better way of settling the difficulties than that outlined by The Hague tribunal was to constitute two independent boards, one for Canada and one for Newfoundland, on each of which should be a representative of the United States, and a third, who would not be a native of either interested country.

As far as Newfoundland was concerned, it was seen early in the negotiations that no great progress could be made at the present time, and the representative of the island colony left Washington on Jan. 12. It was agreed, however, that the Canadian Ministers should remain, and continue their negotiations, in the hope of reaching an amicable agreement for Canada alone.

The conference was renewed last Friday and Saturday. Four meetings were held, and an agreement was reached, which could be classified under four heads:

(1) Purse seining; (2) prohibition against Sunday fishing; (3) the system of issuing licenses to fishermen; (4) exercising the right to board United States fishing vessels that were suspected of infractions of the regulations.

Finally, it was agreed to amend the existing regulations in three respects: (1) It should not be necessary for fishermen to take out licenses for trap nets for cod or herring set 1,000 yards from the shore, or from any other trap net in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. (2) That fishery inspectors should determine the length of the leaders of the net stretching shoreward from the entrance of the trap. (3) It was agreed that the fishery regulations should contain a clause recognizing the right of United States fishermen to secure licenses. On this point, Sir Alan, in reply to a subsequent question, gave it as his opinion that United States fishermen had a right, under the treaty, to demand licenses.

Concluding, Sir Alan, said that although the United States representatives were not able to come to a final agreement, reserving the right to open the question again, if necessary, owing to an inability to reach an understanding with Newfoundland, the U.S., will not press its objection to the fishing laws of Canada at the present time.

"If the objections were renewed, Canada would be no worse off then than if the agreement had not been entered into. The probability that such a thing would take place was very remote.

"The attitude of the representatives of the United States throughout was of a most friendly character. I am satisfied that each man honestly desired to reach, if it could be possible, a final settlement of these prolonged difficulties, and on each side there was the desire manifested to put an end to these century-long troubles; to make concessions where concessions were necessary; and to settle by friendly conference matters which otherwise would have to be litigated at great expense."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier informed F. D. Monk that no one had applied to the Government for the position of Canadian commissioner for Canada in France, which became vacant in September last.

Replying to Dr. Daniel, the Minister of Labor said that it was not possible to get exact figures as to the number of employes of match factories in the City of Hull and elsewhere, who have been affected with disease of bone due to phosphorous. The Government had information to the effect that men engaged in the making of matches in Canada had suffered from this cause, however.

Brandon Elevator Burned.

Brandon, Man. Jan. 20.—Fire broke out yesterday morning in the premises of the Maple Leaf Milling Co. The firemen were able to confine the fire to elevator No. 1 and the loss was kept down to [illegible],000.

CURATOR CLARKSON ILL.

His Indisposition Delays Unravelling of Bank Case.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—There were no further developments in the Farmers' Bank case here yesterday.

Owing to the absence through illness of G. T. Clarkson, curator, none of the proposed new informations were laid in the Farmers' Bank case yesterday. Mr. Clarkson was reported ill at his home last night and was not at the bank offices all day yesterday. He may not be down till to-morrow, and until he is able to be about again, it is unlikely that there will be any further criminal proceedings taken, unless further evidence arises out of the hearing of the charges against Messrs. Alex. Fraser, A. S. Lown and Wilson, the provisional directors, who appear in the police court to-day to answer a charge of conspiring to secure $10,000 of the bank's funds.

It is reported that Mr. Clarkson has broken down under the heavy strain of his rapid and exhaustive enquiry into the tangled affairs of the bank, together with the heavy responsibility placed upon his shoulders, and he was confined to his bed yesterday.

Dr. Ferguson, one of those to appear to-day, declared yesterday that he will be ready to go on with his case to-day should the crown find itself equally ready. Travers will be used as a crown witness in these cases and has been held at the jail pending use in this and other cases, when he will be sent on to Kingston to serve out his six years' sentence. He has not been interviewed by the crown since the day of his sentence.

It was positively stated yesterday that George Wishart of New York, charged jointly with Dr. Nesbitt with conspiring to steal $300,000 of the bank's funds, had arranged for bail in the event of his giving himself up, and Crown Attorney Corley declared that he would receive bail should he so surrender. "It has always been the custom to admit to bail any man who comes from a distance to surrender himself," said he.

Masten, Starr & Spence have served notice on behalf of W. R. Wood, a noteholder, that motion will be made before Mr. Justice Britton to-day at Osgoode Hall to have an order winding up the Farmers' Bank. Mr. Wood is the holder of the bank's notes to the extent of $1,050, and also holds $100 stock. He alleges that the dealings with the Keeley mines have impaired the bank's capital and asks that the matter be referred to George Kapelle, K.C.

Seized Travers' Yacht.

Kingston, Jan. 20.—The steam pleasure yacht of W. R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank, has been placed under seizure here by Sheriff Dawson, acting for the bank, and will be sold by public auction here on Feb. 1.

Queen's Medical to Argue Case.

Kingston, Jan. 20.—In all probability the authorities of Queen's Medical College will pay a visit to Toronto next week, to give the Government their reason for being opposed to the request of the Toronto Medical College that it be allowed to license its graduates and any who have passed since 1904 without taking the examinations prescribed by the Ontario Medical Council.

It is held by the Queen's authorities that this would be unfair treatment, and that the people would not stand for it. While the council exists and the standards are higher than any medical school in the province, they say, graduates of all colleges should pass the council before being licensed. It is held that the Government cannot give exclusive powers to one college, and if the privilege were given to all, it would not tend to the best qualifications being demanded from medical men who are practicing.

Prof. S. W. Dyde of Queen's University, who has accepted the position of principal of the Theological College at Strathcona, applied for a license to preach at Kingston presbytery today. He was appointed professor of philosophy at Queen's when in his final year of theology at the university.

Couldn't See For Church.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—At a meeting of the members and board of trustees held Wednesday night, it was decided, on the advice of George Hood, to accept the offer made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the Calvary Congregational Church property.

The church has been considered as a disadvantage to the locomotive engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it obstructed their view of the tracks and the block signals.

On the other hand, the passing of trains during the time of service, has been very annoying to pastor and congregation alike. The Canadian Pacific Railway's offer for the entire property was $28,000.

Voted For Union.

Cornwall, Jan. 20.—The presbytery of Glengarry met in St. John's Church, Cornwall, on Wednesday evening for the purpose of considering the basis of union sent down from the general assembly to the presbyteries. After considerable discussion a vote was taken, which resulted in fifteen members voting for the basis and five against it. Afterwards the presbytery decided to overture the assembly to send the basis of union down to the sessions and congregations for their consideration.

Election Riots.

Port Louis, Mauritius, Jan. 20.—Troops were called out yesterday to suppress election riots here and at Curepipe. Many shops and offices were looted by mobs and business has been suspended.

Soldiers guard the banks. Late in the day the troops restored a semblance of order.

Breget Breaks Record.

Douai, France, Jan. 20.—Louis Breget, the French aviator, yesterday broke the world's speed record for a biplane with passenger. He made a flight of 50 kilometers (31 miles) in [illegible] minutes and 51 seconds, and one hundred kilometers in one hour, nine minutes and 28 seconds.

NESBITT WAS AT SOO

He Left For Chicago on Monday Says Hotel Clerk.

Missing Bank President Took Freight Train to the Canadian Soo and Crossed Over the Line—Had Talk With a Canadian Lawyer — Displayed Plenty of Money and Had Considerable Excess Baggage.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 20.—That Dr. Nesbitt was in the Michigan Soo on Sunday and part of Monday is now assured. He registered at the Park Hotel there and during the day conversed with a prominent lawyer of the Canadian side whom he had called across the river for consultation.

While at the Park Hotel, Nesbitt sent telegrams to the Chicago Automobile Club, Charles McEachran, Toronto, and K. H. McCasserty, Toronto, saying, that he had arrived safely and that his trip was a pleasant one. He left on Monday afternoon, presumably for Chicago.

Arrived in the Soo Sunday morning at 9 o'clock, on a freight train which was stopped so he could alight at Pim street, and catch the ferry for the Michigan side, where he registered at the Park Hotel. On his way over on the ferry, he enquired for Uriah McFadden, a prominent lawyer of the Canadian Soo, and later 'phoned for him from the Park Hotel, Soo, Mich. McFadden, who is a friend of Nesbitt, was in conference with him till four in the afternoon.

The fugitive banker had abundance of money with him, according to the story told by Chief Clerk Will Worth of the hotel, who changed $200 in Canadian currency for him, giving him in exchange American bills. Worth also engaged a berth over the Soo line for the doctor, whose immediate destination was Chicago, although it is believed he is bound for Mexico.

He had considerable excess baggage, which included two coats, one an elegant fur-lined garment, several hats, and a trunk full of clothing and other articles. His wallet fairly bulged with currency, the amount of American bills being but a small part of what he had with him.

"Yes, it is true that I was in consultation with Dr. Beattie Nesbitt of Toronto on Sunday," said Attorney McFadden of the Canadian Soo yesterday. "I received a long distance call from him, stating that he wished to see me, and my visit was a professional one. I cannot inform you as to what transpired, for it would be unprofessional. I remained with him from 11 o'clock Sunday morning until between 3 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon."

Killed German Officer.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 20.—Additional color and sensation was given the Lobinski murder case of Wellesley on Wednesday through the statement of an aged Berlin resident, Michael Krumshinski, to the effect that Lobinski, at thirty years of age, had confessed to him of a crime that he had committed over thirty years ago.

Krumshinski told a reporter positively that Lobinski had informed him that he had deliberately shot down an officer of the law while hunting on the forbidden grounds of the German Government. He then fled to Canada to escape the clutches of the law.

Settling in Berlin, and being a neighbor of Krumshinski, the two became intimate, when Lobinski confided to his neighbor the story of the crime. It will, however, have no bearing on the present case.

Another Banker Indicted.

New York, Jan. 20.—F. L. Grant, formerly president of the Northern Bank of New York, was yesterday indicted by the grand jury on a misdemeanor charge of having concealed and failed to report to the bank's directors a loan of $69,000.

The alleged loan was made on Sept. 28 to the Bankers' Realty Co. and the Fidelity Development Co., both controlled by Jos. G. Robin, chairman of the Northern Bank's board of directors, now in the Tombs under an indictment for grand larceny.

Judge Morson's New Record.

Toronto, Jan. 20.—Judge Morson worked for a record in the Division Court yesterday, going through 39 cases in one hour's time. The longest case was that of the Stimson Computing Scale Co., who claimed $75 as the price of a scales they sold to Leake Co. Mr. Leake declared that the Government inspector had condemned the scales as incorrect, and therefore he refused to pay up. The judge agreed with him, but will bring the inspector to court to make sure of everything.

Ellen Terry Honored.

New York, Jan. 20.—In recognition of distinguished services to dramatic art, Miss Ellen Terry, the English actress, was presented with a gold medal yesterday afternoon by the founders of the New Theatre. The presentation was made at the New Theatre before a notable assemblage of men of letters, playwrights, musicians and followers of stage land.

To Miss Terry falls the dual distinction of being the first woman and the first British subject so honored.

Mr. Schwitzer Has Pneumonia.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—Physicians attending Mr. J. E. Schwitzer, the new chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, have decided that he is suffering from pneumonia. Mr. Schwitzer passed a good night at the Royal Victoria, and the doctors do not think that his condition is serious.

Admitted Bigamy.

More Than Suspicious.

Montreal, Jan. 20.—A condition of affairs like unto that revealed by the food investigations made in the United States some time ago, was brought to light at the City Hall yesterday morning, when the Board of Control announced that canned eggs worth $100,000 must be removed from the Gould Cold Storage, where they were brought from Hankow, China. The intention is not to have the eggs destroyed. The board does not know whether it has power to take this step.

"We must see that the market at Montreal is not flooded with stuff which is unhealthy," said Dr. Lachapelle. "If your analysists are able to find a few good cans of eggs, all right. We have found on careful examination by experts that they are bad. If the eggs were only suspicious, we would have refused to permit their sale, but they are more than suspicious. You'll have to take all these eggs from the province, or we'll apply the law, confiscate and destroy them. If you are not satisfied, you can take any legal action you like."

"Our analysists have found that the eggs are not wholesome, and they cannot be used with safety by the public. As far as we are concerned, the case is settled, and settled for good. The city experts and the experts of the Provincial Health Department have decided that they are unfit for consumption."

Plague in Harbin.

Harbin, Manchuria, Jan. 20.—The first serious rioting marking the ravaging spread of the bubonic plague in Manchuria and China broke out here yesterday when persons who attempted to flee from the city were driven back by soldiers. Troops patrolled the streets with orders to shoot down any members of mobs who resisted order to disperse to their homes. The terrified people, stricken with horror and panic, fought with the troops, women taking part in the violence.

Martial law was declared in the suburb of Fudziadian, where the pestilence has taken its heaviest toll of human life.

Some of the streets of the suburb are clustered with dead bodies. It is a common sight to see men and women topple over in the streets and die in their tracks. The air is laden with the germs of decaying human flesh.

Herring Fisheries a Failure.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 20.—The annual meeting of the Charlotte County Weir Owners and Fishermen's Union will be held in St. George, N.B., today and the report of the executive will show a very poor season. The herring fisheries of the Bay of Fundy have been a failure, and conditions among the men dependent on the industry are not such as to cause joy. The president said yesterday that he figured that there were a thousand people directly and indirectly depending on these fisheries.

France Objects to Fortifications.

Paris, Jan. 20.—The French press is much exercised over the Netherlands Government's proposal to fortify Flushing, generally supporting what is assumed to be an objection on the part of the French Government. Whether Holland's reported intention to modify the fortification bill as originally drawn will be satisfactory to both France and Germany, is a matter concerning which there is a difference of opinion.

Fears for Steamer.

Melbourne, Jan. 20.—The steamer Dalmore, which arrived yesterday after a rough passage from New York, reported no tidings of the steamer Parisiana, which sailed from New York for this port on Oct. 29. The Parisiana should have been here about Jan. 1, but has not been reported since Nov. 11, and then from St. Vincent.

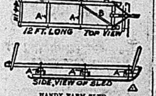
STRONG FARM SLED.

Easily Built and Substantial Without Tenons or Mortises.

A writer in the Rural New Yorker, from which the picture shown herewith is taken, says that every farm should be provided with one or more goods sleds, and one built as shown in the drawing will prove very satisfactory. It is easily built and substantial, as there are no tenons to make nor mortises, both of which require much labor and seriously weaken the sled. The frame of the sled is made of 4 by 4, excepting the blocks marked X, which are 4 by 6 by 10 inches. Upon these blocks rest the crosspieces A A A, and upon these the upper part of the sled frame rests, all being bolted together with half inch bolts. Besides the bolts, spikes should be driven through the blocks X to prevent their turning should the bolts become loose. Next come the diagonal brace B and the crosspiece at the rear end of the sled just behind the standards. The top of the sled may be floored over if desired. The tongue is bolted loosely on top of the front crosspiece and braced with chains or heavy strap iron braces. Iron soles should be used if possible, and good ones are easily made of old wagon tires.



HANDY FARM SLED.

[From the Rural New Yorker.]

This sled, as described and shown in diagrams, should give satisfactory service, but it may be made higher if desired, though greater height is not needed unless to be used in stony or stumpy fields. Crosspieces X X X may be 2 by 6 instead of 4 by 4, when two bolts at each joint can be used and the diagonal brace B be dispensed with. The bottom of the sled frame is nine feet long, and the top from standard to standard is twelve feet.

Casserole & Ramequin Cookery.

WE INVITE THE LADIES TO VIEW THE EXHIBIT WE MAKE SATURDAY AND ALL NEXT WEEK OF IMPORTED EARTHEN COOKING WARE.

The modern housekeeper has begun to learn that there are other ways of cooking food than by broiling, boiling, or roasting, all of which processes call for high heat. She has come to know that long, slow cooking, at a gentle heat, best conserves the nutritive elements of food and the flavors that render it most agreeable to us. It is this method of cooking that the earthen Casseroles, with its close fitting cover has made possible for us.

Some of the lines we show:

Stroud's

A Plucky Actor.

It was Mr. Laurence Irving, who is appearing with such success at the Garrick Theatre, London, in "The Unwritten Law," who created a sensation in New York at the beginning of this year by making a speech from the stage dealing with the unfairness of dramatic critics, and some time previously he was called to account by experts for saying that the public did not want genuine drama. "If actors only aimed low enough," he said, "sprinkled their plays with innuendoes, and smeared them over with gore, they would find a large public at their back." By the way, Mr. Irving, who, of course, is the younger son of the late Sir Henry Irving, strongly objects to being boomed as the son of that famous actor. "The fact is one of which I am so very proud," he says, "that I could only think poorly of a son who allowed his father's name to be used as a box-office appendage to himself."

World's Greatest Bridge-Builder.

Starting life in a cotton-mill at nine years of age, Sir William Arrol, who was recently married for the third time, apprenticed himself to a blacksmith, and it was the clang of the anvil and the sight of the sparks which inspired him with that love of engineering which led him to become the world's greatest bridge-builder. Both the Forth and the Tay bridges were the result of his genius. He is the hero of one of the greatest Parliamentary hustles on record. When he was an M.P. he sat in the House all day, traveled during the night to Ayrshire to marry Miss Hodgart, his second wife, and left Scotland in time to vote for the Government on Mr. Chamberlain's fiscal proposals of 1905.

When we hear an old bachelor railing against matrimony we wonder which one of the girls that turned him down he has just met.

forms its functions, the same as an engine or motor, when properly energized. Every organ acts just as its energy-supply dictates. If the function of a part is normal, it is because the dominating energy-supply is normal. If the function is weak or feeble, it is because the energy supply is feeble. Disease is nothing but diverted function, and is simply the expression of a perverted or abnormal energy supply. Critically, organic disease is a lesion due to a long-continued functional disease.

Nerve force has alterations similar to electric currents, viz., high voltage and low amperage; or low voltage and high amperage in disease, while a normal relation of voltage and amperage exists in health.

Belleville Gets a Team--Trenton Drops Out--A New Three Club League Formed

Belleville hockey fans are not, after all, to be left without their favorite amusement for the rest of the season, which would have been the case owing to the Juniors and Intermediates having dropped or been put out of business, had not a new deal been put through by which a professional team has been secured.

The new arrangement is that Trenton drops out of the Professional League and that a three club organization has been formed composed of Belleville, Picton and Port Hope. Eighteen games will be played—six in each place—and the winners in this series will play the winners in the Western Association for the championship.

Belleville's team will be composed of the following players:

HOCKEY NOTES.

Among the games set for to-night are Cobourg Intermediates at Trenton and Kingston Frontenacs at Picton.

COMING ICE RACES

The prospects are that the ice races to be held here next Tuesday and Wednesday under the auspices of the Belleville Athletic Association will be a successful event. Entries are coming in quite freely for the four events, two of which will be run off each day. Mr. Wm. Carnew, the energetic Secretary, has received a 'phone entry from Kingston of two horses that will compete in the 2.17 class, namely, St. Anthony and Alcyde. Berlin Belle, a celebrated trotter, is also here. That there will be a good field of horses here there seems to be no doubt, and two good days' sport is anticipated.

YACHTING.

Rochester has challenged the R.C. Y.C. of Toronto for the Fisher Cup, now held by the latter.

CURLING.

At Kingston last evening the local curlers met defeat at the hands of the Limestone City players. In the senior matches the score was close, Kingston winning by one shot on each of the two rinks. The two local junior rinks were, however, less fortunate, as they were defeated by 11 shots. At the conclusion of the match which was one of the Eastern League series, the Belleville players were provided with refreshments.

At the rink here this afternoon three rinks from the village of Campbellford played a friendly game with three rinks from the local club.

PASSED AWAY AT GREAT OLD AGE

Mrs. Julia Hebert passed away last evening at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Augustus Goyer, residing on South George Street. Deceased was 87 years of age and had been in failing health for some time. Mrs. Hebert had lived in this city for many years and was respected by all who knew her. She was a member of St. Michael's Church. Mr. Hebert preceded her to the tomb years ago.

ALL NOW READY FOR BUSINESS

Messrs Deacon Bros. New Shirt Factory Plant Will Begin—Work Tomorrow

Despite flattering inducements held out by Toronto and other places to the Messrs. Deacon to remove their manufacturing industry from Belleville rather than to re-establish here, following the destruction of their premises by fire, this important industry will remain here.

Deacon Bros., as was previously announced, have secured temporary quarters in the Springer Lock Manufacturing Company's premises, where they have installed the necessary machinery, which is of the most improved kind, and laid in a stock of goods.

To-morrow they will begin manufacturing, and by the end of next week they will be giving employment to from 65 to 75 hands. The firm has a large number of orders on hand and will now be prepared to fill all demands on their capacity. The Intelligencer wishes the Messrs. Deacon continued success.

The blow was of such force as to fracture Mr. Babcock's skull. His condition at present is such that he is by no means out of danger.

Chief Newton has received Spokane, Wash., papers announcing the assassination there of John T. Sullivan, Captain of Police, on the evening of Jan. 5th, when sitting in his home reading the evening paper. While regretting this untimely taking off of so prominent an officer, it is pleasing to hear of Sergt. Wm. Weir's promotion to the position of Captain in place of the murdered Capt. Sullivan. Capt. Weir is a Bellevillian and has many friends here.

DOUBLE WEDDING AT TORONTO

Two Former Well-Known Belleville Ladies Were Happily Married Yesterday

At the Euclid Ave. Methodist Church, Toronto, at 11 a.m., January 19th, by the Rev. E. N. Baker, D. D., Mr. Irwin Wallace, of Belleville, was united in marriage to Miss Laura Hilda Metcalf, of Toronto. The witnesses were Mr. Arthur P. Scott, of Toronto, and Miss Anna Belle Crothers, of Toronto. As soon as the ceremony was over, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace exchanged places with their attendants, who were then joined in marriage. The couples left for an extended trip after which Mr. and Mrs. Wallace will reside in Montreal, and Mr. and Mrs. Scott will make their home in Toronto.

The happy couples arrived in Belleville last night to participate in a joyous event referred to elsewhere.

BANK FAILURE RECALLS TRAGEDY

DEXTER, Me., Jan. 19.—After an existence of 44 years the Dexter Savings Bank, the scene of the mysterious Barran tragedy of 1878 closed its doors yesterday, owing about $400,000. The institution was closed following an extended run by mill operatives who became alarmed over reports regarding its stability. The assets are listed at $429,272.

For years the name of the Dexter Savings Bank was familiar to newspaper readers of the country. On February 22, 1878, John W. Barron was found dead in the vault. His scalp was bruised. He was gagged and handcuffed and a rope was loosely about his neck.

Not a bit of information tending to implicate any one was secured until the fall of 1887, when Charles Stain declared that his father, David L. Stain, had confessed to him, that he and Charles Stain's brother-in-law Oliver Cromwell, had attempted to rob the bank and assaulted Barron. Stain's account of the confession was corroborated by a former convict who died some years ago.

David L. Stain was running a cobbler shop in Franklin, Mass., and Oliver Cromwell, his son-in-law, was living in Medfield, Mass., when in October, 1887, they were arrested.

They were tried at Bangor and were convicted February 22, 1888, of murder in the second degree and sentenced to imprisonment for life.

In December, 1900, the Governor and council heard a petition for the pardon on the ground that the men were not in Dexter the day Barron was slain. Witnesses testified to the presense of Stain in Medfield on February, 1878, and alibis for both men satisfied the pardoning authorities. On January 1, 1901, Stain and Cromwell were pardoned and returned to Massachusetts.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD
Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores
When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up, the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body. The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:
"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.
At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."
Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box. 6

"That's the man."

"Did ye meet him or pass him?"

"We passed him."

"Thought so. He's drivin' a balker I traded him, an' he didn't want his hoss to know how much furder it had to go."

Some marriages make the impatient observer think that the contracting parties must have had a grudge against themselves.

It frequently happens that the only person that we deceive in regard to our behavior is ourselves.

When a man's wife keeps him in hot water all the time, can you blame him if he boils over once in awhile?

Language Stimulant.

In language unconventional
Down on that mule he bore.
It wasn't quite intentional,
But I feel sure he swore.
He did his best, made pause for rest,
And then he said some more.

The mule was quite unbending,
A patient beast and slow,
Not in his pride pretending
That he was built to go.
He'd rather stand and view the land
And hear the language flow.

The driver, full of phrases
As nuts are full of meat,
Made little language blazes
Rush up and down the street.
To persons who the line was new
It might have been a treat.

To drive a mule procession
By means of whip and lung
Finds things in its expression
That loosens up the tongue
And always cause a man to pause
To hear the changes rung.

To get his English fluent
One need not go to school,
No; he can be a truant
And disobey the rule
If he will but professors cut
And learn to drive a mule.

Unfounded Anxiety.

"Why do you look so distressed, my poor man—because you are hungry?"

"Partly, ma'am."

"Partly?"

"Yes, ma'am."

"And what is the further reason?"

"I am oppressed by fear."

"Of what?"

"That I shall disgrace my relatives by dying rich."

The Bald Headed Man may Look Wise
But if He Had Been He Would Have Hair Now
You do not want a scientific treatise on the hair follicle—you are not particularly interested in the name of the German scientist who isolated the bug that is said to cause baldness. What you do want to know is how to save the hair you have and make it strong and lustrous.
Nyal's Hirsutone will do it better than anything else.
It is not claimed that Hirsutone is a wonderful scientific secret—but it is the concrete result of all that is proven in the scientific treatment of sick and diseased hair and scalp.
It is a happy combination and you will notice a prompt improvement in the feeling of the scalp and the look of the hair.
Hirsutone loosens and removes all scaly and matted deposit on the scalp—stimulates the hair bulbs and gives new life and vigor to the hair itself.
Nyal's Hirsutone gives back to the hair and scalp just what it has been robbed of by your neglect and abuse.
It is time to start right. Use Hirsutone.
It is one of the Nyal remedies and no higher recommendation can be given it. They are all good. Ask your Nyal Druggist. He recommends it.

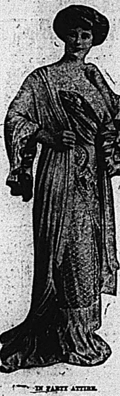
THE AEROPLANE UMBRELLA.

When in doubt give an umbrella. You'll never make a mistake if you take this advice. Men can lose as many as are given to them, and women like an umbrella nowadays to match the trotting gown, so match up a paraplule to milady's walking suit and she'll be pleased to receive it Christmas morning.

But if she likes to be up to the minute get her one of the new aeroplane styles. The illustration gives you a fine idea of the very eccentric shape of this useful article.

An Original Evening Wrap.

Evening wraps this season are things of beauty and comfort and envelop the figure from neck to frock hem in bewitchingly graceful folds. Some of these wraps resemble the toga of ancient Rome. The model illustrated is of pale blue chiffon and charmeuse, worn over a gown of pale gold crepe de chine trimmed with pearl lattice embroidery.



IN PARTY ATTIRE.

Smelts With Potato.

Smelts are never more tasty or attractive as a luncheon or dinner dish than served in rings around a mound of potato with the accompaniment of tartar sauce in lemon cups. The fish are easily boned. After boning skewer the head and tail of each together with a wooden toothpick, roll them in milk and cracker crumbs and fry, preferably in deep fat. Before serving remove the toothpicks and arrange the fish around the potato. For the sauce mix minced pickle and olives with thick mayonnaise.

Swiss Eggs.

Swiss eggs are sent to the table in the dish in which they are cooked. Cover the bottom of the dish with bits of butter and drop over them thin slices of Swiss cheese. Cover the cheese with eggs dropped from their shells without breaking the yolks, sprinkle with salt and pepper and turn over them half a cupful of cream—about that amount for six eggs. Sprinkle the top with grated Swiss cheese and bake until the cheese is melted and the eggs set. Serve with toast.

Men Like Simplicity of Fare.

How many well meaning housewives make the mistake in their overzealous hospitality to furnish men guests with elaborate dishes when simple, well prepared foods would please the men so much more! Any hostess who will bear this fact in mind will not only save trouble, expense and time, but will also please her masculine guests to a greater extent.

WATCHING THE FLIERS AT BELMONT PARK.

The aviation face is the latest. The hobble walk and motor slump have been distanced in popular interest by this new facial contortion.

The recent aviation meet at Belmont park, where bird men from this and other countries competed for "flying colors," produced a worried sky gazing expression which is now known as the aviation face, and masseurs will be busy for weeks to come ironing out feminine aeroplane wrinkles.

What to Do With Hats.

The most troublesome of a woman's minor possessions to take care of is the hatpin, for, no matter how carefully it is stuck in a cushion, something is bound to catch the head or the point, and over goes the cushion, or else the fabric caught is torn. Even the tall decorative holders made especially for hatpins are likely to fall, as they become top heavy when several pins are put in them. The only sensible receptacle for them is a tall, thin necked vase of glass, glass and silver or of pottery. Thus, too, is employment provided for many a discarded ornament. One woman declares that from the cupboard for such buried treasures she has unearthed enough vases suitable for this purpose for all the bedrooms and has matched the color scheme in several instances in delicate Dresden affairs.

Telephone Hygiene.

A woman whose house telephone is necessarily used by many people keeps at hand a bottle of carbolic acid and a box of little squares of clean white cloth. Before using the phone she wets one of the squares with the solution and wipes the mouthpiece. This is an easy thing to do and may be the means of saving much misfortune.

Germany Solves Servant Problem.

Germany with a paternal form of government has done far more than any other country to eliminate the troubles of the servant girl question. Rules have been worked out so a housewife is sure to get an honest girl and, furthermore, has a complete history of the girl before hiring her. If a woman in Germany wants a servant she goes to an employment bureau and files an application. The servant appears with her official service book, which shows when she began to work and which gives a personal description and history of herself. It shows the names of the persons for whom she has worked and the reasons for leaving. Each entry is stamped by the police and bears proof of their investigation. If the girl is dismissed she cannot lose her service book, because she would not be permitted by the police to get another job until the book was accounted for and her past record investigated. When the servant gets a new place she must report at once to the police station and have her service book stamped. In still another way has the comfort of the servant been provided for. Every Monday the servant's mistress must paste in her book a five cent stamp, which is credited to the girl's insurance fund. This means when the girl reaches a certain age she will receive a pension from the government.

To Prevent Fat Filled Rooms.

When frying food, fat will often spatter the stove. A newspaper folded thick and rubbed quickly over the spot will prevent the room being filled with smoke and the odor from going through the house.

Keep Fingers Clean.

Don't throw away old kid gloves. Cut the fingers off and give to children to slip over the ends of colored crayons which they use at school. It keeps the stains off their hands.

SLEUTHS SOLD LIQUOR

Pinkertons Admit Sale of Whiskey in Northern Ontario.

In Trial of Cases of Illicit Traffic in Alcohol Private Officers Employed by Provincial Police Say They Confiscated Liquor and Then Sold It Rather Than Destroy Fine "Wet Goods."

Haileybury, Jan. 20.—Pinkerton detectives, employed by Supt. Joseph Rogers of the provincial police, and acting, as they swore upon oath, upon the instruction of Supt. Wilcock of the Toronto office of the detective agency, have been selling whisky in the neighborhood of Haileybury. This oath was pledged in the Police Court here yesterday.

The evidence was drawn out by James Haverson, K.C., acting for the defence, while Supt. Rogers and Supt. Wilcock sat in the courtroom and did not deny the statement.

The above startling facts were brought out in the prosecution of local hotelkeepers for selling liquor in quantities larger than permitted under the act. The Pinkerton men, Otto J. Weller and Charles Tupper, swore, in the case of James J. Doyle, proprietor of the Mattabar Hotel, that when they found Doyle would not sell they laid siege to his bartender, and finally persuaded him to make the sale and violate the law. A conviction was made in this case, and fine of $20 and costs imposed. A second charge against Doyle for a like offence upon another day was dropped.

The case of Charles Eagan of the Vendome Hotel, who was charged with a similar offence, was then heard, and, as in the previous case, the same detectives swore that when Eagan refused to violate the law, they went after the bartender, and succeeded in making a purchase from him. The same fine was imposed in this case, and a second charge was dropped.

The case of Otto Krupp of the Maple Leaf Hotel was next taken up, and two charges were sustained where the bartender had sold. Fines were imposed, and the court came to the case of Henry I. Kert of Englehart, upon a like charge. Here the same detectives swore that a sale had been made to them by Philip Kert, at 11 o'clock in the morning. The case was adjourned till to-day, when charges against Mrs. Anna Kennedy of Englehart will also be heard.

Asked by Mr. Haverson if it were true that they had brought whisky with them into this part of the country and sold it to unlicensed persons, the detectives explained that they had not brought any liquor with them, but that the whisky which they had brought from Doyle and the others, something over 20 bottles, purchased at $1.25 per quart, they had sold to a man named Crawford at Kelso, Ont., for $1.75 per quart. They did not say what became of the profits, but swore that their instructions from Supt. Wilcock were that, after they had purchased the whisky from prospective lawbreakers, they might then either sell it or destroy it, as they pleased. Asked why they had chosen to sell it, they explained that they had done so because it was too much trouble to carry it about with them.

A New Armory for Port Arthur.

Port Arthur, Jan. 20.—It is understood that work will be started in the spring on a handsome new armory building, which will be capable of accommodating not only the present rifle corps, but what is even more important at this point, a battery of field artillery.

It is also likely that a cavalry troop will be organized in the spring, and accommodations for this branch of the militia will be taken care of in the new armory, which will cost in the neighborhood of $125,000.

Rabbits a Pest.

Chatham, Jan. 20.—The Chatham Hunt Club, made up of farmers and others interested, have drawn up a largely signed petition asking the Legislature to amend the rabbit laws, so that rabbits may be shot from Oct. 1 to Feb. 1. The farmers claim that the rabbits are destroying their trees and shrubs, but that under the present laws, they are not allowed to kill them.

Thrilling Fight For Life With Shipwreck and Frost

OTTAWA, Jan. 20.—After walking over 800 miles on snowshoes in a fight against death by freezing in the far north country, Mr. J. M. Macoun, of the Geological Survey, and son of Prof. John Macoun, Dominion Botanist, formerly of Belleville, arrived in Ottawa last night.

Along with him came Mr. M. Savary, of the Hydrographical Branch of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and Mr. Harry Ford, both of Ford's Harbor, Labrador, both of whom had been with him on the long snowshoe tramp.

But the snowshoe tramp was by no means the only way in which Mr. Macoun and his companions had to fight against death. Previous to that they had been shipwrecked away up in Hudson's Bay and there also they had to make a strenuous battle for life.

In order to get back to civilization, that is, the part of civilization that a railroad town represents, they had to go over 1,250 miles, 450 in life boats and a whaling vessel, the rest across country on snowshoes.

OTHERS ON TRIP.

There were others on this trip, too, besides Prof. Macoun and the two men who arrived in Ottawa with him yesterday. Most of the others were sailors from the wrecked steamer Jeanie. On the trip also was another Ottawa man in the person of Mr. A. G. Bachaud, civil engineer, who had been up in the north country in connection with work for the proposed Hudson's Bay Railway. He is expected to arrive in Ottawa in a few days.

The account of Mr. Macoun's experiences is as thrilling as a novel. To a reporter last night at his home at 47 Waverley street, he told the whole story, from the commencement of the trip in July last, until his arrival last week at Gimbli, Manitoba, when word was brought to Ottawa that he was safe.

WAS HEARTILY WELCOMED.

This news received last week was the first information Mr. Macoun's parents or his friends had heard of him since he left; and the news of his safety was a great relief to them.

He was received here yesterday with all the hearty welcome due a man who has returned from a trip full of dangers and the most thrilling adventures.

THE STORY OF THE TRIP.

DRAMATIC NARRATIVE TOLD BY A FORMER BELLEVILLE BOY

J. M. Macoun Has Arrived at Ottawa from a 1250 Mile Journey Through the Far North—Complete Story of the Trip Told by Mr. Macoun—Was Full of Dangers and Adventures

"We left on the steamer Stanley from Halifax on July 2nd," said Mr. Macoun. "The Stanley was taking hydrographic survey parties, one to Churchill, in charge of Mr. A. G. Bachaud, and the other for Nelson, in charge of Mr. Parizeau. On the Stanley were Mrs. Starnes, wife of Superintendent Starnes, of the North West Mounted Police at Churchill, and Dr. Marcellus, who had been house surgeon in the Protestant Hospital here at Ottawa.

"I was going to collect specimens of flora and fauna of the west coast of Hudson's Bay north of Churchill. I intended to hire an Eskimo crew at Churchill and work north; but at North Sydney, C.B., I found the steamer Jeanie taking on supplies for the Mounted Police and arranged with Captain Bartlett that if Major Starnes gave his permission, I would go north on the Jeanie from Churchill instead of in a whaleboat as I had intended.

"We reached Churchill on July 25th and worked a month in that vicinity. The Jeanie had come in in the meantime, and as Major Starnes was going north on her to Fullerton, I started with him.

TO TAKE SUPPLIES.

"The object of the Jeanie's cruise to the north was to take supplies to Fullerton, the most northly police detachment on Hudson's Bay, and also to erect refuge houses at Eskimo Point, Ranken Inlet, Chesterfield Inlet and Wager Inlet, the latter place being 120 miles north of Fullerton. As two days were required at each of these places, I had a good opportunity of collecting specimens.

"When the party reached Fullerton Major Starnes, Dr. Marcellus and three constables remained there while the Jeanie went north, one constable remaining on board to put up the last house.

"The visit of Dr. Marcellus to Fullerton was to investigate the alleged prevalence of a loathsome disease among the Eskimos of that district. He found there was no foundation for the report."

THE SHIPWREK.

Then followed the thrilling story of the shipwreck of the Jeanie.

"The evening the erection of the house was finished at Wager Inlet, Sept. 7," said Mr. Macoun, "the wind began to blow from the north. The Jeanie was at that time in a fine harbor about thirty miles up Wager Inlet, and was thought to be in no danger. The next day, Sept. 8, the wind was stronger and on the following day one of the anchor chains broke, leaving the vessel riding on one anchor.

"At half past ten that night the anchor chain snapped and in less than five minutes the Jeanie was ashore. The captain said the wind was blowing 90 miles an hour at the time.

"The vessel was in charge of Mate Entle, 70 years old. Knowing that the second chain would part, he had made every preparation. The jib was hoisted at once and the vessel put before the wind and beached at the only spot on the coast that was not sheer rock. It was so dark on account of the heavy snow that was coming down that Entle could not see his men, and the wind was so strong that they could not hear his orders. Fortunately it was full high tide and the bow was well up on the beach before the stern struck. Low tide was about daylight. Constable Jones, the three Eskimos and myself carried our belongings ashore and we went two miles to the portable house to take up our quarters. The thermometer was then two above zero.

BOATS WASHED AWAY.

"The boats had been washed away and one of them was badly smashed on the beach. As there were fourteen members in the party and the only way to get back to Fullerton was by the boats, it was necessary to set to work to repair them. Seven days were spent in repair work. By that time the bay had frozen over and it took us two days longer to break our way out. Then we started with sails and oars for Fullerton, seven men in each boat, taking our provisions along with us and arrived at Fullerton, 150 miles away, in two and a half days.

"The day before we got to Fullerton, Captain Geo. Comer of the A. T. Gifford, a United States whaler, went into winter quarters there. At Fullerton our party was again twenty men, counting those who had previously stopped off there. Major Starnes at once interviewed Capt. Comer who agreed to take the whole party to Churchill, if he could land the party there in three days, he being afraid to remain longer away from Fullerton on account of the possibility of geting frozen in. During the night all the canvas was taken off his vessel, new canvas and running gear being put on and in two and a half days we were again off the mouth of the Churchill river. The captain did not even take time to anchor. The schooner was met by Mr. Bachaud's launch and whaleboats from the barracks and in less than half an hour Captain Comer had departed.

"We remained in Churchill from September 25th till December 5th," continued Mr. Macoun. "The distance from Fullerton to Churchill is 450 miles.

THE SNOWSHOE TRIP.

"I was ready to leave Churchill on November 22nd," said Mr. Macoun, "and had two of the best Indians in the vicinity engaged to bring me out. Along with me was Harry Ford, the interpreter. We had to wait till the river was frozen over, and in the meantime there was a heavy snow fall, which delayed our starting. At last it got sufficiently cold for the river to freeze and we started on the walk to Split Lake, 250 miles away, on December 5th.

"Along with us came Mr. Bachaud's party of ten, including two Indians. Travelling was made extremely difficult on account of the deep snow; and to make matters all the worse there was water still on the surface of the lakes. This meant that when we got through the snow and into the water we were running a great risk of having frozen feet.

"DAVID CHIEF FACTOR."

"The way was made by 'David Chief Factor,' a Chippewayan Indian, who went ahead, followed by those of Mr. Bachaud's party who could stand the pace. There were five dog sleighs, my own, Mr. Ford's and three belonging to Mr. Bachaud. Six dogs were attached to each train, making a total of 30 dogs in all. Considerable difficulty was experienced in the matter of getting dog food, but we managed to find enough to take us over the first part of the trip. Dried deer meat is what we gave the dogs to eat, three pounds of it to each every day. On my sleigh I carried all the specimens I had collected and my personal effects. On the other sleighs were the blankets, clothes and provisions for the other men. Each man was allowed thirty pounds in the way of blankets and clothing, and was given three pounds of food to eat. On account of the deep snow and bad trails we were thirteen days getting to Split Lake. Ten days is about the average time.

"When the wrecked crew of the Jeanie arrived at Churchill they were provided for by Major Starnes; given rations of the same quality and quantity as furnished the police, and fitted out with new clothing to replace the stuff they had left behind. As the time approached for their starting for home they were provided with snowshoes, deerskin sleeping bags and coats, and in order to fit them for the long journey, they were daily trained in running and walking. The settlement is on the north side of the Churchill river, and we had to wait there till the stream froze over so that we could cross and start for home."

START FROM CHURCHILL.

"They started from Churchill three days afterwards. They were in charge of Corporal Walker of the Mounted Police. The party consisted of eight men and Walker had two Eskimo dog drivers and drove a dog team himself.

"As the trail had already been made by one party the sailors reached Split Lake in 9 1-2 days, record-breaking time. This was really a wonderful achievement for the men of the Jeanie crew, none of whom had ever had on snowshoes before. They reached Split Lake the same night as we did.

"By the way, I might tell you," mentioned Mr. Macoun, "that we had great difficulty in getting dogs. At Churchill the whole country had to be scoured for them as none were kept there to bring people out. The same difficulty was encountered at Split Lake and we were delayed there three days looking for dogs for the eight teams that were required to take us on.

WATER ON THE ICE.

"On the next stage of the journey, between Split Lake and Norway House, a distance of 250 miles, we were not able to cross the lakes in the usual way on account of the water on the surface of the ice, and we had to go round them. This made the distance considerably more than 250 miles, about 280 miles, but in spite of this fact the whole party reached Norway House in eight days, the usual time for making the trip.

"During this part of the trip the wrecked crew of the Jeanie was in charge of Sergeant Edgerton of the Mounted Police detachment at Split Lake. He used dogs belonging to the police and two dog drivers of their own. This was really the most trying part of the journey on account of the danger of frozen feet and we had to be extra careful. Every night the police sergeant inspected the men just as he would inspect a lot of horses, making them put their feet out, looking at them closely and not allowing them to roll in for the night till he saw that everything in the way of clothes was dry, ready for the start in the morning.

AT NORWAY HOUSE.

"We arrived at Norway House on December 30th, with the weather 51 degrees below zero, and about half the party were badly frozen. On account of the New Year festivities at that place we were delayed at Norway House until January 3rd. Then we left for Warren's Landing at the head of Lake Winnipeg with the thermometer 49 below ero and made nineteen miles without stopping.

"As a result of our foolishness in starting in such weather we had to wait two days to recuperate. We were simply all played out.

"After getting rested up we set out for Beren's River, where we were again delayed for three days by bad weather. Here it was decided to separate into two parties, Mr. Bachaud and his men going down the east side of Lake Winnipeg and the crew of the Jeanie with myself and Mr. Ford going down the west side. Going across the lake we made 42 miles in one day.

EQUALLED RECORD.

"From Beren's River to Gimili both parties equalled the best record made on the lake for travelling, the first of our party arriving about noon of the fifth day and the first of Mr. Bachaud's men getting in two hours later, the others getting in between that ann dark.

"On the trip we covered about 800 miles all told."

All the specimens that Mr. Macoun collected are safe. They were in the cabin of the schooner and although within an hour after she struck she was full of water up to her deck the specimens and other valuables were carried up to the deck and so saved.

SPECIMENS INTACT.

The botanical specimens especially are of great value as no botanist had before been on the west coast of Hunson's Bay between Churchill and Repulse Bay. At Churchill there are no arctic plants while at Repulse Bay all the species are arctic. His collection and notes will enable Mr. Macoun to fix the southern limits of the arctic species and the northern limits of the subarctic species.

GIRL TAKES CARBOLIC

Minnie Lee, Formerly Of Kingston, Attemped Suicide At Rochester

A hurry call was sent to the City Hospital from 203 Central Avenue, at 2.30 o'clock this afternoon, says a Rochester paper of Wednesday, and an ambulance was sent there. Upon the arrival of the surgeons, it was found that Minnie Lee, 32 years of age, had attempted suicide by taking carbolic acid. She was hurried to the Homeopathic Hospital, where physicians worked over her for some time.

The woman who runs the rooming house at 203 Central Avenue discovered the woman's condition, upon hearing peculiar sounds issuing from the room, in which the woman was. Physicians say that there is no chance for the woman's recovery, as she took a full half pint of crude carbolic acid which had been used for disinfectant purposes in the house. The police say that Minnie Lee has been arrested several times for intoxication and vagrancy and that she has been under the influence of liquor for two days.

THE WARD SYSTEM

On one thing all who are actively interesting themselves in securing better municipal government for Belleville are thoroughly agreed, and that is that the ward system of electing aldermen must go; but whether it shall be succeeded by returning to the general system which was in operation in Belleville for several years, namely the election of ten aldermen by the vote of all the electors of the city, or by a commission, has yet to be determined.

The objections to the ward system are many and weighty, and the most pronounced of them may be thus concisely stated:

1.—The ratepayer who is on the voters' list in one ward only can vote on the election of but three of the twenty-one aldermen who are to spend his taxes and transact the city's business. Under the general system, he could vote on the election of every member of the Council.

2.—Under the ward system men who could not, by a large majority, be elected on a vote of all the taxpayers, are enabled to secure seats in the Council. A small ward is so much easier to manipulate than is the whole city. No man should have a seat in Council unless he has the confidence of a majority of the people.

3.—The ward system fosters a narrow prejudice in each of the several divisions of the city and is inimical to the general welfare.

4.—It is the chief cause of log-rolling and grafting, on the "you help me and I'll help you" principle.

5.—In order to secure re-election weak or unscrupulous representatives work for undue expenditures in their constituencies, to the detriment of the general interest. Judge Cannon, the commissioner who investigated the charges of grafting in civic affairs at Montreal and discovered a veritable sink-hole of corruption, reported that the ward system was responsible for nearly the whole of it through aldermen wanting to make themselves "solid" with the electors.

6.—The committee work of the Council is conducted in such a way that what is done is known to the members of one committee only, while under the general system the committees are composed of virtually all the members, and each committee transacts its business on the same evening and at the same place, so that all the aldermen are aware of what is being done.

7.—The number of aldermen under the ward system is too great. In the multitude of councillors there is not wisdom, and the business is generally transacted without order as to its conduct.

Such are the principal objections to the ward system, but, bad as it is in theory and undesirable in practice it is in Belleville, owing to the manner in which the subdivision of the city has been made, grossly unfair in its character, as a brief study of the following tabular statement of assessed value and number of ratepayers in each ward cannot fail to demonstrate:

Wards—	1910 Assessment.	No. of Voters.
Foster	$ 283,315	244
Samson	649,265	361
Ketcheson	1289,521	450
Baldwin	737,293	469
Bleecker	407,205	360
Coleman	314,115	406
Murney, 7	446,180	489
Murney, 8	205,765	200

Under the ward system Foster Ward has as great a representation in the Council as has Murney Ward with nearly three times as many electors and considerably more than twice its assessed value, or as Ketcheson Ward with nearly twice the number of voters and an assessed value more than four times as large. This arrangement is so transparently unfair that it is matter for wonder that a majority of the taxpayers give it their sanction two years ago when the question of discarding the general system and returning to the antiquated system which is now in vogue was decided in the affirmative by their votes.

The reasons for this unexpected verdict were chiefly a feeling of unrest, which at that time was general, and representations which had no foundation in fact. For instance, in Foster Ward it was made a grievance that no resident of that ward was elected to the Council, while four had been chosen from Murney Ward, and many voters were influenced by that cry. Just how ridiculous was that allegation was demonstrated at the first election after the change had been made, when three gentlemen, one of whom resided in Samson Ward and two who live in Murney Ward—the bete noir of the southern section east of the river—were elected for disgruntled Foster Ward. And, be it related, Murney Ward was the place of residence of six aldermen who were chosen under the system which was to redress the alleged wrongs of the general system.

The Board of Trade has condemned the ward system; the Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association has joined in that condemnation, and the City Council will be asked to submit a by-law for its repeal and the return, temporarily at least, to the general system. In such case it will be the duty of every good citizen to vote for the abolition of the present unfair system of election by wards and the restoration of a more equitable method of choosing the men who are to spend our money and transact our business.

FARMERS DON'T WANT TREATY

OTTAWA, Ont., Jan. 19.—A delegation of farmers from Lincoln, Kent and Peterboro counties interviewed Sir Wilfrid Laurier this afternoon and presented a resolution opposing reciprocity. They declared emphatically that the delegation of the farmers from the West did not represent the Canadian farmer's views on the tariff and urged that no reciprocity treaty be entered into without a mandate from the people. Further, it was stated that the language of the Western farmers had been exravagant and of such a tendency as to bring farming into disrepute. They expressed belief in a mixed community in the country and disavowed the idea of the manufacturer's heel being on their neck or that they were ground down by oppression. "We are against commercial union in any guise," concluded the memorial. It was presented by David Jackson, Grimsby, Lincoln county.

Another petition was presented by a Mr. Johnson, of Peterboro county It was on behalf of farmers of Monaghan township. It was against any reciprocity treaty bringing in products more freely than at present and asked that the tariff be so raised as to keep out American produce. If the Canadians wanted to enter the Canadian market they should build branch factories. The principle of British preference and protection of home industries was affirmed.

Mr. Galbraith, of Kent, spoke for bean growers and was favorable to reciprocity in beans.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier's reply was noncommittal. While this delegation was satisfied others were not, he said He would bear in mind the representations and endeavor to harmonize all interests. The reciprocity negotiations were in progress at Washington and he did not wish to interfere with them at this stage.

The delegation was introduced by Mr. Gordon, of East Kent.

GRATEFUL MOTHERS

What Zam-Buk Did For Their Little Ones.

Thousands of mothers in Canada owe a debt of gratitude to Zam-Buk for its cure of their children, and hundreds of them are not slow to recognize the claim.

Mrs. J. Quidding, of Ninette, Man. says: "My little boy was suffering very badly from a form of skin disease over his eyes. I applied Zam Buk to the affected part, and in a very short time, I am pleased to say the sores were completely healed."

Mrs. F. Miners, of 311 Suffolk, St. Guelph, Ont., says: "My little daughter Lorinda (6) contracted a skin disease. This first broke out like tiny water blisters, afterwards taking the form of dry scabs. These would disappear for a short time, and then return worse than ever. We tried Zam-Buk and with each application the irritation and soreness were greatly relieved and the child rested easier. Perserverance with Zam-Buk worked a complete cure."

PITTSBURG, Pa., Jan. 20.—Following his victory in a wrestling match last night in Haysborough, near here, Guiseppa Terissa, aged 28, was shot dead, it is alleged, by an angered brother of the loser, Antonio Vellella, who was thrown in the match by Terissi. County detectives are searching for Samuel Vellela, who is alleged to have done the shooting.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

'Tis a sure enough thaw—the fourth for the month.

'A contemporary charges that Ontario has been disgraced by the escape of the Farmers' Bank wreckers. And the charge is based on solid fact.

The truism that the higher a man goes the farther he has to fall has been fully realized by the Farmers' Bank wreckers.

The rumor mongers are evidently determined to have a memebr of the royal family for Governor-General. Their latest selection is the Duke of Teck.

Guelph discarded the ward system after one year's trial. Belleville, with two years' experience, will no doubt follow the example when opportunity offers.

Some three or four of last year's aldermen would not offer for re-election because of the ward system—too many members and not enough business-like work in council or committee.

Sir Richard Cartwright has informed Parliament and the country that Canada's naval defence fleet is to consist of twelve vessels. But the qusetion is, when will they be in commission ?

The amount of the Provincial investment in the T. & N. O. R. at the end of the accounting year (Oct. 31.) 1901, was, $15,888, 957. The balance of receipts over operating expenses for the year was $547,354.

Spirits of turpentine reached its record price in Monday when it was quoted at 86 cents a gallon in New York. The highest figure previously reached was 79 cents on June 1, 1905 It is expected to reach 90 cents ere long.

Belleville boys get to the front everywhere, witness the account given by Mr. J. M. Macoun of his fearful experience in the discharge of his duty in the frozen north. But he pulled through, as Bay of Quinte boys usually do.

The Exshaw Cement plant in Alberto has been purchased by the Canadian Cement merger for $1,000,866.66, and the manufacture of cement will be carried on with renewed activity. The former Exshaw Cement Company went into liquidation. An auction sale was held yesterday, which was nothing but a formal affair, and Mr. C. A. Barnard, K.C., of Montreal, acting for the debenture holders, sold it to the Canadian Cement merger. The sum of $120,000 was paid over to bind the purchase.

The Dominion Department of Agriculture at Ottawa has recently issued a very complete bulletin neatly bound discussing the very important subject of "Beef Raising in Canada." On the preparation of the work every effort has been made to secure the most accurate and reliable data regarding the industry. The information so obtained together with the views of experienced feeders, and in many cases descriptions of the methods which they have found most successful are given. The booklet is profusely illustrated and is very interesting. A copy of the Bulletin may be had on application to the Live Stock Commissioner, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa

BELLEVILLE CLUB AT WINNIPEG

Former Belleville Boys Will Form An Organization in the Prarie City

A correspondent writs from Winnipeg under date, January 17th: A Belleville Society is about to be formed here in order to get Belleville people in Winnipeg together. Among those interested are: Mrs. Peek and family; Mrs. and Mrs. T. Dobbs; Mr Richard Yatman; Mr. Walter Yatman; Henry Vivian, of the Vivian Hotel; and many others. This Society looks like a big success as there are hundreds of Belleville's old boys in Winnipeg.

STRANGE CURES BY A WOMAN

PARIS, Jan. 20.—A woman has been brought before the courts accused of unlawful practice of medicine. and the case is attracting considerable interest. One of the principal independent witnesses was the celebrated doctor who is known by the name of the Mage Papus, who besides his orthodox practice is much consulted by believers in spiritualism. of which science he is a leading fashionable exponent.

The accused, Mme. Lalose, a small but vivacious person, professed to heal all manner of maladies by the simple laying on of hands and the witnesses she brought, and who came of their own accord, declared that she positively performed "miracles." She was said to say to the deaf "Hear," and cured the blind and the paralytic even at a distance. The presiding judge remarked in a bantering tone that he was something like St. Thomas. there was a general disposition to mirth in the court at hearing Mme. Lalose recount her wonderful successes and talk of her "fluid."

WITNESSES CALLED.

This feeling, however, yielded to astonishment as the roll of witnesses was called. The Police Commissary of Asnieres, clothed with all the prestige of his office, testified that his wife had long suffered with an immovable stiff arm. She had been treated by the best known doctors whose names created an impression. being household words for skill. Finally she went to Mme. Lalose, who touched her only. In the evening she began to move her arm, and the next day was quite cured. Another woman had cerebral anaemia, and was not able to visit the "miracle" worker, who, however, projected her influence, and immediately the disease left her. Another patient was pronounced by the highest authorities to be hopelessly insane. A few passes over her forehead were enough, it was said, to bring back her reason. A witness volubly explained that he had suffered from paralysis of the tongue, and had been cured, by Mme. Lalose, and he added that instead of persecuting her, the doctors would do well to study her methods.

THE MOST IMPRESSIVE.

The most impressive evidence was that of the Mage Papus, who said that in olden times Egyptian priests and Hebrew prophets healed the sick and that for twenty years he had in vain been seeking the secret of their cures. "I am a doctor, and have too much confidence in medical science to confound it with that which says to the lame. 'Cast away thy crutches and walk.' But side by side with the science of to-day, there is the science of to-morrow. There is faith that works miracles, and there are forces at which we know nothing." Referring to one of the cases cited, the president asked him if it were possible for a person with a perforated tympanum to be made to hear, and Dr. Papus replied that the tympanum might reform, and that doctors sometimes perforated it themselves. To the question as to whether Mme. Lalose was a hypnotist, Dr. Papus answered no, because hypnotism was a well known science. Magnetism, on the contrary, was quite different and was not a science, but a study of a force not yet defined. "With Mme. Lalose we are in another domain—in that of the mysterious and unknown."

His evidence was listened to with great attention, and the next hearing was fixed for next Monday. It is argued that, as Mme. Lalose uses no medicines and prescribes no treatment the accusation cannot be sustained. As regards massage with "fluidized" or "magnetized" oil, one of the witnesses said that customers underwent massage in any Turkish bath in Paris without medical certificates. As for the "fluid," another witness declared: "She has a fluid. You cannot deny it, for it would be like denying that the sun shines."

A wise Chicago millionaire has refused to buy a title for his daughter because of what went with it.

WONDERFUL WORK IN TYPE WRITING

Miss Rose Fretz, the World's Champion, Gave a Marvellous Demonstration

Miss Rose L. Fritz, the renowned expert and world champion in typewriting, demonstrated her wonderful ability before an audience of over 200 at Ontario Business College yesterday composed of business and professional men, shorthand writers and educators.

The special typewriter used by Miss Fritz was spiked to a desk so as to resist the vibration of operating, and especially the necessary shifting, with ligtning rapidity, the bar of the carriage.

She accredits her skill chiefly to persevering at hard work and in faithful practice. For some time past she has been employed by the typewriter people in championship tests; at present she is under the direction of Mr. J. Seitz, manager, and Mr. Coo, a well-known shorthand expert. The party is touring the Dominion, exemplifying what can be done in the typewriter sphere. The accomplished young lady is also a rapid shorthand writer and is equally as capable in reading back her notes.

Mr. Seitz alluded to the wonderful achievements attained by Miss Fritz winning so many championship tests against many expert competitors. In one hour she typed from copy 36,804 words, only striking three keys wrongly, or one in 12,000 strokes. Forty words per minute was recognized as being exceptionally good for the average typist. She preferred to work upon new matter as it was confusing to the sub-conscious acting of the brain, eyes and hands.

Attention was keenly centred upon Miss Fritz as she undertook the first test of writing for one minute from copy. With a stop watch Mr. Coo acted in the capacity of official time keeper. Miss J. Purdy, as head of the Shorthand Department, examined and submitted as correct count the results. The first test from copy showed 119 words written without a mistake. The second test was typing for one minute from dictation; the record of this being 132 words. The third test was writing blindfold for one minute from dictation. In this Miss Fritz mis-struck the keys twice only in 124 words. Then she undertook to type out one minute conversation intelligently with Principal Johnson on the ordinary topics of the day. This comprised, with her own words and replies to Mr. Johnson a total of 128 words done within the specified time, only two words being missed. Next a two minute dictation test was undertaken and Miss Fritz again revealed her wonderful command of the typewriter by transcribing 258 words absolutely correct when Mr. Coo called time. This established a Canadian record, Miss Fritz already holding an American record of 260 words in two minutes. Miss Fritz sometimes interrupts the person dictating, not for cause or repetition sake, but that the wonderful faculty which she possesses in being able to centralize her mind on the work at hand, following five or six words back to the subject matter, the dictation being resumed from the last word of her interruption.

An unique departure followed in Mr. Johnson placing on the blackboard eighteen figures in three columns, these being read off to Miss Fritz and typed out in words with the correct addition shown. This was equal to a total of 265 words in two minutes five seconds or at the rate of 130 words per minute.

The final performance was that of writing copy for three minutes from regular examination work, in course of which Miss Fritz changed almost unnoticeably to a second paper. In this she made 816 strokes to the minute.

It is claimed that Miss Fritz has attained to a maximum of 17 strokes to the second in this respect where conditions of light and position were the best.

During the course of her demonstrations her work was handed out among the spectators. The punctuating was carefully done, and a perfect evenness of touch was very manifest. Miss Fritz does not appear to find her task at all laborious.

A WONDERFULLY PROLIFIC MOTHER

In the district of Kroonstaad, in the Transvaal, lives the widow of Van Wyk, whose history, matrimonially and otherwise is—not to put too fine a point upon it—somewhat out of the common. Born on October 20, 1832 Mrs. Van Wyk, nee Miss Thelia M de Beer, began what was to prove an eventful matrimonial career at the age of 18 when she married Petrus Jacobus Lubbe.

At the end of two years she became a widow with one child. After being a widow for ten months she married Nicholas Marthiuus Pretorius, a widower with four children. After living with him for a year and five months, he also died, leaving her with five children. After five months she married for the third time, David Stephanus Pieterse, a widower with seven children. With him she lived eleven years and had seven children when he also died. After five years' widowhood she married, for the fourth time, Daniel Lodwekis Cronje, a widower with eight children. With him she lived eleven years and had four children, when he died. Five years later she married for the fifth time Hendrick Klopper.

With him she also lived eleven years and had ten children, when he also died. After two years she married for the sixth time on this occasion, with Coenraad Hendrick Van Wyk, a widower with five children, and with him she had four children.

After having lived together for eleven years, he also died. She had thus 50 children who called her mother and about 270 grand children. She is still alive at the age of 78 years.

A "CURE"? FOR BALDNESS

The above expression is one that is used frequently in connection with hair preparations. Just exactly what is meant by it is in each instance a question. Baldness is not a disease and hence, does not permit of a cure It is a result invariably traced to the dandruff germ and if the condition has become chronic, that is, if there is complete atrophy of the hair follicles, a cure is absolutely impossible.

Approaching baldness, seen in falling hair, may always be checked and if the hair follicles are not atrophied the hair may be induced to grow.

This is accomplished by regular applications of Newbro's Herpicide which cleanses the scalp and kills the dandruff germ. The destructino of the germ does away with the accumulation of the scarf skin and thus eliminates the most common enemy to beautiful hair.

Soft, glossy, fluffy hair cannot grow on a scalp infested with dandruff any more than a delicate plant can grow on an ash heap. The scalp must be kept clean and free from dandruff The best remedy for doing this is Newbro's Herpicide, which receives the highest endorsements from professional men, the stage, and the best people everywhere.

Herpicide is sold and guaranteed in one dollar size bottles by J. S. McKeown. Applications obtained at all first-class barber shops and hair dressing parlors.

FURTHER FACTS AS TO CITY LOTS

The last exposure made in The Intelligencer of the sale of city lots by ex-Mayor Marsh and Treasurer Price referred to sales made to the mother-in-law of Mr. Marsh. (See The Intelligencer of January 16th). The records in the Registry Office showing the participation of these officials and their relatives during September and October, 1910, in the purchase and sale of lots forfeited to the city for the non-payment of taxes, form a long and interesting chapter that will not be fully exposed until a judicial inquiry takes place. As it will likely require some time to get the legal machinery necessary to the inquiry assembled and in motion, it will doubtless interest our readers if we place before them in the meantime such facts in relation to the matter as reach us. To-day Treasurer Price and his near and distant relatives will occupy our attention.

Honors between the two families seem to have been kept fairly even. Now it is the Marsh combination that seems to be ahead, but very soon we find the Price alliance fully abreast of the other. In the transaction stated below the latter came well to the front, possibly got a little ahead.

Eighty Dollars All the City Received For One Acre and Ten One-Hundredths of an Acre of Land in Bleecker Ward.

The Registry Office shows that the city's officials, Messrs. Price and Marsh, the trustees for the people, sold to Helen A. Price, wife of David Price, City Treasurer, on September 15th, 1910, Lots 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10, west Alice Street, in Bleecker Ward, containing one acre and ten one-hundredths of an acre, for the paltry sum of eighty dollars, and the deed was recorded on September 17th, 1910.

Forty-Five Dollars All the City Received for Three-Fifths of an Acre of Land in Bleecker Ward.

The Registry Office shows that these same officials, these trustees for the people, sold to Harry A. Davidson, of Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, son-in-law of Treasurer Price, on September 16th, 1910, Lots 4, 5 and 6 East Alice Street, Bleecker Ward, containing three-fifths of an acre, for the trifling sum of forty-five dollars, and the deed was recorded on September 17th, 1910.

The Registry Office shows that these officials, these trustees for the people, sold to Harry A. Davidson for $100, on October 1st, 1910, Lots 7 and 8, south Russell Street, and Lots 4 and 5 north Russell Street, and the deed was recorded October 12th, 1910.

We have not yet fully ascertained the amount of profit secured by the respective families of Mr. Marsh and Mr. Price by the sale of the above mentioned lots, acquired from the city for a song. Many hundreds of dollars have, we are informed, been made on these lots alone, and it looks now as though the profits derived on all the transactions run into thousands of dollars.

We have been wondering what the new citizens, the railway men who have recently come into Bleecker Ward from York and Brockville and other places, and their fellow employees, old residents of the city, think of the treatment they received from the ex-Mayor and the Treasurer, when, as new citizens, they attempted to secure land near their work on which to build homes. When their removal was ordered by the G. T. R. and the men had not yet made up their minds to comply, they were informd by the city authorities, as an inducement to move here, that they would be given the opportunity to purchase lots direct from the city at a low price.

The coming of these men and the building of the great works here by the Grand Trunk Railway Co. last year made the demand for the lots through which the Marsh and Price families unfairly profitted. The railway men were shamefully treated by the man who was then the Mayor of the city and by the man who was then, and is now, the City Treasurer.—Com.

NEW ROLLING MILL AT COBOURG

COBOURG, Jan. 20.—A new mill has been erected for the Provincial Steel Company here, and the machinery is now being installed. It is stated that when the mill is completed the two mills will be worked night and day on three shifts of eight hours each. This will mean a large increase in the number of men employed. A. L. Reading is general manager, and S. J. McCrudden, general superintendent. As this the first Canadian re-rolling mill, wide interest is taken in its operations. The employees, with few exceptions, are local men, and it is proving a highly-valued industry for Cobourg.

TWO WOMEN FOUGHT IN RING

TULSA, Okla., Jan. 20.—A wave of indignation is sweeping the State as a result of the six-round prize fight fought here yesterday between Bess Martin, of Oklahoma, and Nellie Bennett, of Chicago. Although both women fought at a fast clip, the referee declared it a drew, a decision that did not satisfy the seven hundred spectators who whooped and applauded during the affray. Many of the spectators were women, who showed a surprising knowledge of pugilistic lingo, shouting to their respective favorites to "put her out" and "hand her a right uppercut."

Although the Oklahoma woman was stronger, her Chicago sister showed superior science, breaking through her opponent's guard and mussing up her complexion. In the first round, Bess Martin started off with a rush, but in the second she contented herself with attempting to dodge the blows of her adversary. The third and fourth rounds were about even, but in the fifth and sixth supporters of Nellie Bennett claimed that she had a shade the better of the Oklahoman, by reason of her knowledge of the Marquis of Queenbury's text book.

The largest and heaviest projectile in the world is the huge five feet armor piercing shell, fired from the United States Government's great 16-inch rifle. This huge shell of steel can be hurled a distance of 20 miles or more and weighs 240 pounds. The cost of firing one shot is nearly $1,000.

FAT FOLKS FAVOR

Too much fat is both uncomfortable and dangerous, but usually fleshy people prefer to put up with its inconvenience rather than punish themselves with the tiresome exercise usually prescribed, or endangering their health by taking so-called "sures" or patent fat "reducers."

This self-sacrifice of comfort and health to overabundant fat is entirely unnecessary, however, as Mrs. Luella Bigger tells us that there is a home receipt that is far superior in every way to anything money will buy for reducing superfluous flesh It is said this simple mixture will take the fat off a man or woman at the rate of at least a couple of pounds a week without even causing wrinkles. Moreover it does not disturb the stomach, but is a good thing for the system, clearing away pimples, and best of all, it does not interfere with the diet. You use it and at the same time eat whatever you like. This receipt is as follows: 1-2 ounce of Marmola; 3-4 ounce fluid extract Cascara Aromatic and 4 3-4 ounces of Peppermint Water. Get these ingredients at any drug store, mix them at home and take one teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

Mrs. Bigger, as is well-known, is a famous beauty expert, and whatever she recommends is sure to be found entirely satisfactory.

Forty Killed In Mine.

Warsaw, Jan. 21.—Four hundred miners were entombed alive yesterday and forty instantly killed by an explosion in the Casimir coal mine at Sosnowice on the Russo-Prussian frontier. Fire broke out following the explosion, cutting off the escape by the main shaft, but 360 cut their way through a wall separating them from a cross tunnel and came out alive. Rescue parties that were able to enter the mine after the fire had raged for several hours found forty men dead, their bodies badly mutilated.

Negligence of the mine owners to apply proper safety devices was responsible for the disaster and the arrest of three of the owners was ordered by Government officials, who arrived on the scene and directed the work of rescue.

Rioting broke out among the rescued miners and the relatives of the men who were killed and soldiers were called to prevent an attack on the mine owners, when they were taken into custody.

Winston Churchill Assailed.

London, Jan. 21.—The Cabinet held its first meeting yesterday for the purpose of drafting the King's speech from the throne, and a program of legislation for what promises to be an historic session of Parliament.

The militant suffragettes thickly dotted Downing street, determined to remind the Ministers that their demands were as urgent as ever. One banner suggested that Home Secretary Winston Churchill should be imprisoned. The active young bearer of this conviction managed to elude the police, rush the Home Secretary when he appeared on the street, and, using the banner as a lance, attempted to knock off Mr. Churchill's hat. The police quickly cleared away the demonstrators.

A Third Trial.

Montreal, Jan. 21.—It was learned yesterday morning at the office of the crown prosecutors here that the attorney-general has ordered that a third trial of Aime and Omer Houle, brothers, accused of the murder of their brother-in-law, Domina Pelletier, at St. Timothee, Beauharnois County, over a year ago.

A change of venue has been granted, and this time the trial will take place here at the March term of the Court of King's Bench. At the two previous trials, held in Valleyfield, the jury disagreed.

6 YEAR OLD GIRL

Cured of Kidney Trouble.

Mrs. Alex Moore, of James St., Oxford, N. S., says: "Booth's Kidney Pills cured our little daughter, Christian, age six years, of many symptoms of kidney weakness. She complained of a sore back, the kidney secretions were frequent and uncontrollable, especially at night. Her stomach was weak and her appetite poor. This caused her to have frequent headaches, and the least exertion would tire her. We had tried many remedies but she did not improve. Finally we learned of Booth's Kidney Pills and procured a box In a remarkably short time she was well and does not now complain of her back, the kidney secretions have become normal, and she plays around the house with no apparent fatigue. We always recommend Booth's Kidney Pills.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

We recently visited an electric plant having eight dynamos that supply energy for twelve elevators, three thousand lights twenty motors, besides lighting two large theatres. The eight dynamos in this power-house are connected together, so that they furnish a common fund of energy. Several times the wires that conduct energy have become grounded and then a large amount of the electricity leaked away to the earth. Under this condition the elevators were run and the theatres lighted but the dynamos were necessarily strained to their utmost capacity which rapidly wears and burns them out, thus making the 'brains' of the plant of very short lift.

WHALE RAMS A BIG STEAMER

Stove in Steel Plates, But Crushed its Own Skull With Blow

NEW ORLEANS, La., Jan. 20--The Norwegian steamer, Mount Vernon, is in port to-day with a score of plates on her port side badly damaged in a fight with a whale in the Gulf of Mexico.

Three days out from Bocas del Toro and near the mouth of the Mississippi, Captain Falsen says he was awakened early on January 13 by the prow of his ship striking something soft. He ran on deck and saw a huge whale, which he estimated at 75 feet long, backing away from the forward quarter of the Mount Vernon.

Hundreds of yards from the ship the whale stopped, thrashed the sea with its tail, and drove straight at the boat.

The whale's head struck just below the point where the skipper stood. The blow was tremendous and the steel plates buckled. Capthin Falsen was thrown to the deck. With the rebound of the blow the whale was hurled back. His crushed head was upreared for a moment, and then his body sank.

HOCKEY NOTES.

The Kingston Frontenacs administered a bad beating to the Picton Juniors last night at Picton. At half time the score was 12—1, and at the close 18—7, each team scoring 6 goals in the second half, which shows that the Frontenac probably let up toward the close.

The fans are expecting a fine game on Monday night when Belleville's new Pro. team will play their first game, the fast and clever septette from Port Hope being their opponents. There will no doubt be a large attendance.

A NO-SCORE GAME.

The hockey match between the A. C. L. and Y.M.C.A. Scouts last evening resulted in a tie, no score being made. The play was very evenly divided, although only once or twice was there any combination play. Individual rushes seemed to be the idea of all, and this grand stand play always ended at the point or cover point. The goal keepers handled the few shots in good shape, but they were complaining of being cold all through the game. Mr. Pringle kept the penalty timekeeper busy with sending the boys into the box continually for different offences. A return match is being looked forward to with a great deal of interest, when it is hoped one of the teams will score a goal.

THE ICE RACES.

That there will be a good field of horses in the speeding events which take place on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoon next at the driving park here is assured. Many well known trotters have been here for several days and others are arriving. The track at present is in first-class condition.

The latest arrivals of horses are Bertie Forest for the green race, and Cassie Pointer entered in the 2.17 class. These are sent here by Cal Home, of Toronto.

CURLING.

For some reason the Campbellford curlers did not come here yesterday afternoon, as was anticipated, to play a friendly game with members of the local club.

At the curling rink last night two club matches were played off and both were interesting games. Messrs. M. Wright and W. M. Watson proved to be the successful skips. The players and scores were as follows:

H. C. Earle,	F. W. Millard,

BOWLING.

At the Front Street bowling alleys on Thursday night a match took place between four bowlers, two being on a side. Messrs. W. Cornelius and T. Ramsay easily defeated their opponents, E. Schutt and J. Magner. The score was as follows:

J. Magner	747

LOST HIS FOOT BY FALLING TREE

Mr. James McCoy, a well-known yeoman who resides in Madoc Township, yesterday afternoon met with a deplorable accident. He was engaged in falling a tree, which tree was supported near the top by a branch from another tree, which prevented the elm from falling until it was severed from the stump, when it slipped off, falling upon Mr. McCoy's right foot. He was taken to Dr. Harrison's office in Madoc village, where it was found necessary to amputate the foot above, the ankle. Mr. McCoy is over fifty years of age.

LAYMEN'S BANQUET AT FOXBORO

Under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, a successful banquet was held last evening in the village of Foxboro. Upwards of 150 were in attendance. Mr. John A. Holgate accupied the chair. After supper a platform meeting was held at which appropriate addresses on the movement were given by Rev. R. C. Blagrave, of this city, and Mr. Madole, of Napanee. Vocal selections were furnished by Mr. Thomas Holgate, Mr. Potts and the Marsh Hill quartette.

BRONCHITIS

To Whom It May Concern.

Bluevale, Ont., May 4, 1910.—"I was sick for two years with chronic bronchitis and a consequent run-down condition. I received no benefit from doctors or from a trip which I took for my health and I had to give up work. Vinol was recommended and from the second bottle I commenced to improve—I gained in weeght and strength, my bronchial trouble disappeared, and I am at work again. I want to recommend Vinol to anyone who is need of such a medicine."—Thomas Higgins. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

It is the combined action of the curative elements of the cods' livers aided by the blood making and strength creating properties of tonic iron contained in Vinol which makes it so successful in curing bronchitis.

Vinol is a constitutional remedy for chronic coughs, colds, bronchitis, and pulmonary troubles, not a palliative, like cough syrups.

Vinol contains no oil or drugs and is far more efficacious than cough mixtures, because it cures the cause. Try it. If you don't think it helps you we will refund your money. J. S. McKeown.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES

The Symphony Orchestra will assist at the mass meeting for men at the Palace Theatre to-morrow when Mr. Bailey gives the illustrated address on "The Life of Elisha."

A movement was set on foot last night at the G. T. R. to try and influence the company to provide an up-to-date branch of the Railway Y.M.C.A. at this point, for the exclusive accommodation of the employees. It is believed that if sufficient number of the employees will identify themselves in becoming members that a splendid equipment would be provided, within easy access of the yard. The men desire a new building, fitted up with game rooms, bowling alleys, baths, rooms for giving instruction, and a number of sleeping rooms.

To-morrow Mrs. O'Flynn is providing a luncheon for about twenty young strangers who are meeting at the Y.M.C.A. at the close of the men's meeting in the Palace Theatre.

Rev. A. M. Hubly gave a very interesting and profitable address to the Boy Scouts of Belleville last evening. The boys were taken on a trip across the Atlantic Ocean, although still in Belleville. The trip was very rough at times, but no person got sea sick, which made things more lively and all could enjoy themselves throughout the whole journey.

HE GIVES MONEY BACK

Mr. Crompton Returns $10,700 Received From Travers.

Head of Corset Company Makes Restitution of Cash Irregularly Given by ex-Manager of Farmers Bank—Four Provisional Directors Are Forced to Go Before a Jury—Clarkson Will Be Round on Monday.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—Restitutions have begun in the Farmers' Bank case, and $10,700 has been returned by F. Crompton of the Crompton Corset Co. This is the first amount to be so returned, but it is understood that other sums have been tentatively offered by those who got money irregularly from the bank. Prosecutions may follow in some of these cases even after any restitution may be made.

The money returned by Mr. Crompton is the $10,000 received by him for $100,000 Keeley Mines, Ltd., stock which was given him by Travers to induce him to deposit $190,000 in the bank. The deposit was made and the stock transferred. When the deposit was withdrawn, Travers asked for the return of the stock, and Mr. Crompton agreed to return it upon payment of $10,000, which was paid him by Travers. The balance of the restitution is for moneys wrongfully paid out by the bank to Mr. Crompton as interest.

It was also learned yesterday that Messrs. J. M. Godfrey and T. N. Phelan of the legal firm of Robinette, Godfrey & Phelan, are now in New York advising with George Wishart, the Gotham broker, with regard to his possible return to Canada to give himself up to face the charge of conspiring with Dr. Beattie Nesbitt to steal $300,000 from the bank.

"They want to see him about the titles of certain mining properties in Porcupine," said Mr. Robinette, K.C., when asked about the mission of his partners to Wishart. "I do not know that we have been retained to act for Mr. Wishart in connection with the charge made against him. He may have retained both or either of them, and they may have seen Mr. Corley with regard to bail for him, which I understand will be granted, as is usual, should he return. But I do not know anything about it more than this."

The four provisional directors of the bank, Dr. John Ferguson, Provincial Archivist Alex. Fraser, A. S. Lown, barrister, and John Watson, ex-mayor of Listowel, Ont., were arraigned in the Police Court yesterday. All pleaded not guilty to the charge of conspiring to obtain $10,000 to answer which they were summoned. Magistrate Denison declared that he would not try this case, but that it must be sent to a jury. He gave as his reason that there was not time to properly investigate the case in the Police Court. Mr. Hugh E. Rose, representing the defendants, declared that as "the public mind is in such a state that every man mentioned in connection with this case is presumed be guilty until innocent," his clients were anxious for a speedy trial. The case was adjourned till Thursday morning. There was a great crowd in the court room to see these prominent gentlemen arraigned, and many were disappointed at the brief hearing.

As soon as they left the court room all four of the defendants were closeted with Inspector Duncan in his office for a short time. What was the nature of the conference could not be learned. Travers was not brought up from the jail to be used as a witness, but will be on Thursday next, when the hearing is continued.

Curator G. T. Clarkson is still confined to his house, and will not likely be at his office in the bank building until Monday, and may be away even longer than that.

Swallowed Oil of Cedar.

Hamilton, Jan. 21.—Edward Matthews, 98 Ashley street, took a dose of oil of cedar last night, evidently with suicidal intent. He keeps a blacksmith shop on John street, near King William, and it was there he took the poison. He lost a law suit recently over some property, and this is said to have preyed on his mind. He was taken to the City Hospital in an unconscious condition, where the stomach pump was used to good effect. He was reported to be in a serious condition, but it is thought he will recover. He is 25 years of age.

Found Dead In Room.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Jan. 21.—W. S. Smith, aged 35, was found dead Thursday night lying on the floor of a room in the Algoma Hotel, adjoining the bar.

He was an Englishman, letters in his pocket showing that he came from Huddersfield, Yorkshire. He had been employed by the Dominion Tar & Chemical Co., and had discontinued work through illness, with the option of returning when his condition warranted it. It is said that he had been lying on the floor four hours before it was discovered he was dead.

Champagne Going to Waste.

Paris, Jan. 21.—Mediation conferences began yesterday to settle the dispute between discontented employes and the vineyard owners and champagne makers, which has resulted in the destruction of much property and the loss of thousands of gallons of wine and champagne.

It is believed that the Government will soon be able to establish the former good feeling between employers and employed.

The troops will remain until the trouble is settled.

Reject Mediation.

Guayaquil, Ecuador, Jan. 21.—Jose Pearita, the Ecuadorean Secretary for Foreign Affairs, yesterday made reply to the joint note of the United States, Brazil and Argentine, rejecting their attempt at mediation and the suggestion that the dispute be submitted to The Hague tribunal.

THREE WERE KILLED.

Further Details of Parisiana Wreck Have Arrived.

Albany, West Australia, Jan. 21.—The steamer Parisiana has been destroyed by fire at sea. Three of the passengers on board were killed, and the remainder, ninety-four in number, together with the crew, were landed here yesterday by a steamer which took them off after a five days' fight with the flames. The flames broke out on the seventh of December.

The battle against the flames was fought until the 13th, the crew working in relays. The fire gradually ate its way through the cargo to the wooden structure. Attention was attracted to the burning vessel by the flames, which were visible for more than 150 miles at sea.

The Parisiana was due at Melbourne about the first of January and fears for her safety led to orders being posted in maritime circles for ships to keep a keen watch for her.

The passengers, many of whom were taken on at Port Said, were in a state of complete exhaustion from exertion and fright when they were taken off the vessel. They had worked night and day helping the members of the crew fight the growing fire, but the progress of the flames was so rapid that it became apparent that all on board would have to take to the boats in open sea. The boats were being lowered when the rescuing steamer came along from New York.

The Parisiana was built at Newcastle, Eng., in 1909, being a comparatively new vessel. She was steel built and with screw propellers and of modern type.

Her hailing port was west from Hartlepool, England.

Mixed Farmers Satisfied.

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—A new light on the tariff situation in the farming community was shed yesterday by a deputation of western Ontario farmers who waited upon the Premier. About a score of "mixed farmers" represented to Sir Wilfrid Laurier that they were perfectly satisfied with the condition of things to-day, and dissociated themselves from the farmers who formed the recent huge deputation of grain growers.

David Jackson of Grimsby, the first speaker, said they had no particular grievance to relate. They thought that no radical change should be made in the tariff without a mandate from the people. They deprecated the language of the agitators who had recently been in Ottawa, and who were setting up one class against another. Implements had never been cheaper than at present. The grangers did not represent the farmers of Ontario or of the east.

D. H. Moyer of Campden, Lincoln County, endorsed the views of Mr. Jackson, and said that they represented men, many of whom held land to the value of from $600 to $1,000 an acre.

C.N.R.'s First Immigrants.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—T. Howell, chief immigration agent of the Canadian Northern Railway, has just returned from Halifax, where he received the first party of British immigrants for the season.

Mr. Howell states that they numbered about 200, and the personnel was so excellent that not one of them had to be delayed either on account of any doubt as to judicial or physical condition.

A majority of the party were single young men. A few families were in the party, and a number of young women for domestic servants. All the men were experienced in farm work. They will go to work already arranged for them in Western Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

Officers joining the reserve of medical officers will be required to serve in the naval service in the time of war or emergency. They will be required to bind themselves for five years, receiving $150 per annum.

DEFENCE COSTS A LOT

More Money Spent on It Than on Agriculture in Canada.

Mr. Edwards of Kingston Makes a Sharp Attack on the Minister of Public Works and Minister of Militia—He Also Shows Inhumanity in the Department of Justice—Athens Postoffice to Cost $5,000.

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—Astonishing figures showing not only the enormous expenditures made by the Laurier Government since 1906 for militia and defence, as compared with the parsimonious policy pursued with respect to encouraging the agricultural industry, were submitted to the House last night by J. W. Edwards, member for Frontenac, in a speech which savagely attacked the Department and Minister of Public Works Pugsley and drew from the Government gentlemen a vehement denial, until Mr. Edwards proved that the figures had been supplied by the Ministers of his own Department, and were consequently official.

The House was in supply on the estimates of the Department of Public Works.

Dr. Edwards referred again to the report published in The Kingston Standard concerning the inhuman treatment of a prisoner who had been discharged from the penitentiary without sufficient clothing to withstand the cold of winter, or sufficient money to purchase necessaries. Dr. Edwards noted that the Minister of Justice in his remarks on Thursday had dealt with only one case, but The Kingston Standard had declared that more than one prisoner had been released without sufficient clothing.

Sir Alan Aylesworth replied that he was endeavoring in satisfying the House that, so far as the warden and officials of the institution were concerned, they had obeyed the rules of the Department. But he thought the Penitentiaries Act had in mind the low temperature of Canadian winter, for prisoners had the option of remaining in the penitentiary during the winter months after the sentence had expired. The clothing which the prisoner had when he entered the penitentiary was returned to him, also the regulation suit and a sum of money.

Dr. Sproule did not think much of the privilege which allowed a prisoner to stay longer in jail until the winter cold had passed. He thought it was only natural that they would want to get out as soon as possible.

R. S. Lake (Qu'Appelle), introduced a discussion upon the new departmental building on Sussex street, which is to cost $3,500,000. He said the archives building was in no way worthy of the country. He urged that the design of the new building should be a credit to the country.

He considered that the architects of the present day were on just as high a level as those of the past, and they had a pretty good example of modern architecture in the splendid building which was being erected by the Grand Trunk Railway in Ottawa. He could not help thinking that if a proper effort were made the new departmental buildings would be made just as worthy to occupy the situation they will occupy in the capital as the Parliament Buildings.

Mr. Pugsley said that prizes had been awarded for the design of the new building, but the Department of Public Works had decided not to accept any of the plans. New plans had been prepared by the architects of the Department. Referring to changes which had been made in the departmental plans subsequently, the Minister stated that these had been rendered necessary by an arrangement with the Improvement Commission.

George H. Perley asked the Premier if the report from Washington, that the draft reciprocity treaty had been forwarded to Ottawa for the approval of the Ottawa Government, was correct.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: "It is certainly premature."

Ontario estimates were reached on going to supply, and the first item to be dealt with was $5,000 for a postoffice and customs house at Athens. Athens is in Leeds, and the members of the Opposition arrived at the conclusion that it was in the constituency of Brockville, represented by Hon. George P. Graham. There was a cry that the vote was intended to help the Minister of Railways.

Mr. Pugsley did not know whether Athens was in the constituency of the Minister, or of Mr. Taylor, the Conservative whip.

Hon. Geo. E. Foster criticized the policy of the Government in maintaining a public building at the expense of the Public Works Department after it was completed. He contended that after it had been turned over to the postoffice and customs departments they should be charged with the cost of maintenance, which would show more clearly on the administrative statements of these branches of the Government.

Ship Subsidies.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Discussing Senator Gallinger's bill for subsidies to mail steamships, Senator Burton asserted that not five per cent. of the shipping of Great Britain is subsidized, and added that the aggregate of subventions in that country is nothing like as great as is contemplated in this bill.

Mr. Gallinger challenged the statement, saying while over $9,000,000 a year is paid out of the British treasury in aid of British shipping, not more than $3,360,000 possibly could be paid out under his bill.

They May Withdraw.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 21.—The United Mine Workers of America yesterday adopted a resolution withdrawing from the American Federation of Labor if the latter does not admit the Western Federation of Miners into the American Federation of Labor without restrictions.

POSTMASTERS TO RECRUIT.

They Will Enlist Candidates For the Canadian Navy.

Ottawa, Jan. 21.—In the Senate yesterday Senator Landry was informed that complaint had been made as to the quality of the food served by Jacques Dery, restaurant keeper in the immigration building at Quebec. However, it was impossible to please everybody, and there were many patrons of the place who had made complaint. This matter would be investigated.

Hon. Mr. Landry was told the Naval Department proposes to post advertisements for the purpose of informing persons who desire to enter the navy of a means by which they can do so. Postmasters of several of the largest cities will be the recruiting officers, and will be paid $2 for each man they enlist for the navy.

Senator Landry asked if the Government had been informed that at the time of the Tercentenary celebration at Quebec, Americans disguised as English sailors were able to visit the Beaumont forts, and to become acquainted with the details of their construction and their armaments.

Sir Richard Cartwright replied, "No special instructions were given to guard against the admission of strangers to defence works at Quebec during the Tercentenary. The district officer commanding at Quebec has been asked to report on this matter."

Senator Thompson moved the second reading of the bill fixing the weight of a barrel of potatoes at 160 pounds. He explained that a weight standard for a barrel of potatoes had become necessary by the development of export trade to the West Indies.

Senator Cloran said that flour barrels were used for apples and potatoes, and they would not hold more than 150 pounds.

Senator Thompson replied that there was nothing in the bill requiring 160 pounds of potatoes to be put into a barrel, but the bill was designed to provide for the measurement of carloads or cargo lots in bulk.

Sir Richard Cartwright stated that in committee he would have some amendments which would make the bill clearer. The bill was given its second reading.

Eggs Rejected In New York?

Montreal, Jan. 21.—Dr. Lachapelle of the Board of Control and Dr. McCarrey, chief of the civic pure food department think that there is danger of Montreal being made a dumping ground for the foodstuffs rejected by New York and other neighboring cities.

"I am convinced," said Dr. Lachapelle yesterday, "that those eggs which we ordered removed on Thursday were rejected in New York before they came here. The people exporting this stuff are after money. They would not care if half the people in the city were made sick if they made a few thousand dollars. They must be shown that Montreal is closed against their improper food. And to accomplish this we have given instructions to Dr. McCarrey to report every case which seems to him to be at all suspicious."

The representatives of the owners of the frozen eggs, being interviewed yesterday, stated that the eggs complained of were perfectly wholesome and pure, and that the city had acted in a very arbitrary and unjust manner in regard to the affair.

"The city now proposes to confiscate the shipment on the strength of a single representative," he said, "although it has a contradictory report in its possession, without giving the owners any chance whatever to be heard.

"The owners of the shipment certainly will not submit to any such action on the part of the city."

Respect to Departed Judge.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—The funeral service of the late Mr. Justice Hugh MacMahon was solemnized in St. Michael's Cathedral at 9.30 yesterday morning. Rev. Father Teefy, a close friend of deceased, sang the high mass of requiems, and Rev. S. McGrath acted as deacon. Mrs. S. Coffey played the music. The body was interred in Mount Hope Cemetery.

Two sons, D'Arcy MacMahon and Harold MacMahon, survive and were the chief mourners at the service. A very large number of floral tributes covered the casket.

The honorary pallbearers were Sir William Meredith; Sir Charles Moss, Sir John Boyd, Sir William Mulock, Sir Glenholme Falconbridge, Mr. Justice Teetzel, Hon. J. J. Foy, Mr. Duncan Coulson, Mr. D. R. Wilkie, Hon. Wallace Nesbitt, Mr. Angus Sinclair and Mr. J. S. Willison.

Breaking the Ice.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 21.—Local fishing interests were gratified yesterday by the receipt of a private despatch from Newfoundland, saying that three Gloucester fishing boats, caught in the Bay of Islands, have been liberated by the Newfoundland cruiser Fiona. The vessels are the S. P. Willard, Ella M. Goodwin and the Dauntless.

As the cruiser was under no obligation to attempt to break the ice about the fishermen, the action is appreciated here as a bit of international courtesy.

Must Invest In the Country.

Panama, Jan. 21.—The National Assembly called in extraordinary session to deal with the financial situation yesterday, passed a measure requiring insurance companies doing business in Panama to invest or deposit $100,000 in this country. The law is to become effective one year from the day of enactment.

The Assembly also voted to give $100,000 in gold in aid of the projected Panama world's fair of 1915.

Col. Hughes In St. Kitts.

St. Catharines, Jan. 21.—Col. Sam Hughes, M.P., is spending a few days at the home of E. A. Lancaster, M.P., in this city. Last night the colonel with Mr. Lancaster delivered addresses to a large gathering of men in the Masonic Hall, under the auspices of the city Conservative Association.

FAMILY IS WIPED OUT

Percy Brooks of Toronto Loses Wife and Three Babes.

Fire Breaks Out In Home on Indian Road While Father Is Away In Chicago, and Only Maid Escapes Death by Jumping From the Window—Fire Started at Furnace—Wire Sent to Father.

Toronto, Jan. 21.—Mrs. Percy C. Brooks and her three children were burned to death in an early morning fire here.

The eldest child was five years of age. Two were girls and one a boy.

A fire that partially destroyed the frame house, 435 Indian Road, at an early hour this morning was responsible for the deaths. The fire apparently started near the furnace and worked its way into the upper part of the house, cutting off all escape for the family. The maid jumped from a rear window and escaped.

Mr. Brooks, manager and treausrer of the Fairbanks-Morris Manufacturing Co., is in Chicago on business. He was telegraphed to by neighbors immediately on the tragedy becoming known. At 2.30 the fire was under control.

Reciprocity Is Assured.

Washington, Jan. 21.—Within two weeks from the date that the Canadian reciprocity commissioners began their conferences in Washington an agreement had been reached, so far as the executive branches of the United States and Canada are concerned, that will result in the substantial reduction of customs duties on a number of products, natural and manufactured, of the two countries.

The commissioners met at the State Department yesterday for the purpose of making a careful comparison of the various schedules involved in the arrangement, to make sure no error had crept in, and that nothing remained likely to be subject to conflicting construction in the future.

In accordance with the announcement contained in the statement given to the press when the commissioners began their work, even to-day individual commissioners felt bound to refrain from giving the least intimation as to the products affected by their negotiations. That information will be withheld until the sessions of the commissioners have reached an end, when formal announcement will be made.

Important Change In Rates.

New York, Jan. 21.—Officers of Canadian and American express companies, in conference here yesterday, announced last night a reduction in through rates soon to take effect between all offices in the United States and many in Canada. It is explained that several of the Canadian companies have held back up to the present, because the customs regulations at the Canadian border necessitates so much extra work that a reduction in existing rates would in many cases work a hardship.

All the important companies were represented, including the Adams, Canadian, American, National, Northern, Southern, Western, Pacific and United States Express Companies, Wells-Fargo & Co. and the New York and Boston Despatch. The announcement made follows in part:

"Instead of two companies which may handle an express package making a separate charge on each line, the charge will be the same as if one company had carried the package from shipping point to destination."

Vol. 44 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1911. NO. 75

CAPE TO CAIRO MOTOR CONTEST

Four Thousand Gallons of Petrol Distributed Along the 5,800-Mile Course for the British Car

Four thousand gallons of petrol have already been distributed between Elizabethville, the existing railhead of the southern portion of the Cape to Cairo line, and Gondokoro, on the White Nile, to feed the British motorcar, in which Captain Bentley and his party willl leave Capetown on February 7 in a race against a German car to Cairo, a distance of 5,800 miles.

In the ordinary way the 25-h.p. car in which the British party will travel would run twenty-two miles on one gallon of spirit, but in the difficult country of Equatorial Africa a great deal of petrol will be consumed in necessary low-speed work. Two acetylene headlights, one movable searchlight, and three oil lamps, wil be carride in the car, the acetylene being conveyed in compressed form.

Each of the five men composing the expedition will carry a rifle and a revolver, with sixty rounds a rifle and twenty rounds of revolver ammunition apiece. Relays of ammunition will be stored at the petrol depots. A motor-bicycle will accompany the car, and the members of the expedition will take turns in using this for scouting and observation work.

The equipment of each man will weigh 15 pounds plus a gabardine tent, sun and water-proof, which, with with ground sheet will weigh 20 pounds, and a sleeping bag weighing 7 pounds. Altogether each man's kit will scale 42 pounds—that is to say, 18 pounds under the government weight allowance for soldiers on active service.

From Gondokoro northwards to Khartum thes upplies will be provided by a small launch, which will journey up the White Nile, making frequent depots for the motor party. In the car will be carried a small suply of flexible steel ropes, saws, picks, shovels, and axes, in case of emergencies.

MRS. OSCAR LEWISOHN

Formerly Miss Edna May, the famous musical comedy star, who is preparing to return to the stage in "The Belle of New York." The play is to be produced at the Savoy Theatre, London, for a week for the Prince Francis of Teck's Charity Fund, which has been established as a memorial to Queen Mary's late brother. Mrs. Lewisohn is busily rehearsing her old part and is very enthusiastic over the coming performance.

ARMY BALLOONS

The Long List of Fatalities Will Not Deter Trials in England

Progressive developments in connection with the army balloon school and the army balloon factory go to prove that the long list of aerial fatalities in 1910 will not deter the military authorities from pushing on with the formation and extension of the Army Air Corps. Both the Beta and Gamma airships are ready for commission, and the Lebaudy, which ripped while entering the balloon shed a few months ago, has been restored. Although Salisbury Plain will furnish the chief flying grounds for heavier-than-air machines, the scope offered for short practice flights on the Long Valley and Laffan's Plain is evidently not to be ignored. A Farman biplane has just been delivered to the balloon school on Farsborough Common. This is the third type of aeroplane which has been added to the stock at Farnsborough, for the original Wright machine presented by Mr. Rolls was supplemented a few weeks ago by an original biplane, the invention of a young civilian now enrolled on the balloon factory staff. Several officers have returned from Continental schools possessed of flying certificates.

THIS YEAR'S CENTENARIES

History appears to have shown a rather remarkable avoidance of the number eleven as a centenary date. In 1911 fifteen centuries will have elapsed since the Roman legions were recalled from Britain, never to reappear until ice-cream became a commodity favored in realms that Caesar hardly knew. It is a hundred years since Thackeray and John Bright were born. The year 1611 was famous for the birth of Archbishop Leighton, the institution of the Order of Baronets, and the publication of the Authorized Version of the English Bible.

HUGE DINNERS IN OLD ENGLAND

Local Dainties are Given Prominence at Feasts in Various Parts of the Country

Recently eighteen hundred persons participated in a "farmhouse tea" at the Regent Hall, Oxford Street, W., on the occasion of the ninth annual Devon and Cornwall festival in London. The provisions, which had been sent specially from the two western counties, incuded 200 pounds of saffron cake, 130 pounds of "nobbles" (saffron buns), 150 pounds of clotted cream, 50 pounds of butter, 130 gallons of milk, 300 junkets, and 800 pasties. The secretary stated after the "tea" that "comparatively nothing was left."

Herrings in Every Course

Feasts to which one or more local dainties give a special character, and often provide the menu, are not by any means confined to Devon and Cornwall, or to the representatives of those two fervidly patriotic counties of the west of England. Colchester has its oyster feasts, for instance, given in great state every October by its corporation to mark the opening of the oyster season and to advertise the municipal fisheries for which the town is famous. Though not so great a social event as the whitebait dinner at Greenwich—especially in the days of its chiefest glory, when it almost rivalled the Lord Mayor's banquet in importance—the Colchester oyster feast always brings together a notable gathering, whilst the number of oysters consumed is always quite as noteworthy.

The bloater is not generally considered to be the acme of style where a dinner is concerned, and as an article of diet it is generally believed to be almost exclusively used by the lower classes of society; yet Yarmouth, "the home of the herring," has its annual herring dinner, when the whole menu, from hors d'œuvres to cheese, consists of herrings and sprats—the latter, herrings in their infantile stage—served up in various ways. It must be said that some of these ways are so ingenious and wonderful that it is very difficult, and indeed almost hopeless, to recognize the familiar silvery fish to which Yarmouth owes so much of its prosperity; yet there is no doubt that the ubiquitous herring, in every dish served up at its famous meal, is present in some shape or form. Thus for once the herring is honored in accordance with its true value, for the dinner is presided over by the mayor of the borough, and is attended by all the leading men of the town.

Famous Sausages

How Peterborough Fair came to be the excuse for a sausage dinner is not known to the present writer, but the fact remains that the mayor and corporation, after proclaiming the fair in state, sit down to a meal the most prominent feature of which is sausage, of every size, color, and composition, and in every culinary form. The fair itself runs back into ancient history, and the sausage dinner has been associated with it fram time immemorial. Its proclamation seems to be a unique feature, for it takes place in two or three parts of the town, and especially by the side of the River Nen, where the fair-ground is situatd.

It is a custom three hundred years old that the Bishop of Winchester shall give an annual venison dinner at Farnham. There are many theories to account for this old custom, but the favorite one is that when the Bishop found his finest bucks disappearing he promised a buck each year if the herd should be no longer interfered with. That theory sounds a little inadequate, but it is the best of the bunch, and, whatever the reason may be, it is certain that every succeeding Bishop of Winchester is expected to provide the venison dinner.

Gorleston, a quaint place not many miles from Yarmouth, has its fish-pie dinner, given to sixty-five fishermen each winter. Why the number should be sixty-five and not sixty-six is a very mysterious question. There is another mystery about this dinner, too. The fishermen really provide their own dinner, although the vicar almost invariably presides. However, the fishermen, a singularly independent type of Englishmen, sit down together, doubtless thinking that sociability is its own reward, and do not begrudge the fact that they have asked themselves to their own dinner.

WILL EXPLORE IN ANTARCTIC

Dr. A. Forbes Mackay Would Take Six Men With Him—Total Cost, $100,000

Dr. A. Forbes Mackay, London, submits a proposal for a new Antarctic expedition conducted along different lines from those followed by previous exploring enterprises at the southern end of the earth's surface. Dr. Mackay, it will be recalled, was a member of Sir Ernest Shackleton's expedition, on which he was attached to the landing party, being associated with Professor David in the journey from the winter-quarters to the South Magnetic Pole. He proposes to explore the Antarctic coasts with a small party, provided with sledges and dogs. Travelling would be mainly on the sea ice, and they would rely on the Weddell seal for most of their food and all their fue.

The party would consist of six good men—the leader (who should be a navigator and surveyor), the second in command (who should also be a navigator), a geologist and mineralogist, a surgeon, and two handy men (who should have some experience of dog sledging). Only three sledges would be needed, and 24 dogs would be taken to draw them. The most serious difficulty likely to be encountered would probably take the form of a lofty range of mountains with steep seaward slopes ending in sheer cliffs without sea ice at their base. This obstacle could be circumvented by piercing the mountain ranges and ascending to the plateau behind them by way of a glacier, afterwards descending to the sea again by another glacier.

This system of exploration might be applied to any part of the Antarctic coasts, but the region which Dr. Mackay is most anxious to investigate is that lying between Graham Land and King Edward VII. Land, and the distance between these two places is roughly 2,000 miles. Dr. Mackay puts the average day's run at 10 miles. He believes that a ship should be able to land an exploring party in Graham Land or Alexander I. Land about the beginning of December. He estimates that the total cost of the expedition need not exceed $100,000, and considers that his plans could be admirably put into execution in connection with or as part of such an expedition as Dr. Bruce proposes.

WOMEN MINISTERS

Miss Von Petzold Says the Pulpit Offers Scope for Her Intellect and Emotions

Rev. Gertrude von Petzold is the first and only lady entrusted with the charge of a pulpit in England. Miss von Petzold, who is a graduate of Edinburgh University, and who has just returned from a two-years' preaching engagement in North America, says that her experiences had confirmed her belief in the equality of the sexes, and her intellectual face and large dark eyes assumed an expression of deep conviction when she declared her belief that "there is no work in the world that a woman cannot do as efficiently as a man if she is given the same training and opportunity. The ministry," she pursued, "is a work for which woman is peculiarly suited. It offers scope for both her intellectual and emotional qualities. I believe we need a gradual approximation between the sexes in regard to the work they are doing—domestic, private, and public. Men should take a greater interest in the home than they have been doing, and women, in the affairs of the world outside and in public questions. And, of course, I am a suffragette," Miss von Petzold added, with a smile, which suggested that she was emphasizing the obvious.

FAMILY SACRIFICES

They Serve to Make a Merry Christmas

By CLARISSA MACKIE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

"I don't see how we can afford to observe Christmas this year, Henry," remarked Mrs. Tiddleberry two weeks before that anniversary. "We've had so much sickness and bad luck during the past twelve months that to make any gifts will mean getting in debt for living expenses, and I am unwilling to do that."

Mr. Tiddleberry looked up from his paper with a relieved expression on his tired face. "I've been pondering that matter for several days, my dear."

Suddenly the wife looked up and saw her husband take a cigar from his pocket, regard it speculatively and then, sighing, return it to the case.

"Henry," she said, "smoke your cigar! You needn't think you're going to save on your only consolation just to buy some foolish nonsense for the children. How much of your month's salary will there be after you've laid aside the amount of the interest due the first of the year?"

"None," confessed her husband candidly.

"Then why should we try to observe Christmas just as if this year had been a prosperous one?"

"You have stumped me, Anne. I hate to give up Christmas, but I guess we'll have to."

"I'll do the best I can," promised Mrs. Tiddleberry as she folded up the stockings. "There will be enough to eat, but it will be plain. I laid a little money away for Bob's suit and for Linnie's new coat, and that will be all the Christmas they can have this year. I can make some black walnut candy for them and some popcorn."

When she broke the news to Linnie and Bob the next day their young faces grew quite round and solemn, and she felt a little lump in her throat as they trudged off to school with a cheerful "All right, mother, dear."

"They're disappointed enough," she murmured, "but they won't say anything. I'm proud of their pluck."

Mr. Tiddleberry developed a habit of working late in the city, and each night found him taking a later train to his suburban home until finally he stamped into the house on Christmas eve just as the clocks were striking 11.

"Henry Tiddleberry," said his wife severely. "It seems to me the importing business is picking up or you're getting behind with your books. There must be some reason for your working late at the office. You never did it before."

"There is an excellent reason, my dear," said Mr. Tiddleberry amiably as he hung his overcoat before the kitchen stove to dry, "which I will explain to you in due time. It certainly is a wild night, Anne—a typical Christmas eve. Where are the youngsters?"

"Gone to bed like lambs," said their mother in a burst of admiration. "I haven't told them just what their Christmas presents were to be, but they are clever enough to guess, I suppose. I told them it was something to wear."

"How about dinner tomorrow? Got everything in that you need?"

"Everything," said Mrs. Tiddleberry, bending a flushed face over the evening newspaper she had just opened. "I told you this morning it would be the first Christmas eve you didn't have to do any shopping. Did you miss it, Henry?"

"Did I?" exclaimed Mr. Tiddleberry emphatically.

"So did I," admitted Anne soberly. "Doesn't seem like Christmas at all. I told the children to hang up their stockings."

"They might as well, I suppose," said Mr. Tiddleberry, rather gloomily. "If you hadn't forbidden me, Anne, I might have managed a few oranges or something. I believe I'll go out and get some now." He reached into the kitchen for his overcoat, but Anne slipped to the china closet and threw open the door.

"Wait, Henry! Look there!"

"Great smoke!" whistled Mr. Tiddleberry, and then he chuckled softly to himself. "Oh, Anne, Anne, how could you, when you forbade me to buy a thing?"

"I baked a half dozen Christmas plum puddings and sold them and made enough to get some oranges and nuts," blushed Mrs. Tiddleberry under his tender scrutiny. "I couldn't bear to have them find empty stockings."

"Is that all?" demanded her husband.

"Isn't it enough?" she evaded. "Come in the parlor and look at the coat and suit. I made a larger fire in the furnace and turned the heat in here so it would be warm when they got up in the morning."

"What else have you done, Anne?" persisted Mr. Tiddleberry. "Confess! I'll give you"—looking at his watch—"just three minutes. Fire ahead!"

Anne sank back in a big rocking chair and closed her eyes wearily. "Well, I found one of Linnie's old dolls and made new clothes for it from head to foot. It looks like new. Then I made her three dainty handkerchiefs. I had the material in the house, and I fitted a little workbasket for her. That's all for Linnie. I made Bob a bath robe."

"A bath robe! Out of what—paper?"

"I had an extra blanket, a small one, so I dyed it red and made a robe for him, using a curtain cord and tassels dyed the same color. That's all except the popcorn and candy. I never spent a penny for anything except nuts and oranges."

"It's enough, Anne Tiddleberry, and you were the exponent of the giftless Christmas! Good night, my dear. Go to bed. I shall sit up awhile."

"I'm afraid I've spoiled your Christmas by objecting to the presents," she said, with compunction in her tone, as she lingered by his side.

"Not at all, my dear. I wouldn't be surprised if this turned out to be the happiest Christmas we ever had."

For a long while after his wife had departed Mr. Tiddleberry waited in silence, and when he had quite determined she must have retired he tiptoed softly to and fro between the parlor and the hall closet under the stairs, his stockinged feet making no sound on the carpeted floor.

First he untied a package and looked with unstinted admiration upon a cotton crape kimono in gay tints of red and yellow, a pair of brown kid gloves and a book that his wife had longed for. He found a pair of stockings in her darning basket and hung one beside Linnie's, putting nuts and candy and a big orange in first. Then he stuffed in the kimono and the gloves and laid the book on the shelf above it.

Into Linnie's well filled stocking he dropped a tissue paper package containing a silver bracelet, and into Bob's there went a pair of skates. After he had solemnly executed a highland fling on the hearth rug Mr. Tiddleberry extinguished the lights and went to bed much pleased with his own shrewdness.

Later Mrs. Tiddleberry arose from beside her sleeping husband and crept down in the darkness to hang one of his socks beside Bob's. She heard him stirring and flitted back again without noticing any additions to the row of stockings on the shelf.

Just before daybreak Bob's door opened softly, and a ghostly figure made a journey down to the parlor and returned. It was not until the cold Christmas sun was peeping over the rim of the world and gilding Linnie Tiddleberry's bedroom window that the little girl stirred from her warm nest and timidly slipped down the stairs over the pricking carpet.

Just as she reached her bedroom door her father's voice roared in mock ferocity: "Merry Christmas! Who goes there?"

"Me," cried Linnie. "Merry Christmas, everybody."

That was the signal for all the Tiddleberrys to arise, for it was a Christmas custom with them that they should all go downstairs together on Christmas morning. Mr. Tiddleberry looked very complacent and self satisfied as he hurried into his clothes. His wife was beaming with some hidden happiness, while Linnie and Bob sat on the top stair fully dressed and giggling joyfully.

It was a solemnly happy procession that wended its way down the stairs that morning. "Remember, children," said Mrs. Tiddleberry, "I told you not to feel disappointed if Santa Claus did not remember you very bountifully this year. Perhaps he has forgotten you entirely. We are all so happy," she looked around at the little group, "that it seems as though we had every gift that Christmas can bring, health and one another and peace and good will."

"And lots of love," burst out Linnie.

"And the pleasure of working for each other," added Mr. Tiddleberry emphatically as he opened the parlor door.

"Whoop-pee!" shouted Bob, making a dash for his plethoric stocking.

"Oh!" cried Linnie delightedly.

"Oh!" echoed her astonished mother as she claimed her own stocking.

"Great smoke!" ejaculated Mr. Tiddleberry, feeling of his own dependent sock. "What's here, Anne? Wearing out your pretty eyes over a knitted scarf for me? And what is this and this?" He held two objects to view.

"I gave you the knife, and I want a penny so as not to cut friendship," shouted Bob from the folds of his bath robe as he strapped on his skates, "and I gave mother the hairbrush, and I made Linnie the doll house out of a soap box and some wall paper."

"And I gave you the pipe, father, and the perfume is for mother, and I knitted the toboggan cap for Bob out of my old sweater—I unraveled it," cried Linnie breathlessly.

Mrs. Tiddleberry was crying softly over the contents of her stocking. "I thought I was the only one who could sacrifice for the others," she said shamefacedly, but they all fell upon her with caresses.

"Bob," said his father, "how did you do it?"

"Sold my rabbits—didn't want 'em anyway," said Bob defiantly.

"I ran errands for Mrs. Mosher, and altogether I earned 45 cents," declared Linnie proudly.

"Anne, you made plum puddings," accused her husband.

"Yes, and there's one for dinner, with other good things," she said happily. "How about your, Henry? How could you afford it? Does your delay in getting home nights account for it?"

Mr. Tiddleberry nodded. "Been clerking in a bookstore nights to earn those things. Bully plan too. Guess I'll do it every year."

"This is the best Christmas we ever had," declared Bob enthusiastically as he flung his arms about his mother's neck.

"I guess it must be because we all love each other so much," said Linnie sagely. And that was really the secret of the whole affair.

BOOK BY BOWSER.

His Own Dictionary Differs From All Others.

PRONOUNCES TO HIS IDEAS.

Mrs. Bowser Differs—Lively Discussion Follows—He Seeks the Druggist, Who Tells Him There Is a Three-letter Word That Spells Bowser.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.]

It was a coolish evening, and as Mr. Bowser came up from dinner and saw the blaze of the gas logs and noticed the cat on the hearth he turned to Mrs. Bowser and asked:

"What on earth do men do who have no little wife, no fireside, no home?"

"Yes, I am more than pleased. I should be an ingrate if I were not. Without the house there is dreariness; within is good cheer. Yes; this is the way to live."

And he actually caught up the blushing woman and printed a smacking kiss on her chin and laughed at her as she said he never would get over his courting days. He lifted up the cat and stroked her fur; he patted his leg and whistled. He was the sometimes Bowser—sometimes when he was not the other Bowser. After a bit, desiring to entertain Mrs. Bowser, he said:

PETS PUSSY AND THEN BREAKS.

"That was a dreadful affair in St. Louis the other day."

"What, dear?"

"Why, the murder of an actress by a jealous actor. She was the ingenue of the company."

He pronounced the word "injunew," and Mrs. Bowser made her mistake in saying:

"That is pronounced as if spelled 'ongenne,' you know."

"Oh, it is? Since when, may I inquire?"

"For a hundred years, perhaps. However, it makes no difference."

"But I think it does. I aim to pronounce my words right, and I don't care to be picked up and humiliated. I say the word is 'injunew.'"

"Well, let it go at that."

"Then don't be so quick to pick me up again. The other day, when I said 'cen-tri-fu-gal,' I noticed you looking at me in a queer way."

"Because I was wondering if you meant cen-trif-ugal."

"No, ma'am, I didn't. I meant just what I said."

"But there is no word pronounced cen-tri-fu-gal."

"What! What! Mrs. Bowser, I came home to pass a pleasant evening at my own fireside. Do you wish to drive me out on the streets?"

"No, of course not."

Mutterings of a Storm.

"Then don't as good as call me a jackass. I was pronouncing words when you were in your cradle. When I came home the other evening Mrs. Andrews was here. I burst in on you and then asked if I was de trop. You looked at me as if you wanted to bite my head off. Why was it?"

"Because you made the 'trop' part of the word rhyme with hop. It is pronounced de trow."

"Not on your life, woman! I have used the word for over forty years, and this is the first time I was ever picked up on it. A husband can stand a great deal from his wife, but she must not interfere with his pronunciation."

"Not even when he's wrong?" she asked.

"But he can't be wrong."

"You were reading an article aloud the other evening, and you read that a certain man had got his conge. You made it rhyme with sponge."

"And it was right—a hundred times right. I learned that word when I was twelve years old."

"Yes, of a country schoolma'am, and she was wrong about it. It is pronounced as if spelled conjay."

"Never—never in this wide world! Do not drive me too far, woman!"

"I am talking in a perfectly good natured way, and you are foolish to get mad. You see, I have many more opportunities to study out such things than you."

"Which is to say that I go blundering along any old way like a blind mule. Another insult!"

"Where none was intended. When Green and his wife were over here the other evening you said indi-ca-tive for indicative."

"And I was right—forty times right."

"You are not with the dictionaries."

"Whose dictionaries? Because half a dozen old bumps on logs get together and decide that certain words shall be pronounced according to their ideas must I be bound by them? By the eternal, no!"

"Well, you can have a dictionary of your own if you wish."

Bowser's Own Dictionary.

"And I have got one, Mrs. Bowser. It's the Bowser dictionary. It pronounces words as they are spelled. C-o-w means cow every time."

"How do you get along with pl-e-g-h-m?"

"It is spelled f-l-e-m and is so pronounced. It is the same with c-a-t-a-r. You can pronounce your words as you think best, but don't try to cram your way down my throat. It is simply impudence for you to try it."

"Shall you publish your dictionary and seek to have it introduced into schools?" asked Mrs. Bowser after a long silence, during which Mr. Bowser dropped the cat to the floor and gave her a hoist with his foot.

"Certainly. There has long been a demand for such a work, and it is growing every day. See what nonsense. In the good old days we spelled it w-a-g-g-o-n, and it was so pronounced. Now they have knocked out one 'g,' and what is it but wa-gon? Why not knock a 'g' out of buggy?"

"How do you treat the word 'valet?' Do you make it rhyme with mallet?"

"Of course I do. If valet is valley, then mallet is malley. If the born fools want to give a twist to their words, as if they were being twisted out with a corkscrew, let them go ahead. We have a street in town named Montague. Why should any one call it Mon-ta-gew? When we speak of the plague we don't pronounce it pla-gew, do we? It is Mon-tague or it's nothing. When I got out of bed the other morning I mentioned to you that I felt leth-ar-gic. I saw you grinning to yourself."

"I have always heard it called lethargic," she quietly replied.

"And you may for a year or two to come, but there's a new deal on hand. I was in hopes when this discussion came up that I might get a few pointers from you, but it is needless to say that I have been bitterly disappointed. I suppose if I should say that a certain person was cor-pulent you'd find fault with the word?"

He Quits Home.

"I have always heard it pronounced corpulent."

"Well, go on hearing. My own fireside is not for me. If I come home and sit down for a cheerful evening you must always bob up with something to spoil it. I am going out. I may come home inebriated and in a mood to brook no insults."

"If you remain we can talk of something else, can't we?" she asked. "I haven't insulted you, and I haven't said an unkind word. I know that there is the word cough and the word coffee, and if you want me to put an 'e' on cough I'll do it."

"Too late, woman—too late!" he said as he waved a hand at her and departed for the family drug store. The druggist had ten minutes to spare, and he listened patiently to Mr. Bowser's dictionary scheme and the radical changes proposed. When the story had been told he quietly said:

"There is one word I hope you won't think of changing. If you do I shall not know how to think of you. It's a little word of three letters, but it means much. You are it and it is you."

It was three days before Mr. Bowser caught on. Then he went over and dared the druggist outdoors, but it was too late. The price of squills had again advanced.

Merely a Detail.

"I came along at a fine pace in my new motorcar this morning. I must have gone well over forty."

"Dogs or chickens?"—World of Golf.

Ode to a Collar.

A collar with an Injun name,
Low, rakish, a la Byron;
A collar all knew how to maim
And none knew how to iron.

A collar by a laundry done
And through a mangle sent,
Fair as a star when only one
Is in the firmament.

Erst was it smooth and clean and low;
It knew not crack nor split.
The laundry's had it now, and, oh,
The difference to it!

FATHER VAUGHAN AND THE CHURCH

He Thinks England Would be More Patriotic with Priests to Guide the Peope

Father Vaughan, the famous Roman Catholic preacher in London, says the people of England are not patriotic enough, and that this again is the result of the country not having a great body of Catholic priests to teach them. He told all these things, not to his usual English congregation, but in a sermon in a German church in London the other day. Germany, he said, was the most patriotic land in all Europe, and its Catholic population was the most patriotic party in the empire. And if the great Central party in Germany was the recognized patriotic party, in the best sense of the word, the reason of it, he continued, was not far to seek. Patriotism was the outcome of religion, and in the measure in which religion was cultivated true patriotism flourished. When he heard of so-called Catholic countries falling away from religion he knew that the priesthood was shirking its duties. It was the house-to-house going priest who made the church-going people. He had never known, at home or abroad, any local painstaking, apostolic-living clergy without a church-going and religious-practising congregation. When dry rot set in any church it began, not in the body of the church, but in the sanctuary itself.

TAKING THE CENSUS

Numbering the King's Subjects in Great Britain is a Gigantic Task

Once more the fiat has gone forth for the numbering of the King's subjects, on Sunday, April 2nd. The necessary Census Acts—one for Great Britain, the other for Ireland—have been published; and after resting from its labors for nearly ten years the great census-taking machinery has begun to work again, and will know no rest from its labors for considerably more than a year.

More than a century ago it was no easy task to count the King's subjects, when there were fewer than 9,000,000 persons in England. Now that the population has grown fourfold, and to-day is, as nearly as possible, 36,000,000, its vastness requires no pointing out.

An Army of Enumerators

Already the whole country is flooded with tens of thousands of circulars and letters—to the local authorities, enjoining them to see that the naming and numbering of every street is in "apple pie order" before the fateful day of the census, so that the work of the enumerators may be made as simple as possible; and to the thousands of superintendent registrars, requiring them to arrange in good time for the services of a vast army of enumerators, whose number for Great Britain alone will exceed 40,000. All this naturally leads to a deluge of correspondence—letters by tens of thousands, each of which must be carefully considered and answered.

A more intricate and difficult work is the division of the country into the enumeration districts, so that no part of it, however minute, may be excluded from the survey, and so that each district shall be within the compass of one man's labor for a day. It is found in practice that in towns a district comprising about two hundred houses is large enough for one enumerator to tackle; while, in the country, a district involving a fifteen-mile walk is the measure of his powers; and into tens of thousands of such sections the whole area of the country must be mapped out.

Orders have already been given for the pre aration of the almost countless schedules which in a few weeks' time will be scattered broadcast over the land.

Millions of Schedules

For this purpose it is calculated that 20,000 reams of paper have to be specially manufactured, and something like 9,500,000 schedules printed.

Later, these millions of schedules will be sent to every point of the compass to the superintendent registrars, who in turn will distribute them among the heads of their sub-districts, to be kept until the week before the census day. Then they will be handed to the 40,000 or more enumerators, each of whom will distribute them in his special district, noting the delivery of each schedule in a book provided for the purpose.

On the 3rd of April all the schedules will be collected, with their many questions duly answered; if any assistance is required in filling up the form the enumerator's duty is to give it. But his work by no means ends here, although he will probably have well earned his money by this time. He must further "copy the entries in the schedules into his enumeration book and make an abstract of them in a form showing the total number of persons, males and females, the number of houses, and so on."

This task completed, the superintendent registrars dispatch their thousands of bundles of material to the Pimlico headquarters, where a largely augmented staff of clerks wrestles with them, gradually evolving from teeming chaos those wonderful tables of statistics which proclaim to the world all it wants to know about King George's subjects at home.

WHISTLE WAS RUSTY

An amusing though significant incident marked the resumption of work at a Sunderland shipyard. The steam whistle, usually so earsplitting, only expressed a faint-hearted call, so clogged with rust had it become through the months of enforced idleness.

A Spanish jury is to decide on the merits of a poet's sonnets. The same process applied to mine would likely end in a free fight and a foot race.

WHAT 1911 WILL BRING EUROPE

Madame de Thebes Prophesies Few Fine Days, a Late Spring and a Poor Harvest

Prophecy is as fascinating a pursuit in France as in England, and Madame de Thebes holds sway in Paris as astrologer-in-chief to the public. The prophetess was in gloomy mood when interviewed on the subject by a Paris journalist. The lust of power and wealth, the frenzied striving after merely material objects, will, she affirms, be increasingly evident throughout the year, and, indeed, until the fateful day of March 21, 1912, when the world will be freed from the triple domination of Mars, Mercury and Venus; 1911 will, therefore, in her opinion, represent the darkest hour which comes before the dawn. She promises few fine days, a spring that prolongs the winter, a poor harvest, and a cyclone of tropical intensity. Paris is to be the scene of two dramas, one due to a popular outbreak of passion and the other to the forces of nature, and for three days the City of Light is to be a City of Mourning. In politics, too, there may be expected an upheaval of the Parliamentary system.

So much for France. Turning her gaze abroad, this prophetess of disaster sees more trouble ahead. Britain, however, is comparatively fortunate. 1911 will be for us a year of "recueillement" preceding the taking of grave decisions. Ireland and India will both attract attention, but Madame de Thebes has no overwhelming tragedies in store for us such as she foresees for France.

Germany, according to this frank critic of nations, has developed too rapidly, and "grave events" this year will cast their shadow of coming ill. Austria has little to fear, and Italy, too, has a brilliant destiny—att he expense of France—while the Vatican will be unusually active. Spain will not see her internal troubles increase.

In short, this "crepuscular" year is to be one of lassitude and compromises of waiting for better and brighter times; but the influence of Venus will not be wholly maleficent.

LAW COURT "EXHIBITS"

Many Curious Articles Find Their Way to the Judge's Desk During Legal Actions

In one of the Chancery Courts at the Royal Courts of Justice a novel arrangement was recently carried out. In order that Mr. Justice Parker might thoroughly understand the working of wireless telegraphy during the hearing of an action concerning that marvellous invention which was being fought out before him, a complete and expensive installation of wireless telegraphy apparatus was fitted up in the court-room, which, for the time being, had the appearance of an electrician's laboratory.

A much more humorous exhibition once took place in the court presided over by Mr. Justice Warrington. Dangling from his lordship's desk and from other elevated places were scores of gorgeously-colored corsets—the subject-matter of a patent action. With an obvious poverty of intimate knowledge of such delicate articles, the opposing counsel argued none too convincingly. "Is the round top anything new?" asked one, pointing to a particularly fascinating creation in colored silk. "What is the bottom bit for?" queried the other, indicating a tab for the attachment of suspenders.

It is no uncommon thing to see a judge's table bearing an array of bottles that would do credit to a first-class saloon bar. Generally the action has reference not to the contents, but to the labels, but occasions have arisen when the adoption of right conclusions required the drawing of corks. Two or three bottles of "Old Tom" were one day handed up to a judge in order that he might closely inspect the labels.

A gun once contributed to the gaiety of a certain Chancery Court. One of the counsel took up this "exhibit," and began to explain how the ejectment worked. Suddenly, as he lowered the barrel at the hinge, blank astonishment, slightly mixed with alarm, overspread his face. The barrel contained a cartridge. "Why didn't you tell me?" he asked, in agitation. "It might have jumped out and hit me in the eye." Fortunately the cartridge was a blank one, and had been purposely inserted to show how the ejectment worked.

Golf has also many times been instrumental in providing litigation. In one case the main point in dispute was the bouncing properties of rival golf-balls, and counsel recalled their young days by performing bouncing feats on the floor of the court. One of the balls so manipulated was for business purposes called a "kite," and filled with the sporting instinct, as became the situation, the judge declared that the "kite seemed to win in a canter."

Turnips, penny-in-the-slot machines, old pewter, slabs of granite, pills, wheels of many descriptions, stewpans, "Brum" jewellery, have all figured as "exhibits." The late Mr. Justice Walton had part of a tree trunk before him one day; while on another occasion Mr. Justice Grantham peered from his seat on the bench over a barrier of bricks.

A SEA MYSTERY.

Showing That Hate Is Stronger Than the Elements.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 192, by American Press Association.]

I have been on the sea for forty years and have passed through many dangers. Thus I have had ample opportunity to observe how different people will act in the presence of death. Three times have I been carried from a stranded ship over boiling seas in a breeches buoy and twice gone down with the ship. While I can't say that I have become used to it, yet I have gained self control in the presence of death, and this has enabled me to take notice of the action of others similarly situated.

Up to a certain point a marine disaster is like a battle, many on board being sustained by an endeavor to avert the catastrophe. But once all effort has become useless those exposed to the merciless waters sink to a condition of despair. Then the timid woman may rise above the vigorous man, and a little child may show more fortitude than all. Once, and only once, in my long experience have I witnessed a case where the fear of death from the waves was swallowed by something stronger.

In 187— I was captain of a steamer fitted up for the passenger service and running between New York and Bermuda. One trip we made at a season when travel was at a minimum and carried very few passengers. The day we sailed the weather was fair. The few passengers were supposed to be on board, and the gangplank was about to be drawn in when a man was seen running through the dock house for the steamer. I was leaning over the rail at the time to see that all was clear for pulling out, and as soon as the newcomer was aboard I turned away. Then I saw a passenger standing on the deck pale as a ghost.

"Did he get aboard?" he asked.

"Yes," I replied and gave the signal to move. I had too much on my mind to give any thought to the incident, and it did not occur to me again till later in the voyage.

LET FALL HIS BLOWS WITH THE FURY OF A DEMON.

The next morning after breakfast as I was going up on to the bridge a man stopped me and said:

"Captain, since you have sailed one of your passengers has disappeared."

"How do you know that?" I asked.

"Never mind how I know it. I simply report the fact."

"Which one is missing?"

"His name is on the list as Elbert Carpenter."

"I will have a search made."

I called for the purser, went over the list with him and told him to find Elbert Carpenter. He made a search and reported that no such man was aboard the ship. A stateroom had been engaged under the name, but the key had not been called for. No one knew him, and it was not known whether he had come aboard or not. I sent for the passenger who had reported the matter and told him that it was probable the man had been left behind.

"No, he wasn't," said the informant. "I saw him on deck standing beside you when I came aboard."

"Are you the man who came late?" I asked.

"Yes. I was the last one to go up the gangplank."

Then I remembered the passenger who seemed to have been affected by the other's coming.

"What's your name?" I asked.

"Burton—Edgar Burton."

"Well, Mr. Burton, will you be good enough to tell me why you take so great an interest in this man Carpenter?"

Without reply he turned on his heel and left me. I asked the purser what it all meant, and he said he didn't know. A man had engaged passage under the name of Elbert Carpenter, but he had seen nothing of him. He had searched the ship and had not found him, but admitted that it was quite possible for a man to hide, especially by going away down into the depths of the hold. I took a look at all the passengers—there were but twelve of them—with a view to discovering if I could recognize the man who had stood beside me when we sailed. After examining them all I was sure he was not among them.

The affair was a mystery. The officers made it a topic of conversation while on and off duty, and the passengers in the smoking room talked and made bets about it. A pool was laid based on different solutions of the problem whether Carpenter had come aboard, was still aboard or had gone overboard. The only person from whom it seemed probable that information could be obtained was Mr. Burton, but when approached on the subject he shut himself up like a clam.

The more I thought about the missing man the more I recalled his appearance. He was rather long of body and short of leg, long neck and red hair, his face being sprinkled with freckles. Mr. Burton was in appearance his antipodes. His body was not long enough for his legs, which were like stilts. His complexion was dark, and his face wore a sinister expression. A scar on his left cheek was noticeable. His head was small, round as a bullet and set down on his high shoulders without any interval of neck.

I instructed the purser to continue to search for the missing passenger, for I had seen him, and he must have come aboard. Of course as soon as we made port his loss would be common property, the reporters would make a good deal out of it, and I preferred that we should be able to give an explanation. But the purser, I was told, poohpoohed both my evidence and that of Mr. Burton, which concurred, and made only a half hearted effort to find the man. His theory was that Carpenter had not come aboard.

But that occurred which put the mystery out of the heads of all of us. Before sailing the signal service had given a warning of a hurricane in the West Indies. I watched the barometer and one morning about four bells saw it drop like lead. It wasn't long after this that the wind began to send fragmentary clouds across the heavens, increasing hour after hour in violence till it was plain that we were in the teeth of the hurricane.

Our vessel was of average strength, but any ordinary ship having to stand the wind and waves of a hurricane is liable to give way. When a wave struck us it was as if several tons of rock had been hurled against us out of the mouth of a gigantic gun. The drops of water beating against my cheek struck like gravel stones. The only passenger on deck was Mr. Burton. I was on the bridge when I saw him come up the companionway, turn and look at the storm. It seemed to make no more impression on him than a twelve knot gale. Then, looking up at me, he sang out:

"This will drive him out."

At any other time the words would have seemed ludicrous, but now, knowing that if the hurricane did not blow itself out very soon our vessel would not be able to stand up against it, I had no interest in what the man meant. Indeed, soon after this I heard an ominous creaking and when the bow plunged down in between the monster waves and rose again I felt the ship bend at the waist. From that moment I knew she was liable to break in two.

It was half an hour after this that I left the bridge in charge of the first mate and went below to make an examination. By this time the passengers knew that the ship was about to go to pieces. Passing through the cabin, I found them all, except Burton, grouped while one of them was praying.

"Are we lost, captain?" asked all at once.

"I am going to see," I replied and hurried away. Passing down a companionway, I entered a lower deck. It was dark, but not so dark that I could not discern objects. And this is the sight I saw through the gloom.

There was the long bodied, short legged carpenter defending himself against the stilted Burton. Carpenter's weapon was a heavy furnace poker, Burton's a cutlass that he had stolen from among a lot of old arms that had been locked up in the ship for years. Burton made his thrusts and let fall his blows with the fury of a demon, while Carpenter, though on the defensive, had been driven to bay and was no less wildly vindictive. Both men were covered with blood.

The contrast between this picture and that of the huddled passengers I had just left occurring under the frightful conditions made my blood run cold. The ship and passengers were in my care. I was going to find out how great was the damage from the strain—whether, indeed, we had minutes or hours before being engulfed—and yet my steps were momentarily arrested by the sight of two human beings seeking to kill each other in the very presence of another, a more fearful, ending. Yet it was but a glance I gave them, then hurried on.

I found the strain great, but there were braces that bid fair to still hold the ship together for some time. Having noted this, I hurried back to the bridge by another route than that by which I had come, for I desired to shut off both the praying passengers and the fighting enemies. As soon as I reached the deck I noticed a lull in the wind and saw a yellow strip of light on the horizon in the direction from which the storm had come. I sent an officer to the passengers below to tell them the hurricane had passed and there was hope that the ship would not break in two.

It was not till the next morning that I considered the danger past. Then I went below to announce the good news to the passengers. All were in the cabin except Burton and Carpenter. As I left them I heard the voice of a passenger raised in thanksgiving for having been spared. I went on into the place where I had left the two men fighting and found them lying stone dead. What the elemental tempest had passed over the storm of hate had taken.

Their secret died with them. Nothing ever afterward came up to give a clew to the nature of the feud between them. We buried them at sea, sliding both over the ship's side together.

The man who boasts of his wisdom is sure to see the reflection of a fool every time he happens to look in the mirror.

Hypocrisy makes fewer people uncomfortable than brutal frankness does.

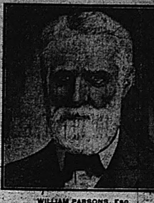
Seventy Nine Years Young

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Health Perfect



WILLIAM PARSONS, Esq.

OTTERVILLE, Ont.,
July 8th 1910.

"I am a seventy-nine year old man, and a great believer in, and user of "Fruit-a-tives". It is the only medicine I take, and I can truly say that "Fruit-a-tives" and exercise keep me in my present good health.

Stricture of the Bowels, was the complaint I suffered from and I found "Fruit-a-tives" to do me more good than any other remedy. My doctor advised me to stick to "Fruit-a-tives" and I have done so with the best results.

I have been in business here for a good many years and have been a resident of Otterville for over fifty years, so that if you think this little reference from me will serve to induce some others to try "Fruit-a-tives", I hereby authorize its publication.

WM. PARSON.

Obstinate Constipation, Paralysis of the Bowels and Stricture of the Bowels can never be cured by common purgatives, salts, senna, "liver pills" and oil have positively no action on the liver. They do not increase the secretion of Bile, which nature provides to move the bowels. They merely irritate the membranes lining the intestines. One may as well try to cure a headache by pounding one's head against a stone wall, as to try to cure Constipation with common purgatives. "Fruit-a-tives" is the only true liver stimulant. "Fruit-a-tives" is fruit juices and nerve tonics, and will always restore the liver to its proper condition and cure the most obstinate cases of Constipation.

(4) Verses 17-20—How long did Zimri reign? (See verses 15, 19, 20.)

(13) What were the influences, do you consider, which led Omri into such grievous sin?

(14) What is the root cause of all sin?

(15) Which is more prolific in leading people into sin, i. e., wanting to shine as well or better than our neighbors, or the love of power which comes from money, position, or ability, and why? (This question must be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(16) What did Omri and what do all like him get, who have bartered their goodness for position and power?

(17) Verses 29-30—Which king is more likely to be a good man, one who comes to the throne by heredity or by the vote of the people?

(18) What are the chances for the son of a bad but popular father, becoming a good man?

BIBLE QUESTION CLUB

GETTING READY FOR THE START.

We may know of many who are all in trim for the start of the Bible contest, which commences next week. There are, however, many from whom we have not yet heard, and it is time they got into line. The Intelligencer is a prime necessity, and unless you order at once you may be left without a paper from which to cut the coupon certifying that the necessary reading has been done. There is only one coupon in a paper so that a copy is essential for every competitor. If you have not already ordered this paper, you had better do so, and if you have what better blessing could you confer upon some friend than by inducing him or her to take up this easy Bible study course and send the Intelligencer during the term it covers? Think about this and do it now. We take this opportunity of thanking the large number who have spoken words of appreciation for giving the people of Belleville the opportunity of reading these "Suggestive Questions," and for the course of Bible study as previously outlined. A revival of Bible study promoted by the secular press is causing all good people to rejoice.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"I guess they're happy with me," he said. "I will see them through their present trouble."

Childlike, they had eyes and ears only for the prevalent excitement. At last Elsie asked him:

"Where's mamma? You said she was sick. But the men haven't carried her off the ship, an' she wasn't in the boat."

"Don't you worry, Elsie," he said. "I'm going to take you to a big house where you will find everything fixed just right."

His uncle and Mrs. Vansittart approached. The lady's face was no longer hidden.

"What are you going to do with those children?" she inquired.

"There's none here to claim 'them," he said. "I can't let them leave me in that haphazard way."

"Let me help you. It is a woman's privilege."

She stooped towards the tiny mites.

"You dear little babes," she said softly. "I can take mother's place for a time."

They knew her quite well, of course, and she seemed to be so much kinder and nicer now in her smart clothes than she was in the crowded disorder of the bedroom.

Mamie looked at Elsie, and the self-reliant Elsie said valiantly:

"Mamie 'n' me 'll be glad, if Mr. Pyne comes too."

Mr. Traill, who had never before seen tears in Mrs. Vansittart's eyes, found a ready excuse for her womanly sympathy.

"It seems to me," he said genially, "we are all of one mind. Come this way, Etta. And mind you stick close to us, Charlie, or the hall porter will throw you out if you attempt to enter the hotel in that costume."

He rattled on cheerfully, telling them how clothiers and milliners, and all the storekeepers in the town if they were needed, would wait on them at the hotel.

"In a couple of hours," he said, "you both can obtain sufficient things to render you presentable for a day or two. Don't forget we dine at eight. We ought to be a jolly party. I have asked Stanhope and his mother and those two girls to join us."

"Oh," cried Mrs. Vansittart faintly, "you must excuse me. I—"

"Now, Etta, my dear, you will not desert us to-night. Why, it seemed to me to be the only way in which we could all come together at once. I am only too sorry that Mr. Brand cannot be present. Surely he might have been spared from further duty at the lighthouse after what he has endured."

"They offered to relieve him at once, but he declined," said Pyne.

He looked out of the window of the carriage in which they were driving to the hotel. Constance had told him of the dinner arrangement, but he wished to ascertain if the definite absence of the lighthouse-keeper would tend to reassure Mrs. Vansittart.

He was not mistaken. She did not reply at once. When she spoke it was with a sigh of relief.

"I will not be very entertaining, I fear, but the young people will have plenty to tell you."

"For goodness' sake, Etta, don't class yourself among the old fogies,' cried Mr. Traill. "Look at me, fifty five and lively as a grasshopper."

"Please, is Mamie 'n' me 'vited, too?" whispered Elsie to Pyne.

"You two chicks will be curled up among the feathers at eight o'clock," he told her. "Don't you go and worry about any dinner-parties. The sooner you go to sleep, the quicker you'll wake up in the morning, and then we're going out to hunt—for what, do you think?"

"Candies," said Mamie.

"Toys," cried Elsie, going one better.

"We're just going to find two of the loveliest and frilliest and pinkiest-cheeked dolls you ever saw. They'll have blue eyes as big as yours, Elsie, and their lips will be as red and round as yours, Mamie. They'll talk and say—and say all sorts of things when you pinch their little waists. So you two hurry up after you've had your supper, say your prayers and close your eyes, and when you open them you'll be able to yell for me to find that doll-store mighty sharp."

"Say, Charlie," cried his uncle, "I never heard you reel off a screw like that before. Now, if I didn't know you were a confirmed young bachelor, I would begin to have suspicions. Anyhow, here's the hotel."

Two hours later, when uncle and nephew met in the private sitting-room where busy waiters were making preparations for dinner, Traill drew the younger man to the privacy of a window recess.

"Charlie," he confided, "affairs are in a tangle. Do you realize that my marriage was fixed for to-day?"

"That's so," was the laconic answer.

"Of course the wedding was postponed by fate, and, to add to my perplexities, there is a new attitude on Mrs. Vansittart's part. It puzzles me. We have been friends for some years, as you know. It seemed to be a perfectly natural outcome of our mutual liking for each other that we should agree to pass our declining years together. She is a very beautiful and accomplished woman, but she makes no secret of her age, and the match was a suitable one in every respect."

"You can see as far through a stone wall as most people."

Pyne knew that his uncle's sharp eyes were regarding him steadily, but he continued to gaze into the street.

There was a moment's hesitation before Mr. Traill growled:

"You young dog, you have seen it, too. Mrs. Vansittart avoids me. Something has happened. She has changed her mind. Do you think she has heard about Edith?"

"Edith! Oh, of course—Enid must be christened afresh. No; that isn't it. It would not be fair to you to say that I think you are mistaken. But, from what I know of the lady, I feel sure she will meet you fairly when the time comes."

"Ah, you agree with me, then?"

"In admitting a doubt—in advising the delay you have already suggested—yes."

"She told you what I had written?"

"More than that, she asked me if I was aware of its explanation."

"And you said?"

"Exactly what I said to you. You are both sensible people. I can hardly imagine that any misunderstanding can exist after an hour's talk."

Mr. Traill looked at his watch. A carriage stopped at the hotel.

Lady Margaret was a well-preserved woman of aristocratic pose. But her serenity was disturbed. Although the land was ringing with the fame of her son's exploit, and her mother's heart was throbbing with pride, there had been tearful hours of vigil for her. Not without a struggle had she abandoned her hope that he would make a well-endowed match.

When Constance and Enid arrived she was very stately and dignified, scrutinizing, with all a mother's incredulity, the girl who had caused her to capitulate.

But Enid scored a prompt success. She swept aside the almost unconscious reserve with which Jack's mother greeted her.

"You knew," she murmured wistfully. "We did not. They would not tell us. How you must have suffered until the news came that he had escaped."

"My dear," she whispered, "I am beginning to understand why Jack loves you. He is my only son, but you are worthy of him."

Mrs. Vansittart's appearance created a timely diversion. She had obtained a black lace dress. It accentuated the settled pallor of her face, but she was perfectly self-possessed, and uttered a nice womanly compliment to the two girls, who wore white demi-toilette cotsumes.

"You look delightful," she said "When all is said and done, we women should never despise our wardrobe. That marvelous lighthouse had one grave defect in my eyes. It was dreadfully callous to feminine requirements."

Here was a woman rejuvenated, restored to her natural surroundings. They accounted for the subtle change in her by the fact that they had seen her hitherto under unfavorable conditions. Even Pyne, not wholly pleased with her in the past, found his critical judgment yielding when she apologised sweetly to Lady Margaret for her tardiness.

"There were two little children saved from the wreck. Poor little mites, how they revelled in a hot bath! I could not leave them until they were asleep."

"I needed two hot baths," said Pyne. "No. 1 dug me out of the shell, and No. 2 helped me to recognize myself."

During dinner there was much to tell and to hear. Mrs. Vansittart said little, save to interpose a word now and then when Constance or Enid would have skimmed too lightly the record of their own services.

They did not hurry over the meal. All were in the best possible spirits, and the miseries of the Gulf Rock might never have existed for this lively company were it not that four among them bore clear tokens of the deprivations they had endured.

A waiter interrupted their joyous chatter at its highest. He bent over Mr. Traill and discreetly conveyed some communication.

"I am delighted," cried the millionaire heartily. "Show him in at once."

He rose from his chair to do honor to an unexpected guest.

"You will all be pleased to hear," he explained, "that Mr. Brand is ashore, and has come to see us."

Mrs. Vansittart stifled the cry on her lips. The slight color which had crept into her pale cheeks yielded to the deathly hue. It chanced that the others were looking expectantly towards the door and did not notice her.

Brand entered. In acknowledging Mr. Traill's cordial welcome he smilingly explained his presence.

"My superiors sent me emphatic orders to clear out," he said, "so I had no option but to obey. I conveyed Mr. Emmett to suitable quarters and hastened home, but found that the girls were playing truant. My housekeeper insisted that I should eat, else she would not be satisfied that I still lived, but I came here as quickly as possible."

At that instant his glance, traveling from one to another of those present, fell on Mrs. Vansittart.

He stood as one petrified. The kindly words of his host, the outspoken glee of the girls at his appearance, died away in his ears in hollow echoes. His eyes, frowning beneath wrinkled brows, seem to ask if he were not the victim of some unnerving hallucination. They were fixed on Mrs. Vansittart's face with an all-absorbing intensity, and his set lips and clenched hands showed how utterly irresistible was the knowledge that, indeed, he was not deceived—that he was gazing at a living, breathing personality, and not at some phantom product of a surcharged brain.

She, too, yielding before the suddenness of an ordeal she had striven to avoid, betrayed by her laboring bosom that she was under the spell of some excitement of overwhelming power.

She managed to gain her feet. The consciousness that Constance, Enid, Lady Margaret even, were looking at her and at Brand with amazed anxiety, served to strengthen her for a supreme effort.

"Mr. Stephen Brand—and I—are old acquaintances," she gasped. "He may misunderstand — my presence here—to-night. Indeed—in this instance—I am not to blame. I could not—help myself. I am always—trying to explain—but somehow—I never succeed. Oh!"

With an agonized sigh she swayed listlessly and would have falen had not Pyne caught her.

But she was desperately determined not to faint—there. This was her world, the world of society. She would not yield in its presence.

Her eyes wandered vaguely, helplessly, from the face of the man towards the others. Constance had hastened to her assistance, and the knewledge that this was so seemed to stimulate her to a higher degree. With fine courage she grasped the back of a chair and summoned a wan smile to her aid.

"You will forgive me—if I leave you," she murmured. "I am so tired—so very tired."

She walked resolutely towards the door. Brand drew aside that she might pass. He looked at her no more. His wondering daughter saw that big drops of perspiration stood on his forehead.

Mr. Traill, no less astonished than the rest offered to conduct Mrs. Vansittart to her room.

"No," she said, "I will go alone. I am used to it now, after so many years."

There was a ring of heartfelt bitterness in her voice which appealed to more than one of the silent listeners.

As the door closed behind her, Brand seemed to recover his senses.

"I must ask your pardon, Mr. Traill," he said, quietly. "I assume that the lady who has just left us did not expect to see me here to-night. It would be idle to deny that the meeting was a shock to both of us. It revived painful memories."

Mr. Traill, scarce knowing what he said, so taken aback was he, exclaimed hastily:

"Mrs. Vansittart claimed you as an old acquaintance. The odd thing is that you, at any rate, did not discover that fact earlier."

The lighthouse-keeper looked round the table. He saw pain in many eyes, but in Pyne's steady gaze there was encouragement.

"Mrs. Vansittart!" he said slowly. "Is that her name? I did not know. How should I, the recluse, hear of her! And in your first message to the rock you called her Etta. When I knew her her name was Nanette, for the lady who calls herself Mrs. Vansittart was my wife, is yet for aught I know to the contrary."

"Father!" Constance clung to him in utmost agitation. "Do you mean that she is my mother?"

"Yes, dear one, she is. But let us go now. I fear my home-coming has brought misery in its train. I am sorry indeed. It was wholly unexpected. Poor Nanette! She ever deceived herself. I suppose she hoped to avoid me, as if fate forgot the tears in the comedy of life."

"Can I not go to her?" asked Constance white-faced and trembling.

"No, my child, you cannot. Has she claimed you? She cast you off once. I might have forgiven her many things—never that. Come, Enid! What need for your tears? We faced worse troubles together three days ago, and you, at any rate, can look forward to happiness. Good-by, Lady Margaret, and you, too, Mr. Traill. I will see you to-morrow, I hope. Forgive me for my unconscious share in this night's suffering."

CHAPTER XVII.

MRS. VANSITTART GOES HOME

Stephen Brand and the two girls passed silently down the broad stairs of the hotel unaccompanied by any of the others. There was nothing incomprehensible in this, nor any savor of discourtesy.

In the first place, Mr. Traill was so profoundly shocked by the lighthouse-keeper's revelation that he collapsed into a chair and remained there, bowed and wordless, for many minutes. Both Pyne and Stanhope did move towards the door, but Enid, watchful, self-sacrificing, eager to save those she loved from further pain, telegraphed an emphatic order to Stanhope to remain where he was, and Pyne murmured to him:

The person who exhibited the clearest signs of distress was Lady Margaret. Her position was one of extraordinary difficulty. Three of the actors in the breathless scene which had been sprung on her with the suddenness of an explosion were absolute strangers in her life before that evening.

Brand she knew, indeed, but only by sight. She had met Constance and Enid occasionally, at arm's length, so to speak, regarding them truly as dangerous young persons where marriageable sons were concerned. Enid had justified her suspicions, and her ladyship had yielded so far as to give her approval to an engagement she could not prevent.

Circumstances had conspired to force her hand. Stanhope, being an outspoken young man, had made no secret of his desperate resolve to rescue Enid, so the newspapers supplied the remainder of the romance, and even Lady Margaret herself had contributed to it under the magnetic influence of the hour.

It was one thing, however, to be thrilled with the adventures of the rock-bound people, but quite another to figure prominently in connection with a social scandal of the first magnitude. She knew Penzance too well to hope that the incident would sink into oblivion. Obviously, the matter could not rest in its present stage. She must expect disagreeable disclosures, significant head-shakings of those who knew little and wanted to know more. All the tea-table artillery of a small town would be focused on her defensive position were she loyal to the girl whom her son had chosen as his helpmate.

This same son, too, after he had recovered from the amazement of Mrs. Vansittart's dramatic departure and Brand's admission, betrayed a composure that was distinctly irritating.

An Encouraging Message

I have a message of hope and good cheer, of encouragement and inspiration to every suffering woman. I have endured the torture due to female troubles and the consequent despondency and mental agony almost to the point of despair, and I have been restored from this condition to a state of vigorous health, and to the happy, exhilarating frame of mind which accompanies physical well being. This change has been brought about wholly by the use of ORANGE LILY.

In addition I have had the privilege and pleasure of inducing multitudes of other suffering women to give ORANGE LILY a trial, and have received thousands of enthusiastic acknowledgments of the blessings it has brought to them. The following is a sample:

Truro, N. S., April 5, 1909.

Dear Mrs. Currah,—Your very kind letter was received yesterday. In reply to your question about my health, I am thankful to say that I am very well. As I have never given you a statement of my case you may be interested in it.

For several years I have suffered untold agony. This suffering was continuous, but I would have violent attacks every few weeks, each attack lasting several days. The first Sunday in November, I felt the pain increasing and so did not go to prayers. The rest of the family did go, and soon after the forcing down pains seized me and I had to remain on the floor until their return. I was in great pain all night and was very sick for a whole week.

Then Mrs. L. came to see me and told me of your wonderful medicine. I got my husband to send for it right away, as I was too sick to write myself. (My doctor could do nothing for me.) I have used 5 boxes of ORANGE LILY, have had three months of good rest, and am now well, never better in my life. I have not had the old pains since. I often ask my husband if it is myself that is going around and doing my own work. I can scarcely believe it. It brings tears of joy to my eyes. I could shout it to all the world. I cannot speak enough in its praise.

Your friend, MRS. E. H. F.

Receiving, as I do, dozens of such reports each day, I feel impelled to make known to my suffering sisters the merits of ORANGE LILY. It differs from other so-called remedies in that it is not taken internally. It is a strictly local treatment, and is applied directly to the affected organs. Its curative elements are absorbed into the congested tissues, expelling the stagnant foreign matter which has been irritating the membrane and oppressing the nerves, and a growing feeling of physical and mental relief is noticeable almost from the start. It is a positive, scientific remedy, and even if you use no more than the Free Trial treatment you will be very materially benefited.

FREE TRIAL OFFER

I want every reader of this, who suffers in any way from painful monthly periods, irregularities, leucorrhoea, inflammation or congestion of the womb, pains in the back, etc., to send me their addresses, and I will forward at once, without charge, 10 days' treatment. If your case is not far advanced it may entirely cure you, and in any event it will do you much good. I am so earnest in making this statement, and so positive that it is true, that I trust every sufferer who reads this notice will take advantage of my offer and get cured at home without a doctor's bill. Address, enclosing 3 stamps, MRS. FRANCES E. CURRAH, Windsor, Ont.

An Impromptu Christmas

And the True Christmas Feeling It Prompted

By EDWARD PIERCE

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The blizzard raced across the foothills and screamed down the canyons, obliterating all trails that led to the Double Star ranch. It filled the air with smothering, flying flakes and plastered the sides of the bunk house with a thick white covering. The windows of the ranch house a hundred yards distant were oblongs of light that diffused a sickly yellow glow into the flying snow.

Ducie Case tossed another log on the blazing hearth and surveyed the silent crowd with growing disdain. At last he could no longer control himself and broke forth into violent speech:

"Say, you mum mouthed dummies, you long faced, solemn eyed, good-for-nothing cayuses, do you know this is Christmas eve?"

The moody circle about the fire straightened as by one accord and looked at the speaker with the first sign of interest that had been betrayed since the silent supper had ended.

"Do you know this is Christmas eve?" repeated Mr. Case impressively as he brought a pipe from his pocket and proceeded to clean it with the nervous energy that characterized his every movement.

"Of course we know it," growled Miller from his corner. "We didn't get any mail today—haven't had any for a week! Excuse—me—Christmas, coming! Bah!"

"You've got a grouch, Miller. You're always kicking about the mail, and I've never seen you get any letters yet—not even one of them picture postal cards that Frankie here gets so many of."

Ducie Case bustled out of his chair and noisily mounted the heavy table, where he looked down on his companions with a benevolent smile.

"Tonight's Christmas eve, boys, and I'm going to confess it's the onlikeliest Christmas eve I ever spent.

"Every one of you is downright homesick. That's what's the matter with you. I expect you're homesick every time Christmas comes around. If you can't get home to your folks and find an old fashioned Christmas—why, I say let's have Christmas right her in the Double Star bunk house. All in favor say 'eye.'"

"Aye!" came forth a mighty chorus from seven throats.

"Good! Now, gentlemen, there ain't any tree within three miles of the ranch except the maples at the big house, and they're too large. Can we have a Christmas tree?" he asked skeptically.

"Nix!" was the laconic reply.

"Well, then, you've all got socks. Hang 'em up here along by the chimney. We might as well do this Santy Claus business up nice and brown."

The men scattered, laughing, to their several bunks to search their effects for clean socks. When they returned Mr. Case was ready with hammer and nails to fasten them to the long shelf. The first to go up was his own, a huge blue woolen affair with a startling void presented by the sagging top.

"Now, what you going to put in 'em?" demanded Miller as he witnessed the hammering of the last nail into his own sock.

"Now, that's up to the rest of you in a way," drawled Mr. Case indifferently. "I've started this thing and got the ball rolling nicely. All you chaps has got to do is to find something to put in those socks. Seems as if you might find something to give each other just to remember the day and make things pleasant."

"Who feels like being very pleasant with no mail for a week and no prospect of any?" complained Frankie, rather peevishly. "I thought Christmas eve was the time for good things to eat and drink. I haven't seen the chink handing out any goodies yet."

"You go along and work that Christmas spirit business I was telling you about," commanded Mr. Case. "Sam Huh and me will take care of the eating end. Just watch my smoke!"

He disappeared behind the plank door that shut off the kitchen quarters from the living room, and they heard the sound of his strident voice mingled with the staccato objections of the Chinese cook.

Storrs stepped forward, a slight flush on his handsome face, and turned toward his companions. "I'm rather ashamed, boys, that Ducie had to remind us that it was the night before Christmas. It's certainly a dull time, and I believe we ought to do all we can to make it pleasant, even if the mail doesn't come at all. Suppose we make the best kind of a Christmas we can out of what we've got."

"Let's," agreed Miller boyishly. "Suppose we begin with Ducie's meal sack here. He must expect an autermobile in that. What do you say?"

"Let's give him one," retorted Storrs cheerfully. "I saw one a minute ago." He reached for a magazine and drew a knife from his pocket. He turned to the advertising section and cut from it the picture of a large touring car. "What's the matter with that?" he crowed softly as he slipped it in Ducie's stocking.

"I got a couple of handkerchiefs that I've never used," said Frankie suddenly. "I'll give one to Ducie and one to somebody else. Let's get busy, boys."

They got busy and searched their trunks and their pockets for treasures that might go to fill a comrade's stocking. Pocketknives, handkerchiefs, a watch chain, a key ring, neck handkerchiefs, a pair of spurs, tobacco, cigars, a patent pencil, matchboxes—all changed hands deftly from pockets to one or another of the yawning stockings. When the little store of articles gave out they had recourse to the magazine and lavished all sorts of lithographed gifts upon each other.

They all entered into the spirit of the thing with an abandonment that was pathetic when one considered the barrenness of the ground upon which they tried to graft a Christmas. Whatever else the occasion lacked, the Yuletide spirit was there.

When Ducie Case emerged from the kitchen with the thoroughly cowed Sam Huh in his train they were laden with plates of red apples and yellow oranges, plates of crisp cakes fresh from their paper boxes and a large dish of candy, which Ducie placed in the middle of the table.

"Bring in the coffee, Sam, when I holler," said Ducie ceremoniously. Then he turned to the grinning cowpunchers surrounding the fire. "Let's see what Santy Claus has got for us, eh, boys?"

"You first, Ducie!" they insisted, and they watched him delightedly as he brought forth from the stocking a paper of his favorite tobacco, which Storrs also carried, and a silver watch chain.

"That was a great idea of mine," chuckled Ducie after he had identified the givers and thanked them warmly. "I have a feeling that this here is to be a kind of a merry Christmas, even if the mail don't get in."

After that there was no end to the fun. Each man found several surprising gifts in his stockings, and there was much merriment in identifying the givers and more interchange of good feeling than the Double Star had known in some time.

Presently Sam Huh brought in a pot of steaming coffee, and they gathered about the board and ate of the refreshments and toasted Mr. Ducie in the stimulating black liquid with much flattery.

When the meal was concluded Raymond Storrs sang a song in his fine tenor voice. It was a Christmas carol, one that they all knew, and they joined in the chorus with a vim. Frankie delivered an amusing monologue, and the taciturn Miller gave an absurdly funny imitation of a fashionable lady buying a hat. There were other songs and recitations and the quaffing of a weirdly constructed bowl of punch that Sam Huh had laboriously put together from several cookbooks and unlimited advice from the different members of the party.

"What's the matter with this Christmas?" demanded Frankie excitedly as 11 o'clock was struck on the tall clock in the corner.

"It's all right! It's been a bully one! Couldn't be better! Up to us to thank Ducie!" were some of the comments on the occasion.

There was the sound of hoofs pounding in the snow outside and a loud shout. Every man was on his feet with interested faces.

They crowded about the door as Mr. West came over from the big house to open the mail bag. It had stopped snowing, and the stars were blazing in a cold, clear, dark sky.

"Letter for you, and you, and you," rattled Mr. West as he tossed letters here and there among his employees. They grasped them eagerly and then tucked them away for private perusal. It happened that each one received at least one letter, and Raymond Storrs received several with a San Francisco postmark, as well as a wooden case that was dumped on the floor ere the letter carrier drove away.

Storrs ripped off the cover while they hung breathlessly over him. From numerous careful wrappings he drew forth a large phonograph with a morning glory horn and a collection of wax music rolls. Deftly Storrs fitted the parts together and placed the machine on the table and wound it up. There was a cylinder in the machine, as if his sweetheart, who had sent it, had left it there that he might hear the continuation of a melody she had been singing.

There was a low, buzzing sound, and then there came forth from that instrument of wood and metal a sweet soprano voice singing with a delicate violin accompaniment:

"Oh, holy night, peaceful night."

As the hymn rang out every hat was whipped off and the little group stood bareheaded in the open doorway looking out at the same brilliant stars that had shone down over Bethlehem that long ago holy night when the first Christmas was sung over one who brought peace and good will into the world.

Afterward, as they followed Mr. West across the yard toward the big house where he said a feast awaited them, Frankie nudged Ducie Case with a razor-like elbow.

"I learned one thing tonight," admitted Frankie graciously, "and that was you can have Christmas cheer most anywhere, provided you've got the ingredients in your heart—eh?"

Ducie nodded. "Everybody has got the ingredients to make a happy Christmas in their hearts, only they don't stir 'em together to make 'em work properly. Haven't they, Norman?" He shot this question at the tall young man walking beside him with radiant face upturned to the stars.

Storrs pressed the phonograph that had registered the singing voice of his sweetheart close under his arm and smiled contentedly.

"You bet!" he cried emphatically.

Farm and Garden

RICE IN ARKANSAS.

Coming to Be One of the Most Important of Southern Cereals.

Of all the records of wonderful progress made in the south in the last two decades, says a writer in Kimball's Dairy Farmer, none is more interesting or more indicative of growth along right lines than that of successful development in the ricefields of eastern Arkansas.

Along the cotton belt route in the Grand prairie and lesser contiguous prairies of Arkansas today are the visible evidences of a new prosperity more marvelous and more substantial than any one who knew conditions there six years ago could have dreamed of as being possible. This has been achieved neither by miracle nor mere chance. It has been brought about by the intelligent use and employment of the ordinary means at hand. No one has ever charged that in the distribution of so called natural advantages Arkansas was accorded more than her share. Many have voiced the belief that in the general allotment Arkansas was forgotten. In the light of recent developments in that state, as elsewhere, it may not be too early to predict that the time is coming when men will realize that in their estimate of physical or natural assets they have often made their inventories on a false hypothesis.

Rice, as is well known, cannot be grown without an abundant water supply. Farmers who have attempted to raise it have started out with this knowledge and in facing the problem squarely have solved it. A rice farm equipped with wells with a sufficient flow to flood the ricefields becomes immediately a high class corn, truck, fruit and stock farm. Think what it means to have under absolute control an unceasing supply of pure water. Trenches carry it by gravitation to any portion of the land. With it a corn crop is helped over a temporary drought. An occasional wetting insures a splendid return from the truck patch, and with water always at hand cows almost double the quantity and more than double the quality of milk produced.

THRASHING RICE.

But all these are really secondary considerations with the Arkansas rice farmer. He has his eye on the main chance. It is to raise rice, which is coming to be one of the most important of southern cereals.

Save the Chunks.

You can find many chunks of wood about the farm. Save them all for the stove. Big knots can be used in the "chunk" stove, and how they will make it laugh on a cold, stormy day next winter! Even pieces that are a little decayed will burn nicely if they are well dried. Save them all.

The Hum of the Hive.

Bees cannot carry on their wonderful work without water. If they have not access to natural sources in the vicinity of the apiary, water should be given to them.

A thousand colonies of bees are used annually in the cucumber greenhouses of Massachusetts to carry fertilizing pollen. There are 2,100 persons in the state who keep bees.

Taking off honey is easy and simple with the right equipment, which includes inexpensive tools—a bee smoker, bee veil, chisel or knife for a hive tool or pry and perhaps bee gloves or wristlets.

Bees like to work better, probably, than any other living thing. They are perfectly willing to work for nothing, board themselves and pay handsomely for the privilege of occupying an old box. There is room for a few hives of bees on every farm. Fruit, poultry and bees make a splendid combination when properly mixed.—Farm Press.

"Let us buy a 50-cent bottle of Psychine from your druggist and give it to you, free, to prove its great value."

That 50-cent bottle of Psychine will tell you more powerfully than mere words can how tremendously beneficial Psychine will be for you.

It will give you an unmistakable indication of its wonderful power to renew the bodily vitality, to strengthen the phagocytes (the white corpuscles), the policemen or scavengers of the body.

* * *

The Surgical Department of the Japanese Army, in the Japo-Russian war, first drew the attention of the scientific world to the function of the white corpuscles of the blood or phagocytes.

Foreign medical men were astounded to see Japanese soldiers with wounds that had not been cleansed or dressed for days, that were apparently dirty, ill-kept, and altogether unsanitary.

Yet these dirty wounds healed marvellously; no army the world had ever known had such a wonderful record for the recovery of their wounded as the Japanese army.

And all because the Japanese knew how to let the white corpuscles cure.

* * *

There are two kinds of corpuscles in your blood, you know, red and white.

The red carry nutrition, the white are the policemen or scavengers of the body.

Whenever a disease germ enters the body these white corpuscles attack and literally eat it.

A wound that attracts disease germs from the air is cleansed and healed by billions of phagocytes, or white corpuscles, devouring these unwelcome disease germs.

Any disease can be cured by these white corpuscles if they be in sufficient number or strong enough to attack and devour the germs that cause the disease.

If they are not in sufficient numbers or strength, then the disease germs eat them and disease claims the body.

That's the cause of every disease to which humanity is heir.

* * *

For centuries the cure of disease has been by means of herbs—nature's remedies.

It is only within recent times that we have come to know how these herbs act.

Now scientists tell us they increase the strength and numbers of the white corpuscles or phagocytes.

In Psychine we have some of the most healing and beneficial herbs in the world, herbs that increase and strengthen the white corpuscles.

From Arabia comes one herb, from South America another, China and Japan produce a third, while the jungle of India yields a fourth.

All these herbs are recognized by the medical profession as being the most beneficial to health that they know.

That's why Psychine, in the third of a century it has been made, has cured hundreds of thousands of people who suffered from the following diseases:

La Grippe
Bronchitis
Hemorrhages
Sore Throat
Anaemia
Female Weakness
Indigestion
Poor Appetite
Chills and Fevers
Sleeplessness and Nervous Troubles
Aftereffects of Pleurisy, Pneumonia and La Grippe.

[illegible]
Bronchial Coughs
Weak Lungs
Weak Voice
[illegible]
Early Decline
Catarrhal Affections
Catarrh of Stomach
Night Sweats
Obstinate Coughs
Laryngitis and Dyspepsia

That's why we believe it will be beneficial to you.

Now we don't ask you to take our word for the tremendously beneficial effect of Psychine. Fill out the coupon below, mail it to us, and we'll give you an order on your druggist (for which we pay him the regular retail price) for a 50-cent bottle of Psychine to be given you free of cost.

We will undoubtedly buy and distribute in this manner, hundreds of thousands of these 50-cent bottles of Psychine.

And we do that to show our entire confidence in this wonderful preparation.

A confidence that has been based on our 30 years' experience with this splendid preparation with a full knowledge of the hundreds of thousands of cures it has made.

Chocolats des Aristocrates
Neilson's Toronto
The Chocolates That Are Different
Cherries in Maraschino Chocolate Dipped

HERE is something probably that you did not know about Chocolates. The most expensive part of them is the chocolate coating itself. The thinner the chocolate coating, the less expense to the makers, and naturally the less enjoyment to you.

Most makers thin the chocolate with some substitute, so that the cream or hard centers will take up only a very thin jacket of chocolate when dipped.

You will find every piece of Neilson's Confectionery has a thick, heavy coating of the richest, most delicious chocolate—in its absolute purity—you ever tasted.

The centers are coated individually and special care is taken to have the chocolate of just the correct proportion to give that delicate, original flavor so quickly recognized by the connoisseur.

You get something worth eating—something different—something you will always remember with pleasure—when you eat Neilson's Chocolates.

"Chocolats des Aristocrates"—"Cherries in Maraschino"—and "Hard Centers" are only three of the different chocolates that Neilson's make.

30 other kinds, in different packages—and each the best of its kinds.

Yearning.

I want to be a granger—
So ran an ancient ditty
By one who was a stranger
To aught except the city,
Who had a peck of notions
That farmers' ways consisted
In going through the motions
And coming home fat fisted.

He thought of gayly hoeing
Tomatoes tall and waving,
Of singing songs and mowing
The lawn that needed shaving,
Of getting bees in training
To fill his pail with honey
And from their efforts gaining
A load of easy money.

For him the plot would thicken
Until it was a winner
If he could raise a chicken
Already cooked for dinner
And pick his bread and butter
On little bushes cunning,
So visitors would mutter,
"My, isn't it just stunning?"

Then ho for scenes exciting,
Out where the grass is waving,
Where plenty comes a-kiting
And properly behaving!
That was the way he put it
When by the thought enchanted,
But back he had to foot it
Before the crops were planted.

ALZINA'S TREE

The Momentous Part It Played at Christmas

By ELLEN P. BANKHEAD

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

The red farmhouse was set in a white expanse of snow. The drooping elms protected the roof with wide-spread arms clothed in ermine, and where the crisp wind had blown away the covering the limbs were darkly sketched against the bright blue sky. A thin spiral of smoke drifted up from the big chimney and shimmered away into nothingness.

Close to the south bow window grew the sturdy graceful cedar that had been planted when Miss Alzina was born.

Alzina Tweed lived alone with her third cousin, the Widow Lasbury, who had no home of her own. Mrs. Lasbury was a very fat woman who ate a great deal and talked incessantly. Sometimes Alzina would take her sewing up to the chilly seclusion of her own bedroom in order to escape the tintinnabulation of her cousin's tongue.

The day before Christmas they sat before the sitting room fire sewing industriously. Alzina was knitting a pair of red mittens for the boy who brought the milk, while Mrs. Lasbury was addressing Christmas cards with a pen dipped in violet ink.

Suddenly the widow lifted her head and looked critically at her younger cousin. Alzina was fair and slender, and she had passed her thirty-fifth year, but her skin was fresh and unlined, and her gray eyes were clear and innocent as a child's. She wore a plain gray dress, and her brown hair was drawn smoothly back from her low white forehead.

"Alzina," said Mrs. Lasbury ponderously, "I never thought you set much store by Christmas."

The other looked up inquisingly. "I don't know as I ever did, Eliza—not since I was a little thing. You see, we had lots of trouble when I was young. It seemed as if there was another empty chair every Christmas till they were all gone. Since then it's been a lonesome season."

Mrs. Lasbury coughed deprecatingly. "Seeing as you don't set much store by Christmas, I knew you wouldn't mind if I went over to Mrs. Beebe's to spend the day. She was second cousin to my husband, you know."

"Very well," said Alzina quietly, and her voice did not tremble, although a mist came into her gray eyes.

"'Tisn't as if you made much of the day. As I recollect, Christmas is like most other days here," complained the widow in self extenuation. "Over to Beebe's they have a Christmas tree and a turkey and lots of going ons. Maybe you'd like to go along with me, though you mightn't enjoy it, not knowing anybody over there."

Alzina smiled at the grudging invitation, and a dimple came into one cheek. "No, thank you, Eliza. I may as well spend the day as usual; you know we live so far away from neighbors we have got out of the habit of participating in their good times. I may walk over to church in the morning. I am sorry you've had such dull holidays here. If I'd only known how you felt we could have had a turkey and all sorts of good things to eat—only, Eliza, if you'll remember, you've spent every Christmas with Mrs. Beebe. I've always been alone."

"I don't remember," remarked Mrs. Lasbury vaguely, blotting the last card and putting the cork in the ink bottle. "I guess I may as well be getting ready, Alzina. Hiram's coming over for me at 5 o'clock, and I've got to get together the little things I've been making for the folks—and that reminds me I've got something for you too." She fumbled through the Christmas cards on the table and extended toward her cousin a gorgeously colored Christmas greeting. "With a Merry Christmas, from Cousin Eliza," was written across the bottom.

"Thank you, Eliza," said Alzina, with a sudden choking in her throat. "It is very good of you to think of me."

"Not at all, Alzina," returned the widow graciously. "I think of you very often. Now, see here, what I've been making for the folks. You see, they'll expect me to remember them, seeing as I spend every Christmas with them. I bought this waist pattern for Sarah, and I made this muffler for Hiram. Neat, ain't it? Esther's been wanting a china cup of her own to drink from, and I got this down to the store."

"It's real pretty," said Alzina, scarcely seeing the gayly decorated cup through the blurring mist before her eyes. There was a homesick feeling at her heart and a dread of the coming lonely day. Mrs. Lasbury had cared enough to plan out gifts for these others. For lonely Alzina there was nothing save the card. Ashamed of the jealousy that had burned briefly in her heart, Alzina praised the gifts her kinswoman had prepared, and then just before the widow's departure Alzina tucked in her hand a little purse containing a five dollar bill.

"With love and a merry Christmas, Eliza," she said heartily.

"That's real thoughtful of you, Alzina," cried Mrs. Lasbury, quite moved by her cousin's generosity. "I most wish you was coming along to enjoy the Christmas tree."

"I shall have a Christmas tree of my own," said Alzina spiritedly.

Mrs. Lasbury stared. "For the land! What do you mean?" she demanded.

Alzina pointed toward the window where the feathery plume of the cedar branches tapped the pane. "That's my Christmas tree," she smiled bravely. "When the birds come tomorrow they'll find bits of suet and other goodies, and little Chip, the squirrel that lives in the hollow oak, will find a handful of nuts. Then there's the red mittens for Jimmie and a jar of mincemeat for old Mrs. Peterkin. Why, we'll have quite a merry Christmas here, after all. I wish I'd thought of it before." Alzina's cheeks grew quite pink, and her gray eyes sparkled.

"My land, Alzina, you're almost pretty," she admitted graciously. "They was asking down to the sewing circle why you never encouraged any company. There's plenty of young men would like to call on you, and most of them would like to marry you. I thought young Fred Pierson was quite smitten when he walked home from meeting. Well, you needn't look so mad, Alzina. Most girls would be glad to have him looking at 'em."

"Here is Mr. Beebe," remarked Alzina, turning from the window with hot, flushed cheeks. "I hope you'll have a lovely time, Cousin Eliza."

"I expect I shall," said the widow complacently. She bundled herself in a large cloak and tied a woolen shawl over her head. "I shall stop in the postoffice and see if my present has come from Elderville. Do you really mean you're going to have a Christmas tree, Alzina, like you said?" And as Alzina nodded assent Mrs. Lasbury tucked her double chin in the folds of her shawl and added condescendingly, "Well, I wish you joy of it."

When she was alone Alzina thought about the Christmas tree she had so bravely planned in Mrs. Lasbury's presence, and she tried not to remember that she was all alone and that her natural reserve had shut her away from the few friends she might have possessed. There was no one to remember her this lonely Christmas eve, and so she must try and remember the few people she knew. She tied a bright dime in each thumb of the red mittens and, wrapping them in white tissue paper, placed them in the milk pail outside the door. She groped down cellar for a jar of mincemeat and made it ready to take to old Mrs. Peterkin in the morning.

When she opened the pantry door to find some bits of suet for the birds she met a surprise. There on the broad shelves the conscience stricken Mrs. Lasbury had arranged two mince pies and a golden one of pumpkin. There was a small roasted chicken and a dish of cranberry sauce, besides several vegetables ready to be warmed up. The hot tears welled into Alzina's eyes.

"That just shows that everybody is better hearted than I think they are," she murmured as she closed the door on Cousin Eliza's mute but substantial offering. "I'm ashamed of myself when I think how much I'm missing of all the goodness just by being so narrow-minded."

Before she went to bed Alzina read the beautiful story of the first Christmas, and, although she had read it before, it never held so much tender meaning for her as it did this anniversary of the blessed birthday.

She awoke cheerful and contented, and, while there was no Christmas greeting awaiting her from the silent rooms of the house, she resolved that when another year had rolled around the Christmas season would find a happy gathering under her own roof—the lame and the halt and the blind. Aye, she would find them in the highways and byways. There would never be another lonely Christmas.

When she opened the sitting room door she saw the tree. After her first start of amazement she stood silently looking through the windows at the beautiful sight. Somebody had shaken the snow from her cedar and dressed the branches with tinsel and strings of popcorn. Somebody had tied oranges and candy canes and popcorn balls to the stems, while there were several mysterious looking packages depending from the lower branches.

Alzina tiptoed out of the door and like one in a dream approached the tree. Her slender feet made deep tracks in the snow, and the morning sunshine turned her brown hair into a maze of gold. Almost reverently she touched the branches that bore the Christmas fruits, and then she untied one of the packages and slowly opened it. Inside was a dainty white apron with a Christmas card, "To Alzina from Sarah Beebe." There was another present from Mr. Beebe and one from Esther and a real present from Cousin Eliza Lasbury—a knitted afghan. Then there was a big box of candy from Fred Pierson's mother, and, lastly, a very tiny box hanging all alone.

When Alzina opened it she found a beautiful little turquoise ring, and in it was twisted a note from Fred Pierson himself. "If it's all right, Alzina, wear this down to the gate," he had written bashfully.

After she had wiped the tears from her eyes Alzina Tweed saw that all the friendly Beebes and Cousin Eliza Lasbury were peering at her from adjacent points of vantage. "I never had such a good time in my life," panted Mrs. Lasbury as they gathered about her. "When I told Mrs. Pierson about it she and Fred wanted to join in, and so they did. If you'll give us some breakfast, Alzina, we'll take you back to Beebe's with us. Fred and his mother 'll be there, and—where are you going?"

"If you'll excuse me a moment," blushed Alzina, twisting the turquoise ring around her finger—"I've got an errand down to the gate."

And all the Beebes and Cousin Eliza winked solemnly at each other.

AFTER SUFFERING TEN YEARS

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

MARLTON, N.J.—I feel that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has given me new life. I suffered for ten years with serious female troubles, inflammation, ulceration, indigestion, nervousness, and could not sleep. Doctors gave me up, as they said my troubles were chronic. I was in despair, and did not care whether I lived or died, when I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so I began to take it, and am well again and relieved of all my suffering."—Mrs. GEORGE JORDY, Box 40, Marlton, N.J.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotics or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female diseases we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials are on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., from women who have been cured from almost every form of female complaints, inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration. Every suffering woman owes it to herself to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

SOME UNUSUAL SOUP RECIPES

That Are Good and Appetizing For the Winter Dinner.

In the winter the housewife's fancy seriously turns to thoughts of soups. With the first few cold days the stock pot acquires an interest which it has lacked for at least several months, while the daily menu becomes longer by one hot, wholesome course.

When reinstating soup to its proper dignity this year it would be an excellent housewifely study to vary it to a greater extent than in former seasons.

The average first course is extremely limited in point of variety, and good and tasty recipes are so numerous that it is a pity this should be the case.

Try a variation of the familiar tomato bisque. Have the fruit weighing just a pound and cook them in salted water with either three or four white potatoes (peeled, of course), according to size, and have a bunch of sorrel in the water. When soft rub them through a sieve and heat again with some butter. Add the seasoning liked, boil up yet again and serve with toast fingers.

Any poultry stock makes a good soup in capable hands. And by poultry stock are meant not the extracted juices of a whole fowl, but simply water in which the biped is boiled.

This is the method followed by one adept manager to use up the superfluous liquor when serving boiled fowl. To a pint and a quarter of the latter add just a little celery, a mere sliver of onion, a saltspoonful of peppercorns and a teaspoonful of salt or to taste. When it has reached the boiling point simmer it slowly half an hour and afterward strain. Prepare the usual blend of flour and butter and gradually pour on to it the boiling liquid. Add one cupful of milk and season with salt and pepper.

If the yolk of one egg is slightly whipped, thinned with a tablespoonful of the soup and added to the pottage proper it makes for additional richness. In such case it must be served immediately or it will curdle.

A Gift For a Baby.

A charming gift for a new baby is a set of washed gold safety pins These are not the small sets connected by a chain used to fasten the little frocks, but are ordinary safeties specially gold washed for the purpose

It is hard to make a man with the toothache believe that the world is growing better.

The defeated candidate has a poor opinion of the intelligence of the average voter.

The Children's Hair

A Little Extra Care Now May Save After Years of Regret

Children play so hard that the head perspires and the hair has a tendency to mat and get sticky on the scalp. Soap and water doesn't seem to remove it, but the hair must breathe to be healthy. Just try Nyal's Hirsutone. Rub it into the roots of the hair with the balls of the fingers. The children like it and will ask you to use it. Hirsutone loosens up the accumulated dust and perspiration and the hair and scalp can then be easily and thoroughly cleaned. After it is dried give another application of Hirsutone. After you have used it for a while you will admit it is the best you have ever used. Your Nyal Drug Store will cheerfully guarantee Hirsutone to do all that is claimed for it.

MISS GRACE LA RUE IN WRAP DESIGNED BY HERSELF.

Individuality in dress is manifesting itself more and more every day, and women are no longer satisfied with the clothes made for them by even the most celebrated dressmakers unless the modiste studies their own requirements.

Miss Grace La Rue, who is singing the principal role in "Mme. Troubadour," designs all of her own costumes and those of the girl with the road company who assumes the character she originated.

Miss La Rue has hit on a scheme in her dressmaking which is a valuable suggestion to the home seamstress. She has a life size wax figure of herself modeled, and on this model she is able to study the effects of her costumes better than by any arrangement of mirrors.

Fashion Ever Young.

"If fashion is capricious it is because she is always young," said a witty Parisienne. By being la mode one is always young. It is the touches of the toilet, the finishing touches, that bring a costume up to its best. Youth is not a question of years, but one of appearance. The newest styles of dress are cut in lines and with a grace which knows no difference between youth and age.

To be young in fashion a dame, no matter her years, will look most carefully to four things—her corset, her shoes, her gloves and her hat.

Between these points of interest lie the jabot and the belt. A dainty jabot or a frill for the front of a coat or shirt waist will give it unexampled freshness and style. The counters are full of the very latest. It is difficult to escape them, and as the passe styles go to the out of the way counters the newest is there to be bought without much thinking.

A trim collar and modish jabot cover a multitude of oversights in the costume. The trim collar is sure to attract the eyes. The jabot of dainty mull and lace and the crimped frill of lawn, with an Irish edging or an insertion of guipure, mark an elegant thought. The Dutch neck is reserved for the home toilets.

Quotes Nietzsche on Women.

Mrs. Havelock Ellis, who has made a careful study of Nietzsche, says the philosopher is strangely reticent about women, though he evidently has worked out a philosophy concerning them. She quotes him as saying, "Everything in woman is a riddle." She points out that he has said in one essay: "The true man wants two different things, danger and diversion. He therefore wants a woman as the most dangerous plaything." The philosopher, elaborating on this point, says in every man there is always the element of the child and that woman is his plaything. The writer then quotes this excerpt from Nietzsche: "In a woman's love there are unfairness and blindness to all she does not love. And even in a woman's enlightened love there are still outbreaks and lightnings, and night along with the light." Mrs. Ellis has picked up in another essay of the philosopher another excerpt which fits in here. In it the philosopher says: "Woman would like to believe love can do all. It is a superstition peculiar to herself. Alas, he who knows the heart finds out how poor, helpless, pretentious and liable to error even the best, deepest love is, how it rather destroys than saves!"

Do not fail to keep strict watch on the baby's feet. If they are allowed to get cold the little one will be surely cross and run the risk of illness, as warm feet are a symptom of health.

During the winter months use woolen stockings, or if these shrink too much there is a mixture of silk and wool which wears much better, though more costly.

When floors are drafty it is advisable to line shoes with a flannel sole pasted on the inside of shoe. Cork or rubber soles are used for children who are of walking age. This does away with the need of incessant putting on of rubbers on days that are damp.

If the child seems fretful, before scolding or feeding feel the hands and feet. If they are cold and clammy the circulation is at fault. Put the hands first under hot water, then under cold and rub briskly. Make the little one rise upon his toes if old enough; if not, bathe with the hot and cold water and rub well.

A little hot water sipped slowly from the end of a spoon will often start the circulation and prevent baby from having a bad cold.

Rubbing feet with damp salt will not only tend to warm them, but will strengthen weak ankles. This treatment is often used to overcome bowed legs.

For a tiny baby it is well to warm the feet by means of a small hot water bottle incased in a flannel bag. This wards off many a nasty attack of colic.

Nursery Furnishings.

The furnishings consist of a low table and four kindergarten chairs placed where the light is best, two low, strong couches on which the children sleep at night, a large box for toys, the top of which makes a comfortable seat against the wall, and a cabinet in which are kept all kinds of kindergarten and school supplies—paints, crayons, clay, pencils, paper, peg board, scissors, etc. On the wall hangs a large blackboard, and in the two wide doorways hang a pair of flying rings and a rope swing. A punching bag, boxing gloves, Indian clubs, etc., are in evidence, and an electric railroad system finds all the room it wants to meander around the floor at the will of our small boy.

Here, then, they spend their days in healthy, constructive work and play, and here they sleep at night with windows on two sides wide open and little white nightcaps on their heads to protect them from the drafts. The result has been that numerous other children of the neighborhood think our flat about the most interesting place they know of, and so our little ones always have company and are happy and contented at home, where we love to have them; also they do not annoy us, because they have so many interesting things to do that they do not find the time to bother with big folks.

Given freedom, room, things, and especially companions of their own age, all children cease to be "trials" and become a blessing, as they should be.

To Give Baby.

The christening presents given to the infant of today differ much from those chosen for his grandfather or his father.

His grandfather probably had a Bible and prayer book and his father a silver mug, a knife and spoon in a case and possibly a silver egg cup or a napkin ring. But the new baby has a far wider range of offerings.

A sum of money may be invested in the infant's name or be has a banking account opened for him.

Another favorite gift is a piece of old silver expected to amass value as time goes on, and a third, if the recipient be a girl, is a chain and locket or pendant.

Other gifts are elaborate robes for the small wearer exquisitely embroidered, perambulator covers and a monogram clip for the child's minor belongings, such as his veils or bibs, representing the new initials of the little one intertwined in silver.

Plenty of Sleep For the Little Ones.

In these days of hygienic living it should not be necessary to say, "Put the children to bed early," but to those who are careless about a regular bedtime for their little ones I would like to say a word of warning. Many mothers would say, "My children always go to bed early," but these same mothers allow the little ones to "sit up" on the slightest pretext—the late arrival of a guest or a little dinner party—and then wonder why the children grow pale and nervous. Plenty of sleep is absolutely necessary, says Woman's Life, if the boys and girls are to be free from nervous diseases in later life. Frequently the school work is blamed for a child's ill health when in reality the only trouble is want of regular sleep.

To Stop Niagara Falls.

Owing to the many suicides it would be a good thing to stop the falls. This may be impossible but it is possible to stop coughs and colds with Four T's, the great guaranteed cough cure, and neglected coughs have been a thousand times more often the cause of death than Niagara Falls. STRANGE ABOUT THOSE HATS

TWO SMART HATS OF THE SEASON.

Years ago hats had trimmings. A box of feathers, roses and ribbons, lace and velvet, odd ornaments and aigrets was in every woman's possession, from which she trimmed a hat or two each season with her own fair fingers. The velvet draped the crown. The aigret was for height, and the lace brightened it up a bit and lent a dressy air, and the flowers nestled at the base of the wing to set the whole thing off. That was a hat. And it cost if you were rich $12, and if you were just worrying along on a small salary the same effect was arrived at for about $6.

But now it is quite different. Hats do not have trimmings or at the most very little. A bare hat is chosen, priced anywhere from, say, $4 to $25 in the nude, and then it is adorned perhaps with a single feather or quill or an odd looking ornament. It has a positively naked appearance, but it is chic. That's enough. But the marvelous part about it is that it costs much more than the one with lace and the feather and buckle. Sometimes there is nothing on the chapeau but a perky little rose about as big as a baby's fist, that's all, but the rose costs $4, and the hat costs $14, and there you are. The hats illustrated are charming models of the season carried out in fur and are as chic as they are simple.

Orange Jelly in Baskets.

This makes a very pretty dessert: Extract the juice of six oranges and one lemon. Put two ounces of sugar with it and let stand until the sugar is dissolved. Soak half an ounce of gelatin in a little cold water until soft. Add sufficient water to the orange juice to make nearly a pint, and to this add the gelatin. Warm the whole mixture until the gelatin is fully dissolved, stirring thoroughly. Pour into your orange peel baskets and set away in the cold to harden.

Orange Baskets.—Cut away part of peel on one side of orange to form a handle, leaving lower half as bowl of the basket. Of course the pulp has got to be taken out very carefully so as not to break the skin. An easier way is to cut the orange in halves, remove the pulp and fill with the jelly. A little of the jelly may be saved out, and when ready to serve chop it up quite fine and spread on top of the baskets. Whipped cream may also be used.

A Few Last Minute Offerings.

For the invalid a dainty bed jacket of nun's veiling in a pretty pale shade is a gift that will be valued and can be quickly made.

A simple model for it should be chosen and all edges, neck, sleeves and edge of sack buttonholed with silk, or they may be hemmed and the stitches covered with featherstitching.

Any piece of hand needlework will be acceptable, but without it a gift will savor too much of the shops.

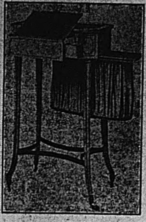
Neck mufflers for evening wear can be made from short lengths of flowered ribbon wadded and lined with soft silk or quilted satin.

Leather napkin rings are pretty and are easily made from a strip of leather six or seven inches long and two and one-half inches wide. In the center of the strip the monogram is either stenciled or burnt on, and the band is similarly decorated. To close the strip bore holes at the ends and lace together with a thong of leather. These are pretty and inexpensive gifts.

You may have observed that a man who always laughs at his own joke seldoms has any laughter left for the jokes of others.

The Sheraton Work Table.

Perhaps the most graceful of Sheraton (one of the old English cabinet makers of fame) small pieces are his tables. One type, which is here illustrated, is described in his cabinet dictionary as the "pouch table." As you see, it is a table with a bag in which fancy work was deposited. The workbags are suspended to a frame which draws forward, in which frame is a lock that shuts its bolt up into the under edge of the rail at the top. The silk pouch strikes that bold color effect of which Sheraton was so fond and is noticed also in the short silk curtains hung on the brass rails of his sideboards. These tables in mahogany are being reproduced in modern furniture and are a distinct addition to the living room furnishings and a comfort in the sewing line to the woman fortunate enough to own one of them.



POUCH TABLE (SHERATON PERIOD).

How to Clean Globes.

An excellent way to clean obscured gas globes is to wash them with soap and warm water in which a little salts of lemon has been mixed, says Table Talk.

The great difficulty in the way of getting the ground portion of the globe to look white is the grease which sets closely in the roughness and which does not seem to be thoroughly removed by soap and water alone or even with the help of soda.

After the globes have been carefully washed in the manner recommended do not dry them with a cloth, but after letting the tap run upon them for awhile place them where the water can drain off. It is an advantage to let them stand in a little sawdust or on a woolen cloth, as the water which runs down will then be soaked up as it flows, and the globes will dry more rapidly.

The Carving Knife.

There is a great deal in knowing how to sharpen the carving knife. The steel should be held in the left hand, which should be on a level with the elbow, pointed toward the right shoulder and the knife held almost perpendicular.

The hilt of the knife's edge should be placed at the top of the steel and the blade drawn downward the whole length of both steel and knife, first on one side and then on the other, so that the point of the knife finishes at the hilt of the steel.

The blade should be almost flat on the steel with the back slightly raised, but with only the edge touching it.

TWO BELLEVILLE MEN VICTIMS OF RAILWAY ACCIDENT

A SHOCKING FATALITY ON G. T. R. THIS MORNING

William Dennis, Engineer, and Thomas McDermott Fireman, Were the Victims—Both were Married Men and Leave Families--Cause of Accident Was a Rear-End Collison--Full Paticulars of the Disaster

That the lives of railway men are at all times in jeopardy there can be no doubt. This fact was strikingly demonstrated at an early hour this morning when two lives were suddenly sacrificed in a wreck which occurred on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway at Collin's Bay, some eight miles west of Kingston. As the result of the deplorable affair William Dennis, engineer, and Thomas McDermott, fireman, both residents of this city, were instantly killed, and two families thrown into mourning.

CAUSE OF THE ACCIDENT.

From information which was obtained, it was ascertained that about two o'clock a freight train was proceeding westward when, on a rather heavy grade at Collins' Bay, the train broke in two, owing to a coupling giving way. The engine of this train, with some of the cars, proceeded westward, while the other part of the train ran eastward down the grade at a high rate of speed. Following this train was another freight coming westward, on the engine of which Dennis was at the throttle and McDermott was the fireman. The latter train was proceeding at a fairly good speed in order to make the grade, when the broken part of the first train upon the second train. A collision was inevitable, and the general impression is that Dennis and McDermott did not notice the broken part of the train in time to either jump or avert the accident. The engine and the runaway cars came together with making a terrible wreck. Dennis and McDermott were instantly killed in the contact.

CAME THUNDERING DOWN

The body of the latter was recovered some time after the accident, but no trace of Dennis' remains could be found for hours after the unfortunate affair.

To add to the horror of the catastrophe, the

and we are informed that word was despatched to Kingston, some eight miles distant, for help from the fire brigade. Some of the fire fighters responded and with others rendered what assistance was possible under the circumstances. The auxiliary from Kingston and also the auxiliary from here were called to the scene of the accident to assist in removing the debris and clearing the line. No. 5 Express, coming westward, had left Kingston and was held up for some time near the scene of the wreck.

A number from the city this morning, upon hearing of the accident, went down by train to the scene.

THE VICTIMS.

Wm. Dennis, the engineer who lost his life, was well known in this city, where he had lived for some years on Bleecker Avenue. He was a married man and by his untimely and sudden taking off a widow and family of two little girls and one little boy are bereft; "Bill," as he was familiarly called, was a general favorite with his fellow employees, who are grief stricken over the distressing occurrence. He had been for some time a G. T. R. engineer and was considered a painstaking and capable employee.

Thomas McDermott was also a married man and is survived by a widow and one child. He resided on Pinnacle Street, near the junction of Mill Street. He was about 30 years of age and had also been for some time in the employ of the G. T. R. He formerly came from Tyendinaga Township, where he was born. He was a genial and conscientious man, highly esteemed by all who knew him. He was a member of St. Michael's Church and was also identified with the local branch of the C. M. B. A.

A THIRD SUFFERER.

In the caboose of the broken portion of the freight train Conductor Wm. Cunningham, of Gananoque, was seated when the collision occurred. He received very severe injuries, consisting of a leg and arm being amputated. It was reported here this afternoon that the unfortunate man had passed away.

NOTES.

Up to a late hour this afternoon no trace of Dennis' body had been found.

When the fire broke out it was an appalling sight and attracted the attention of many inhabitants in that locality.

SCHOOL TEACHERS SCARCE DECLARES QUEBEC'S PREMIER

Anarchist Hunt Reaches Canada—Value of Canadian Parole System—Canada's Morgan Group

(Exclusive Montreal News Letter.)

MONTREAL, Jan. 23.—The dearth of school teachers, ever a live topic in the rural districts of the country, bids fair to become even more acute in the near future on account of the legislation foreshadowed by Sir Lomer Gouin at the opening of the Quebec Legislature concerning advancement on educational projects in the Province of Quebec. Sir Lomer says that special inducements are to be offered for the engagement of male teachers by the different school boards, and that, in this way, he hopes to be able to see education in the country parishes equal that of the cities. At present as soon as a school teacher procures a diploma he or she invariably moves westward. Sir Lomer says now that he will have work for them to do near home, and that the expanding West must look elsewhere for its supply.

The speech from the throne also contained another announcement of considerable interest to the whole of Canada. It was that the Government had pledged itself to the furtherance of the good roads movement, and that large sums of money would be asked to build up and maintain public highways.

• • •

Excitement and interest in the Houndsditch battle between anarchists and London police some time ago received new impetus here when it became known that orders had been issued from Scotland Yard to all the police and detective departments in Canada to keep a sharp watch on all suspicious characters in their districts, and to be particularly careful to see to it that they were under direct surveillance for the few weeks prior to the Coronation. As a result of this the Dominion police, under Colonel Percy Sherwood, have been most active and a large force has been sent down to the boundary to board and inspect trains coming in from the ocean ports of the United States to Canada. This work was being done quietly and effectively, but this week Inspector Parkinson held up a party of four at Rouse's Point, coming into Montreal from New York. There were two women and two men in the party. The Inspector told them, in his usual quiet manner, that they would not be able to enter Canada. One of the women, becoming angry, drew a long hat pin and tried to stab the Inspector.

The consequent small riot in the sleeping car aroused the curiosity of the passengers and the story leaked out. Later the Inspector announced that never before had the authorities turned back so many people, under one circumstance or another, as in the past two weeks.

• • •

If there is any faith to be put in figures, Canada's parole system of dealing with criminals has proved its value during the eleven years it has been in operation. Dominion Parole Officer Archibald, in the course of an inspection trip at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, said that, of the three thousand and seventy-two prisoners who have been released from the penitentiaries on parole during that period, two thousand have justified their right to freedom by living the lives of self-respecting and industrious citizens, nine hundred and ninety-nine are still reporting to the authorities, and only sixty-two have found their way back to the courts through the lures of their old habits and activities.

• • •

There is not very much use trying to play the role of stock market Bear these days. The tendency is all the other way, and the Bulls have the call every time. Times are too prosperous just now to think or talk of declining values. The Bulls even say that Canada is getting to the stage where a set-back across the border would not effect us to any marked extent.

Three years ago, it will be remembered, there was next door to a financial panic in the United States and although Canada was enjoying an unexampled era of prosperity the adverse influences from abroad called a halt and there was a general readjustment of values in consequence of the interference to the wave of prosperity at home. As Canada grows bigger and stronger financially, the more she becomes independent of what financial turmoil Uncle Sam may see fit to permit within his borders.

The enormous inflow of capital from different parts of the globe, but particularly from the land of John Bull, shows no sign of cessation and with the development of our own great resources keeping on apace it looks as though the preachment of the Bull element ought not to be far wrong, even if it does appear a little over-enthusiastic to the moderate man in the "Street."

Several things have occurred within the past few months to give additional strength to Canadian credit abroad and nothing could have been finer in that respect than the recent demonstration of the wonderful earning capacity of the Canadian Pacific Railway as shown by the decision of the directors within the past few days to place the stock on a 10 per cent. dividend basis.

• • •

The completion of the new power plant of the Sherbrooke Railway & Power Company has drawn Montreal capitalists' attention away from their street railway in the city to a promising public utility enterprise in the Eastern Townships. The Sherbrooke company is only about a year old, it having taken over the old Sherbrooke Street Railway last year, but already

FOUGHT FIRE FOR FIVE DAYS

Terrible Plight of Passengers and Crew of Burning Steamer

ALBANY, West Australia, Jan. 20—The steamer Parisana has been destroyed by fire at sea. Three of the passengers on board were killed and the remainder, 94 in number, together with the crew, were landed here to-day by a steamer which took them off after a five days' fight with the flames. The flames broke out on December 7. The battle against the flames was fought until December 11 the crew working in relays. The fire gradually ate its way through the cargo to the wooden structures. Attention was attracted to the burning vessel by the flames, which were visible for more than 150 miles at sea. The Parisiana was due at Melbourne about January 1.

The passengers, many of whom were taken on at Port Said, were in a state of complete exhaustion from exertion and fright when they were taken off the vessel.

They had worked night and day helping the members of the crew fight the growing fire, but the progress of the flames was so rapid that it became apparent that all on board would have to take to the boats in open sea. The boats were being lowered when the rescuing steamer came along. The Parisiana, which was owned by the Houlder Line, sailed from New York.

The Parisiana was built at Newcastle, England in 1909, being comparatively a new vessel. She was steel built and with screw propellers and of modern type. Her hailing port was from West Hartlepool, England.

Mayor Guerin says that Montreal is growing at the rate of 50,000 a year Yes,—the three great places in Canada are Montreal, Toronto and Belleville—all growing.

A statement issued from the City Hall shows that 11 3-4 miles of new pavement was laid on the streets of Montreal last year. In the year before about 6 3 4 miles were laid.

Another farmers' deputation has waited on the Premier to protest against reciprocity and to say a good word for tariff reform. Sir Wilfrid must begin to feel a bit bewildered remarks the Hamilton Herald.

The stench that arises from that investigation of the affairs of the Printing Bureau at Ottawa is simply nauseating. The whole affair is a mass of corruption which is being added to daily, largely through the efforts of Mr. Northrup, the chief inquisitor on behalf of the Conservative party.

The will of R. H. Thompson, New York, a retired millionaire, was refused admission to probate in Brooklyn by Surrogate Ketchum, who ruled that for years the testator had been under the control of supposed advice from the other world, conveyed to him through his granddaughter, (who was also his adopted daughter,) Mrs Marion Funk, a medium. "A will which proceeded from a mind so unbalanced and upset," says the opinion of the surrogate, "is the product of fraud and void."

Laura A. Fixen, of Chicago, a spiritualistic medium, a few days ago announced that an instrument is in progress of invention which will enable the living to communicate with the dead. The invention will bridge the Styx and its success will be due to mechanical genius, she says. "It will be something like a telephone," said Mrs. Fixen. "As soon as we get it each one of us can talk with loved ones gone before. Can any thought be more beautiful?" Her auditors signified that they could think of nothing so closely approaching the seraphic.

"Dries" scored an overwhelming victory over "Wets" in the balloting in the McGill Univercity Arts Faculty at Montreal on the question of whether or not drinks should be allowed on the table at the annual dinner. The anti-prohibition men only managed to record seventy-eight votes, while the laborers in the cause of temperance dropped one hundred and thirty-eight ballots in the box. This means that on February 8, when the Arts students hold their annual dinner, nothing stronger than ginger ale will be allowed within the banquet hall. It will the first "dry" faculty dinner ever held at McGill; but the victors are so elated that they have already inaugurated a campaign for a dry science dinner.

RESPECTED CITIZEN SUDDENLY SUMMONED

Thomas B. Marshall, Formerly of G. T. R., Died From Heart Disease

Mr. Thomas B. Marshall, a well-known and highly respected resident of the city, died very suddenly at an early hour on Saturday morning from heart disease. On Saturday evening Mr. Marshall was apparently as well as usual and was about the house. On Sunday morning he expired after a few minutes' illness. Deceased, who was 69 years of age, was born at Devonshire, England. For the past 40 years he had resided in this city and vicinity. For many years Mr. Marshall was a section foreman on the G. T. R., retiring three years ago. With the employees he was highly popular. Deceased was a member of Moira Lodge No. 11 A. F. & A. M. and in religion was an Anglican, being a member of Christ Church. Last July Mrs. Marshall passed away. The surviving members of the family are four sons and one daughter. The sons are Thomas and William, G. T. R. engineers of this city; James, of Buffalo, N.Y., and George, a G.T.R. conductor of Toronto. The daughter is Mrs. Charles Robinson, of Brockville.

WORK ON THE C.N. R. IS BEING RUSHED

Rock Cutting and Grading Being Pushed Both East and West Of the City

Construction work on the Canadian Northern Ontario's Toronto-Ottawa line is being pushed with all possible rapidity. Contractor McInnis has a force of men at work west of the city busily engaged in rock cutting and grading on the Institute grounds and on the premises of Messrs. Anderson and Wilmot.

East of the city Contractor Giroux has a large gang of men engaged on the same class of work, and good progress is being made by both contractors.

It is expected that work on the piers of the Moira River bridge will be commenced within a very short time.

DOUBLE FUNERAL IN ONE FAMILY

Mr. Frank Huffman's Wife and Father Were Buried on The Same Day

A double funeral took place yesterday from the residence of Mr. Frank Huffman, at Gilead in Thurlow Township. On Thursday evening Mr. Wm. Huffman died and on Friday morning Mrs. Frank Huffman passed away. Thus Mr. Frank Huffman was within a few hours bereft of his father and wife. The double funeral yesterday was largely attended, services being held in the Presbyterian church at Melrose. Mrs. Huffman was a sister of Mr. T. A. McFarlane, ex-Warden of the county.

LATE MRS. BIRCH

The Picton Gazette says: "The funeral of the late Mrs. Margaret H Birch, of Chicago, daughter of the late Dr. James T. Bell, of Belleville, took place from Claramount, the residence of Mr. E. M. Young. The service which was private, was impressively read by Rev. W. L. Armitage, of St Mary Magdalene's Episcopal church The pall-bearers were Messrs. C. B Allison, W. H. Williamson, D. Bongard, H. Bedell, G. E. Boulter and E. M. Young. Mrs. Boyle, Miss Kathleen Boyle, Mr. R. Bell, of Montreal, and Mr. and Mrs. J. W London, of Belleville, were in attendance at the funeral of the late Mrs Birch.

POLICE NOTES

In their rounds at an early hour on Sunday morning the police found the door leading to a bar room in a Front street hotel unlocked. The proprietor was awakened and fastened the door.

Since Saturday three prisoners occupied the cells and a like number of tramps. Two were arrested as vagrants and one for drunkenness.

COUNTY COUNCIL

The January session of the County Council will open at two o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the Council Chamber here. The election of Warden will be the first business transacted and it is confidently expected that Mr. James Dryden, Reeve of Deseronto, will be elected to that honorable position.

INSIDE HISTORY

Some Self-Explanatory Letters.

Battle Creek, Mich, Jan. 7, '11
Dr. E. H. Pratt,
Suite 1202, 100 State St.,
Chicago, Ill.

My Dear Doctor:

"Owing to some disagreement with ——magazine several years ago they have become quite vituperative, and of late have publicly charged me with falsehoods in my statements that we have genuine testimonial letters.

"It has been our rule to refrain from publishing the names of either laymen or physicians who have written to us in a complimentary way and we have declined to accede to the demand of attorneys that we turn these letters over to them.

"I am asking a few men whom I deem to be friends to permit me to reproduce some of their letters over their signatures in order to refute the falsehoods.

"We have hundreds of letters from physicians, but I esteem the one you wrote me in 1906 among the very best particularly in view of the fact that it recognizes the work I have been trying to do partly through the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

"I do not sell nor attempt to sell the higher thought which is more important than the kind of food, but I have taken considerable pains to extend to humanity such facts as may have come to me on the subject

"In order that your mind may be refreshed I am herewith enclosing a a copy of your good letter, also a copy of the little book, and if you will give me the privilege of printing this over your signature I will accompany the printing with an explanation as to why you permitted its use in publication in order to refute falsehoods, and under that method of treatment I feel, so far as I know, there would be no breach of the code of ethics.

"I trust this winter weather is finding you well, contented and enjoying the fruits that are yours by right.

With all best wishes, I am,
Yours very truly,
C. W. POST.

Dr. Pratt, who is one of the most prominent and skillful surgeons in America, very kindly granted our request in the cause of truth and justice.

Chicago, Aug. 31, 1906
Mr. C. W. Post,
Battle Creek, Mich.

My dear Sir:—

"I write to express my personal appreciation of one of your business methods, that of accompanying each package of your Grape-Nuts production with that little booklet, "The Road to Wellville." A more appropriate, clear headed and effective presentation of health-giving auto-suggestions could scarcely be penned.

"Grape-Nuts is a good food in itself, but the food contained in this little article is still better stuff. I Commend the practice because I know that the greed and strenuousness, the consequent graft and other types of thievery and malicious mischief generally can never be cured by legislative action.

"The only hope for the betterment of the race rests in individual soul culture.

"In taking a step in this direction your process has been so original and unique that it must set a pace for other concerns until finally the whole country gets flavored with genuine practical Christianity.

"I shall do all that lies in my power to aid in the appreciation of Grape-Nuts, not so much for the sake of the food itself as for the accompanying suggestions.

"Visiting Battle Creek the other day, with a friend, Dr. Kelly, of Evanston, Illinois, while I was consulting with Mr. Gregory, my friend visited your factories and came away greatly amazed, not only at the luxurious furnishings of the offices generally and the general equipment of the place, but with the sweet spirit of courtesy and kindness that seemed to fill the air with a spiritual ozone that was good to breathe.

"The principles expressed in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," I well know are practical and they work in business of all kinds, including sanitariums, as will be fully tested before time is done.

"I know that you will not regard this letter as an intruding one. If this letter of appreciation as an intruding one. It is simply the salutation of good feellowship to you from one man who, although he has never seen you, feels drawn to you by the kinship of thought.

"The only thing that makes a man live forever in the hearts of his countrymen and his race is the good that he does. Your position in this respect is an enviable one, and I wish to extend my congratulations."

Yours respectfully,
E. H. PRATT.

SOME SERMONS ON LOCAL OPTION

In view of the fact that it is proposed to inaugurate a local option campaign in this city, the temperance question was touched upon in several of the churches yesterday. In the morning at Emmanuel Reformed Church the Rector, Rev. A. M. Hubly's subject was "The Principles of the Doctrine of Christ vs. Licensing the Liquor Traffic." In the evening at Bridge Street Church the pastor, Rev. Dr. Bishop, gave a strong temperance address, his subject being "The Drink Problem." The Rev. gentleman scored severely the drink traffic and the ruin it had wrought in the land.

Municipal Finance

Mr. H. C. Carson, who has written instructively in the Financial Post on municipal finance, contributes his seventh article on the subject to that journal, which was published on Saturday.

Mr. Carson commences by discussing the importance of the sinking fund and its administration, of which we have spoken in a previous article, and, after referring to the case of St. Catharines, makes the pertinent suggestion, with which we are hartily in accord, that, as a matter of prime importance, the appointment of an auditor of municipal sinking funds be made by the Provincial Government.

The aggregate sinking fund of the cities of Ontario, at the close of 1909, amounted to $15,173,251, or 21.3 per cent. of the gross debt. On a per capita basis this equals $20.88, reducing the actual bonded debt per head from $98.09 to $77.21. Only three of the cities exceed the average sinking fund per capita, noting, of course, that no figures are at hand in the case of Chatham and Niagara Falls, as the following table will show:

Showing sinking funds of cities of Ontario arranged in consecutive order from highest fund per capita downwards:

1	Toronto	$9,323,590	61.4475	$28.66

*18	Niagara Falls	......	.....	....
		$15,173,251	100%	$20.88

It is gratifying to note that Toronto, the largest city, with a gross debt of $110.55 per capita, has provided, towards redemption, $28.66, or 26 per cent. of its gross debt. Ottawa, with a gross debt of $93.62, has set aside $25.58 per capita, or nearly 27 1-2 per cent. Woodstock has sinking fund reserves equalling approximately 29 1-2 per cent. of its gross debt, and Belleville has a sinking fund equivalent to 22 per cent. of its gross debt. Brantford's fund nearly equals 26 per cent. of gross debt, and Stratford has set aside a sum equal to 23 per cent. Windsor has nearly 23 per cent. of debt at credit of sinking fund, while Peterboro gets under the average with 18 per cent. Guelph and St. Catharines occupy similar positions with slightly less than 15 p.c., Hamilton following with 14 per cent., and London with 12 p.c. Kingston's sinking fund equals but 10 per cent. of the total debt, and St. Thomas less than 3 1-2 per cent. Fort William and Port Arthur, comparatively new cities, show nearly 11 per cent. and 6 1-2 p.c. respectively, of debenture debt provided for. Bond tenure is, of necessity, an important consideration in weighing one city against another, as to ratio of sinking fund to gross debt, but, waiving this point, the variance of percentage amongst the cities is eloquent of the need for closer inspection and supervision.

After deducting sinking funds, it is found that the net debt of the 18 Ontario cities at the close of 1909, equalled the sum of $56,111,498 equivalent to $77.21 average per capita. As previously pointed out, this includes all bonds of whatever nature, issued by the municipalities, and compare favorably as an average rate, with cities in the United States and elsewhere. The following table will show the final standing of the individual cities:

Showing net debenture debt of the cities of Ontario, arranged in consecutive order from the lowest net debt per capita upward:

		Net Deb. Debt.	Prop. of total %	Net debt per capita.
1	Windsor	$ 710,438	1,2661	$44.01

18	Port Arthur	2,344,849	4.1789	182.32
		$56,111,498	100%	$77.21

Eleven of the cities are below the average, ranging from Windsor in first place with $44.01 per capita, to Belleville with $69.25. Above the average, Toronto is lowest with $81.89, and the highest are Fort William and Port Arthur, with $140.20 and $182.32 respectively. The last two might revise their position with advantage to themselves.

it is commencing to show the fruits of labor and thought in the manner in which it is grappling with the power and transportation problems of the townships. Mr. Clarence McCuaig, on whose shoulders the principal burden of reorganization of the company has fallen, and whose energy has been responsible for getting the plant into the excellent running order it is in to-day, is now figuring on even larger plans with a view to giving quick transportation and power to the city of Sherbrooke and the surrounding district. With this end in view he has purchased three water powers on the Magog River and has commenced development. The result will be that the townships will eventually have their own hydro-electric power.

Another concern has been a great winner in the stock market within the past few days. This is Laurentide Paper, of which Sir William Van Horne is president and R. B. Angus, C. R. Hosmer and James Ross are among the directors. The $1,600,000 of common stock which only a short time ago had a market value of less than $2,400,000, has appreciated in value to the extent of between $900,000, and as the stock is concentrated for the most part in comparatively few hands, the profit can be estimated at a glance. The company has been making great profits and some scheme is now under consideration for giving the shareholders a larger proportion than they are now receiving from the already handsome 8 per cent. dividend rate. It will thus be seen that the C. P. R. millionaires are very much in the swim and are rapidly adding to their already immense fortunes.

THE FUN OF VICTORY.

THERE'S a heap of satisfaction
In a trouble if you grin,
If you keep your nerve in action
And you wear a lifted chin.
There's a joy in doing something
That you've never done before.
So don't be a deaf and dumb thing.
Chance is knocking at your door.

Down and out, there's fun in rising,
Fun in facing heavy odds,
Doing deeds that are surprising,
And the happy fellow plods,
Plods along and hums a ditty
As he journeys down the street
Of the busy, gold mad city
Till he's back upon his feet.

It's in overcoming trouble
That a fellow gets his fun.
It's in shattering the bubble
That is labeled "can't be done."
It's in striving night and day time
When the problem hopeless seems.
Man appreciates his playtime
When he's realized his dreams.

There's a heap of satisfaction
In a trouble if you grin.
Difficulties have attraction
If you keep a lifted chin.
And the harder that your fight is
Then the greater is your fun
And the finer your delight is
As you view the things you've done.

A clergyman was very annoyed to find that an old gentleman, accompanied by a boy, fell asleep on two consecutive Sundays during the sermon. So after service on the second week he told the boy, whom he rightly guessed to be the old gentleman's grandson, that he wished to speak to him in the vestry.

"My boy," asked the clergyman when they were closeted together, "who is that elderly gentleman you attend church with?"

"Grandpa," was the reply.

"Well," said the clergyman, "if you will only keep him awake during my sermon I'll give you a penny each week."

The boy fell in with the arrangement, and for the next two weeks the old gentleman listened attentively to the sermon. The third week, however, found him soundly asleep.

The clergyman, very angry, called the boy to him and said:

"I am very angry with you. Your grandpa was asleep again today. Didn't I promise you a penny a week to keep him awake?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "but grandpa now gives me twopence not to disturb him."—Spare Moments.

ROBINSON & THOMPSON

What is Man? Is He a Spirit Being Or An Animal?

Pastor Russell Startles His Audience by Confirming Bobby Burns, "A Man's a Man For A' That."

BUFFALO, N.Y., Jan. 22.—Pastor Russell preached twice here to-day in the Opera House. He had excellent attention and a crowded house. We report one of his addresses from the text, "What is man?" (Psalm viii, 4-8). He said:

Confusion prevails respecting man's nature, as well as in regard to his origin and destiny. We have no quarrel with those who boast of monkey parentage and Evolution and who hope against facts that mankind will soon be a race of gods and that dying, somehow, is a step upward into life while it appears to be a step down into death. To those who are happy in this illogical view I have nothing to say now. I address the more humble-minded, who confess their perplexity and who have not become so worldly-wise as to reject the Bible as the voice Divine.

However we may understand the Bible's declaration respecting the lower animals—that the water swarmed and brought forth various kinds—we must admit that its statements respecting man are explicit; he was not thus brought forth, but is declared to have been a direct creation of God in his own image and character-likeness—only on a lower plane of organism. Adam possessed God's likeness in his mental and moral qualities higher than those of brutes, by which man is able to reason and philosophize respecting scientific and moral problems. These higher human powers were dwarfed and the lower and more animal powers maintained to the full, by reason of the fall and its sentence, "Dying thou shalt die."

The Scriptures do not suggest that man was an imperfect or undeveloped species whose death could be a change to another nature and ethereal form and a heavenly home. Quite to the contrary. The hope set before Adam was everlasting life and an earthly Eden. It was this that he lost and it is this earthly nature and human perfection in God's image in Paradise restored that the Scriptures hold out as the hope of the world through the glorified Messiah's Kingdom—a spiritual Kingdom in which the faithful, elect Church of this age will participate. That Kingdom of righteousness will be "beyond the vail" of human sight. Yet its power will be universal and exercised on man's behalf for the restraint of Satan and every adverse influence and for human assistance back to all that was lost by disobedience in Eden and all that was redeemed by the obedience of Calvary.

Nor even then will the image of God, as represented in the human will, be coerced. Merely the glorious opportunities of reconciliation and of restitution will be afforded to every creature—and those who decline them will be cut off from life in the Second Death (Acts iii., 19-23.)

God answers the question of our text, "What is man?" He declares, "Thou madest him (in his Edenic perfection) a little lower than the angels. Thou crownedst him with glory and honor (the dignity and power of the perfect Adam). Thou didst set him over the works of thine hands (an earthly being, he was at the head of all earthly creatures—the King of earth), over the beats of the field, the fowl of heaven, the fish of the sea—thou hast put all things under his feet" (with kingly power clearly outlined and his subjects named). Evidently man had a mental power for the control of the lower creation aside from physical force, as intimated in his primary dealings with them and giving them their names (Hebrews ii, 6-8). We have known men possessed of wonderful magnetic power—horse-trainers such as Rarety and tamers of wild beasts and reptiles. But Adam, perfect, must have possessed this power in a still superior degree.

A little lower than the angels, yet very much higher than the beasts was this King of earth in his perfection. And such man will be as a redeemed and restored race, when the Divine Plan shall have been fully outworked; when "every creature in heaven and in earth shall be heard saying, Praise and glory and honor, dominion and might, be unto him that sitteth upon the Throne and unto the Lamb forever," and when there shall be no more sighing, no more crying and no more dying, because all the former things of sin and death shall have passed away, because the great King, Messiah, the Redeemer of mankind, shall deliver him from the power of sin and death and the tomb. Well did he state his mission work: "The Son of man came to seek and to recover that which was lost."

Man, then, is an animal of a high, glorious type, adapted to his earthly home and it adapted to his welfare when he and it shall both be in perfection. Of the earth it is written that "God made it not in vain, but to be inhabited." And again, the "earth abideth forever"—"seed time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, enduring as long as there are sun and moon." Again, "Earth is God's footstool and he will make the place of his feet glorious." To this end the earth will shortly be turned over to the great Redeemer, who will "take his great power and reign." He will put down all enemies and lift up mankind, redeemed by his sacrifice, giving an opportunity of everlasting life to all, and then, as St. Paul declares, after having accomplished the restitution work for man and for the earth, the Redeemer King will turn over the government of the world to God, even the Father (I Corinthians 15: 24.)

Our great mistake in the past has been in not studying the Bible correctly. Hence we failed to see that only an elect "little flock" is invited to a heavenly reward for following the Saviour in the narrow way of self-sacrifice, and that then the earthly reward will be bestowed during Messiah's reign upon all the willing and obedient and that thus will be accomplished the original Divine intention of having an earth full of people, amongst whom God's will shall be done as in heaven.

At some future time we may take up, "What is the soul of man?" For the present let us briefly say that the word soul finds its synonym in the word being, and that when God had created man of the dust of the earth he was a man only in form; he was not a soul or being; he had no thought or sentient being. When God started Adam's physical system by blowing into his nostrils the breath of lives (as the Hebrew Scriptures state it), then Adam, not a part of him, but the whole of him, became a living soul—living being. It was not Adam's breath that was on trial, that was sentenced, nor was it his flesh. It was the soul of Adam that was tried, the soul Adam that sinned, the soul Adam that died and the soul Adam that Jesus redeemed and that is to be resurrected.

Many a good fellow has started something only to be invited by the officer on the beat to see it through.

Their Favorite Fodder.

"How did it happen you weren't elected?"

"Too many voting cattle."

"They pastured on the long green, I suppose?"

"Yes; I couldn't have kept the pace had I been disposed."

"Now, if chickens could have voted?"

"How would that help?"

"You could have passed around the chicken feed."

Just Tolerated.

This is a woeful world, but still—
No one the fact disputes—
We'll have to stick to it until
We find a world that suits.

Disastrous.

"How did he happen to go to the wall?"

"By reason of his wife's economies."

"Economies! How is that?"

"She was always using $5 worth of new material to fix over a dollar's worth of old stuff and then treating herself to some wild extravagance because she had been so economical."

Shocking.

"Don't ask your husband so many questions, Jane."

"Why not, mamma?"

"It isn't wise."

"But he tells such funny little squibs."

"Yes, but he may tire of it and tell you the truth one of these times."

Ingenious.

"I hate him."

"Why?"

"He lies so about me."

"Who cares for lies, anyway?"

"But he is so clever about it. Every one he tells might be true."

The Difference.

"What is an optimist?"

"The fellow who expects what he most desires."

"And a pessimist?"

"Expects what he most fears."

Companionable.

The odors of the smoking car
Have not the scent of atter
That spreads its perfume sweet afar,
Put, pray, what does that matter?
In it good fellowship indeed
Is found for one another.
The wealthy and the man in need
Mix here as man and brother.

Here men are neither bad nor good.
It's just a common meeting.
Where friendliness is understood
Without a formal greeting.
Here ancient enmities may sink,
Forgotten be, and often
The fellow with a grouchy kink
May find his manner soften.

The match to light a pipe of clay
That ancient is and dingy
Comes from a shark across the way
That otherwheres is stingy.
And if tobacco should be short
Most any one is willing
To come across and be a sport
Just so a pipe needs filling.

His paper gladly he divides
And to a neighbor passes.
You know a man can't read both sides
With just one pair of glasses.
The high and low their wits unsheathe
To mingle in the joking,
For every one is underneath
The fellowship of smoking.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"You won't mind if we smoke, mother," he said. "The situation requires tobacco. Don't you feel like that, Pyne?"

"If Lady Margaret doesn't object, I admit that different sorts of poison might act as tonics," answered Pyne. "Here, uncle, try a brandy and soda. Lady Margaret, a glass of champagne. I've been expecting a disturbance, but didn't look for it to-night."

"Why do you say that, Charlie?" asked Mr. Traill, rising and stretching his limbs as a man who tests his bones after a heavy fall.

"It was hanging around, just as one prophesies a storm after an electrical feeling in the air. Mrs. Vanasittart recognized Brand, and made her calculations accordingly. Let us give her the credit due to her. As soon as she discovered him, the marriage project was off."

"I had that kind of impression myself. Glad I mentioned it to you, now."

"Of course you are. I'll bet any reasonable sum that Mrs. Vansittart intended to leave Penzance to-morrow as soon as she had made you understand that she could not, under any circumstances, become my aunt."

A ghost of a smile flitted across Mr. Traill's face. His nephew's way of putting things was delightfully unequivocal.

"What we are apt to lose sight of," continued Pyne, "is the manner in which Brand received what must have been a staggering blow. He met his wife to-night after a separation of more than twenty years. And how he took it! When he spoke, it was really in her behalf. The thing is too amazing. Of course, now that the thunder and lightning have started, the sky will clear all the sooner."

"Unhappily, such affairs do not arrange themselves so readily," snapped Lady Margaret. She was becoming more angry with each wave of reflection. "Young men like you do not realize the effect of such—such unpleasant exposures on family life. How will the early history of her parents affect the future of Constance Brand? As for the other girl—"

Her ladyship threw up her hands in helpless abandonment. To her mind, the adoption of poor Enid, the sea-waif, assumed a darker appearance now that Brand's matrimonial adventures revealed sinister features.

Jack Stanhope caught her by the shoulder.

"Mother," he cried, "before you say another word let me tell you something you ought to know. Enid is Mr. Traill's daughter!"

Now this good woman loved her son dearly. All her thoughts were of him and for him. Her look of blank incredulity yielded to the confirmation she saw writ on all three faces.

She burst into tears.

"Apparently I am the last person to be taken into anybody's confidence,' she sobbed.

"Madam," said Mr. Traill, bending over her, "in this instance, at least, you have no cause to feel aggrieved. Neither the girl herself, nor her sister by adoption, nor Mrs. Vansittart, to whom, until the past half-hour, I considered myself to be engaged, is aware of the undoubted fact which your son has just told you. Let me say that I, as her father, am proud to think she has won the affections of such a man as Stanhope. There is no reason why you, his mother, should not be equally satisfied with the pedigree and prospects of my daughter."

His calm assumption of a rank equal if not superior to her own was convincing to a woman of her temperament. Assuredly that evening was a memorable one to her ladyship. The repose of Vere de Vere was rudely shocked for once. Nevertheless, the knowledge that her lifelong ambition had been realized in a way little dreamed of by any of those most concerned was in itself consoling. Mr. Traill, quite unconsciously, loomed large in the social eye of Penzance, and the widowed lady had not been so long withdrawn from the wealth-worshiping world of London as to be wholly unleavened with the worship of the golden calf.

So it was with quickened interest that she set herself to listen to the story of Enid's parentage, and, if her fear of local gossip-mongers shrank as her perception of Enid's real social position increased, much may be forgiven to the motherly sentiment that no wife can be too good for an excellent son.

Meanwhile Brand and the sorrow-laden girls, ushered by obsequious servants to the entrance-hall, were constrained to comfort themselves with true British phlegm in view of the interest caused by their appearance.

The hour was not late, about half-past nine. Even whilst the hall porter was summoning a cab the news spread, within and without that the lighthouse-keeper and his daughters, whose exploits filled the minds of all men, were standing near the door.

Several people, complete strangers, came to them and offered warm congratulations. A smart journalist pressed forward and wove his own complimentary utterances into an interview. A crowd gathered quickly on the pavement. Policemen, those marshals of every English demonstration, cleared a path for them through the throng. So, with smiling words on their lips and anguish in their hearts, they made a triumphal exit. How little could the friendly enthusiasts who cheered them realize that these three had been atrophied by the deadly malevolence of fate in the very hour when a great achievement had ended happily.

Enid suffered almost as keenly as Brand and his daughter. Their joys and sorrows were hers. The startling nature of Brand's avowal rendered it difficult for either Enid or Constance to piece together certain fragmentary memories of Mrs. Vansittart's odd behavior during her enforced sojourn on the rock. So thoroughly had she shattered those dimly outlined impressions by the quietly vivacious charm of her manner at dinner that they both experienced a jumble of sensations. A terrified woman, in wet and torn clothing, cowering in the gaunt interior of a storm-girt lighthouse, is a very different being when attired in expensive garments and surrounded by the luxuries of a first-class hotel.

It was a relief to drive to their cottage in silence, yet, so easily moulded is our human clay, it was a greater relief when the tension of the noisy rattle of the cab was relaxed. It cost some effort to assure Mrs. Sheppard, a buxom, motherly soul of sixty or thereabouts, that they could not possibly eat any supper. The effort was forthcoming. They pleaded weariness, and at last they were alone.

Constance knelt by her father's side when he dropped listlessly into the armchair placed in his accustomed corner.

"Now, dad," she said, bravely unemotional, "there will be no more tears. Tell me all that I ought to know."

Enid drew a hassock to his feet and seated herself there, clasping her hands about her knees.

"Whatever she did I am sorry for her," said the girl decisively. "And she cannot have been a really bad woman, dad, or you would not have loved her once."

Brand sighed deeply. His strong will had deserted him for a little while. He shrank from the ordeal before him. Why should he be called on to sully the mirror of his daughter's innocence by revealing to her the disgrace of her mother?

Constance caught something of the dread in his soul.

"Don't tell me if it hurts you, dad. I am content to bear more than I have borne to-night if it lessens your sufferings," she whispered.

He placed an arm around each of them.

"It is God's will," he said, "that I should have to face many trials at a period when I expected nothing but some few years of quiet happiness."

"Nothing in this world can part us from you," said Constance.

"Oh, nothing," agreed Enid solemnly nestling closer. Her earnestness was helpful. He smiled wistfully.

"You forget, Enid, that there is a grave chance of you, at any rate, leaving me for another," he said.

She blushed.

"That is the worst of girls getting married," she protested. "They are supposed to be delighted because they are going to live with strange people. Girls who are of that mind cannot be happy at home. If I thought that being married to Jack implied separation from you and Constance—"

"You would give him up and weep your eyes out." He pressed her pouting lips together as he went on: "Now, my dear ones, I wish both of you to be prepared for very unexpected changes. Two most important events in your lives have taken place within a few hours. Constance, if you saw your mother to-night, Enid also saw her father. I have known for two days that Enid's father is Mr. Traill."

For an instant, it must be confessed, Constance and Enid alike feared that the mental and physical strain he had undergone had temporarily deranged him. It was not sheer incredulity but real terror he saw in their eyes. Somehow, their self-effacement in his behalf touched him more keenly than anything else had done during this troubled period.

He bowed his head. A strong man in agony cannot endure the scrutiny of loving eyes.

"Enid," he said brokenly, "my words to you must be few. Good fortune needs but slight explanation. The proofs of my statement I do not possess, but Mr. Traill's letter to me could not have been written by such a man if he were not sure of his facts. Here it is. Read it aloud."

He handed her her father's plain spoken communication. Constance, incapable of deeper depths of amazement than those now probed, looked over her sister's shoulder. Together they deciphered the somewhat difficult handwriting of a man whose chief task for years had been to sign his name.

This drawback was good in its result. They persevered steadily to the end. Then Enid, the comforter, broke down herself.

"It cannot be true, dad," she cried. "I have been one of your daughters all my life. Why should I be taken from you now?"

"I believe it is quite true," said Brand quietly and the need there was to console her was beneficial to himself. "Mr. Traill speaks of proofs. You have met him. I exchanged barely a word, a glance, with him, but it is not believable that he would make these solemn statements without the most undeniable testimony."

"Indeed, Enid," murmured Constance, "it sounds like the truth, else he would never have spoken so definitely of my father's claim on your affections."

Brand stroked the weeping girl's hair.

"One does not cry, little one, when one is suddenly endowed with a wealthy and distinguished relative. Now, I did not spring this revelation on you without a motive. If a cleavage has to come let us, at least, face every consideration. Providence, by inscrutable decree, ordained that my wife and I should meet after twenty-one years. That cannot have been a purposeless meeting. In my careless youth, when I assigned all things their scientific place, I have scoffed at presentiments and vague portents of coming evils. I retract the immature judgment then formed. During the height of the hurricane, when I feared the very lantern would be hurled into the sea, I was vouchsafed a spiritual warning. I could not read its import. These things baffle a man, especially one whose mind leans toward materialism. Nevertheless, I knew, though not in ordered comprehension, that my life was tending towords a supreme crisis. As the storm died, so I became normal, and I attributed a glimpse of the unseen to mere physical facts. I was wrong. The coming of that ill-fated vessel was heralded to me. I lacked the key of the hidden message. Now I possess it. On board that ship, Constance, was your mother. How strange that her advent should be bound up also with the mystery of Enid's parentage?"

"Father, dear, if you can bear it, tell me of my mother. She knew me, and that is why she asked me to kiss her."

"She asked you to kiss her?" Each word was a crescendo of surprise.

"Yes. One night she came to me. Oh, I remember. She wished Mr. Pyne to telegraph to his uncle. When he quitted us to take the message she, too—how weird it all seems now—admitted that she experienced something of the intuitive knowledge of the future you have just spoken of."

"I am not surprised. Poor Nanette! She was always a dreamer, in a sense. Never content, she longed for higher flights. She was a woman in ambition 'ere she ceased to be a child. When I married her, she was only eighteen. I was ten years older. My thought was to educate her to a somewhat higher ideal of life than the frivolities of a fashionable world. It was a mistake. If a girl harbors delusions before marriage the experience of married life is not a cure but an incentive. A less tolerant man would have made her a safer husband."

Constance would listen to nothing which would disparage him.

"I hate to be unjust to her even in my thoughts, but where could she have found a better husband than you, dad?"

"Millionaire indeed!" protested Enid, breaking in with her own tumultuous thoughts. "I would not exchange you for twenty millionaires."

"My methods cannot have been so ill-considered if they have brought me two such daughters," he said, with a mournful smile. "But there! I am only deluding myself into a postponement of a painful duty. My secret must out—to you, at any rate. When I married your mother Constance, I was an attache at the British Embassy in Paris. Her maiden name was Madeleine Nanette de Courtray. Her family, notwithstanding the French sound of her name, was almost wholly English. They were Jersey people, recruited from British stock, but two generations of English husbands were compelled to assume the style de Courtray owing to entailed estates on the island. There is something quaint in the idea, as it worked out. The place was only a small farm. When we were married the stipulation lapsed, because it was more advisable for me to retain my own name. I was then the heir to a title I can now claim. I am legally and lawfully Sir Stephen Brand, ninth baronet, of Lesser Hambledon, in Northumberland."

"And you became a lighthouse-keeper!"

It was Enid who found breath for the exclamation. Constance braced herself for that which was to come. That Stephen Brand was a well-born man was not a new thing in their intelligence.

"Yes, a cleaner of lamps and transmitter of ship's signals. Have we been less happy?" A most vehement "No!" was the answer.

PAYMENT OF MEMBERS

It Is Likely that the Salary Will Be Placed at $2,500

A statement has been circulated to the effect that the British Government proposes in its Payment of Members Bill to fix the salary at $2,500 per annum. The idea at first was that $1,500 should be the amount, but it has been urged since that that is altogether inadequate, inasmuch as no man can possibly meet the ordinary expenses of a Parliamentary session out of such an allowance. The House of Commons may be the best club in London; nevertheless it is, like all other things that come under the category of the best, an expensive place. It is suggested that the Laborists are likely to object to anything more than $2,000.

PLAGUE OF SNAILS

A plague of snails on the coast of Ceylon is assuming serious proportions. Millions of snails are to be found, and some of them weigh as much as a pound.

Despair and Despondency

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG,
SICK WOMEN WELL.

It alleys inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. Ask Your Neighbors. They probably know of some of its many cures.

THE MINISTER RAISED PRICE FOR PRINTING

OTTAWA, Jan. 21.—Further evidence was taken to-day before the Committee on Public Accounts in respect to the Government Printing Bureau. The first witness was Rodolphe Boudreau, clerk of the Privy Council, who told Mr. Patenaude of the Bureau, of the over-stocking of carbon paper at the Bureau, and he advised him to speak about it to his chief, Mr. Gouldthrite. Patenaude later told him that Gouldthrite had said: "Don't worry, I'll explain later." Mr. Boudreau then directed the attention of the Secretary of State to what had been told him.

Mr. Robert A. Cook, a former employee of the Bureau, now dismissed told of a difference of opinion between himself and the Under Secretary of State regarding a return of printing done outside the Bureau He had made it up and included the cost of the paper. Mr. Mulvey had objected, and it was struck out, though the country paid for the paper

Noticed Over-stocking in 1909.

The over-stocking in the Bureau was brought to the attention by the chief stockkeeper, in July, 1909. Witness had spoken about it casually to when min isterxafifl fffi fft .:;:;.: the King's Printer. Sir Richard Scott, when minister, used to go to the Bureau once in a while. He had never seen Hon. Mr. Murphy there however, until the enquiry started Mr. Cook said further that certain books had been printed outside, and though only corrections were made from year to year, and the type kept standing, it was paid for each time as new work. The civil service list was a case in point.

Mr. Cook told of being in Montreal last April and of being advised by a paper manufacturer that he was not getting a fair show in supplies to the Bureau, and that when the Minister of Marine got better he would get him to take it up. Large purchases were being made by Gouldthrite from a jobber. He reported the case to the King's Printer. Much of the trouble in lithographing arose from bad copy furnished by the departments.

In one case 26 different proofs were so full of corrections that a name could not be written on the margin He had called Mr. Murphy's attention to it.

Quebec Bridge Report Costly.

Mr. Cook cited a case where the clerk of the House had given to a Quebec printing firm the job of printing the report of the Quebec Bridge Investigation. Witness allowed fifty cents a thousand words. The firm went to the Minister claiming the price was not high enough, and it was increased to 60 cents on his (Cook's) recommendation. The way in which the copy for the King's Regulation wes sent in by the Militia Department had doubled the cost. It was required in a hurry by the Militia Council.

EXPRESS RATES TO TUMBLE IN CANADA AS ELSEWHERE

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—Officers of Canadian and American express companies, in conference here to-day, announced to-night a reduction in through rates soon to take effect between all offices of the United States and many of Canada. It is explained that several of the Canadian companies have held back up to the present because the Customs regulations at the Canadian border necessitate so much extra work that a reduction in existing rates would in many cases work a hardship.

All the important companies were represented, including the Adams Canadian, American, National, Northern, Southern, Western, Pacific, and United States Express companies Wells-Fargo and Company and the New York and Boston Despatch.

The announcement made at the close of the close of the conference follows in part:

"Instead of two companies which may handle an express package making a separate charge on each line the charge will be the same as if one compmany had carried the package from the shipping point to destination

"In discussing the announcement one of the confreres said: "It has always been customary when express shipments were handled by two companies between which joint rates were not in effect to make the charge equal the sum of the local charges of each company. Under the new plan the charges between all offices will be the same as if one company had carried the package from shipping point to destination. This will effect a radical reduction in express charges on all shipments to or from what is known as exclusive offices, that is to say, points where bu one express compmany is represented.

MAY REVOLUTIONIZE GUNNERY IN THE BRITISH BATTLESHIPS

LONDON, Jan. 21.—The Telegraph prints a report on the development of naval gunnery which may double the present rate of hitting of the newest largest armored ships. The new battleship Neptune will leave Spithead on Saturday to make a series of gunnery trials in the Mediterranean The principal gunnery experts, including Vice-Admiral Sir Percy Scott inspector if target practice, will be on board to watch the trials.

The officials refuse all information regarding the experiments, which according to the Telegraph, are expected to lead to a revolution in gunnery. The nature of the reported development is not indicated more clearly than the suggestion that it is due to notable changes in construction compared with the original Dreadnoughts, principally in reference to the disposition of the guns.

The Neptune is the first vessel to have wing barbettes arranged in echelon, enabling two 12-inch guns in each of five barbettes to be trained on either beam. Moreover the aft barbettes are so designed that the guns of the inner one can be fired over the other.

On the result of the experiments depends the future construction of battleships.

THIEVES HOLD UP SOCIETY WOMAN AND HER GUESTS

NEW YORK, Jan. 21.—An unusual hold-up was successfully effected in a fashionable section of up-town New York, shortly before 1 o'clock, this morning. Mrs. Francis Elliott, a wealthy society woman, hed been entertaining a small party of guests at her home on West Forty-sixth street and her guests were just putting on their wraps and saying their good nights when five rough looking men pushed their way through the open door.

With drawn revolvers the intruders lined up the hostess and her guests in train robber fashion, and proceeded to go through the pockets of the men and the handbags of the women now and then pausing to remove a tempting bit of jewelry.

Mrs. Elliott and her friends were so thoroughly frightened by the threats and rough actions of the robbers that they made no outcry until the five had left the apartment. Then Mrs. Elliott called up the police headquarters. So far as known, the robbers got only $40 in money, but the value of the jewelry haul was not given.

In the afternoon block Hoppe scored 400 points to 180 for Mayer, but in the third block played to-night the Philadelphian gained a few points on the world champion, scoring 294 points, while Hoppe made his 400. Play was continued and Hoppe secured his 47 points, while Mayer made only 9. The grand total thus far is: Hoppe, 1,200; Mayer, 649. Hoppe must score 2,000 before Mayer scores 1400.

Cy is in pretty goo shape and he feels that a little chat or letter to Dunnie will settle matters satisfactorily.

A VOLCANIC WAVE.

What is often called a tidal wave may have no connection whatever with the ordinary tides. It should sometimes be credited to a volcanic upheaval of the bottom of the ocean. This fact was most plainly shown in the explosion of Krakatoa, which occurred on Aug. 27, 1883. The volcano was an island in the Strait of Sunda, between Sumatra and Java. The force of the outbreak was so great as to affect the level of the water in the river Thames. What were the effects produced in the strait is told by Mr. W. B. Worsfold in "A Visit to Java." He had the story from one who was then an engineer on a boat of the Netherlands India Steamship company:

We were anchored off Telokbetong, in Sumatra, when the chief officer and myself observed a dark line out at sea which bore the appearance of a tidal wave. While we were remarking this the captain rushed on to the bridge and telegraphed to the engine room to steam slow ahead up to the anchors.

I was engaged in carrying out these orders when the wave came up to the ship. First she dropped, then heaved up and down for some five minutes. There were three waves. When I came on deck again the long pier, which had been crowded with Europeans who had come out of the town—this pier, the houses and offices had disappeared. In fact, the whole town was gone.

A Government steamboat lying at anchor, with steam up, in the bay was landed high on the tops of the palm trees in company with some native boats. That was the first intimation we had that Krakatoa was in eruption, and from that time—eight o'clock—all through the day the rumbling thunders never ceased, while the darkness increased to a thick, impenetrable covering of smoky vapor.

Shortly after this we got under way and proceeded until the darkness made it impossible to go on farther. It was while we were thus enveloped in darkness that the stones and cinders discharged by the mountain began to fall upon the ship. In a short time the canvas awning and the deck was covered with ashes and stones to the depth of two feet, and all our available men were employed in removing the falling mass, which otherwise would have sunk the ship. We had a large number of natives on board and 160 European soldiers. The latter worked with the energy of despair at their task of clearing the deck.

While we were engaged in this struggle a new and terrible danger came upon us. This was the approach of the tidal wave caused by the final eruption, which occurred about half-past twelve to one o'clock in the afternoon. The wave reached us at two o'clock and made the ship tumble like a seesaw. Sometimes she was almost straight on end; at other times she heaved over almost on her beam ends. We were anchored and steaming up to our anchors as before and, as before, we manage to escape destruction. Well, you can fancy what it was like when I tell you that the captain was lashed with three ropes alongside the engine room companion, while I was lashed down below to work the engines. The men were dashed from one side of the engine room to the other.

Jumble of Languages.

There are towns in Hungary, and small towns, too, where from seven to ten idioms are constantly being used. On the Galician frontier there is in a lovely valley the old town of Eperjes. The number of its inhabitants does not exceed 12,000. To this day the good people of Eperjes are in the habit of talking or being talked to in six different languages and several dialects. An ordinary household will include a Slovac manservant, a Hungarian coachman, a German cook and a Polish chambermaid. What is still more remarkable, each grade of society will tenaciously cling to its own language for centuries.

Shared.

"I hope, Carruthers," said the sad parson, very gravely, "you don't spend all your earnings."

"No, sir," responded Carruthers respectfully; "I always makes it a strict rule, sir, never to spend more'n two-thirds of me wages, sir."

"Ah, that's good—that's good!" nodded the parson. "And do you put the other third in the bank?"

"Oh, no, sir," responded the man; "I puts it to much better use than that. I gives it to the missus to keep 'ouse on!"—London Telegraph.

His Translation.

"I wonder what this means," said Mrs. Hornbeak, who had encountered in the midst of her perusal of the village newspaper one of the many examples of the perversity to which the linotype is particularly prone. "It says here that Nathan Trilligan is walking with a cane because he spreaghknaichd shrdluwd cmfwypu cmfwypdwxsfiffiffficmfwyprdlu."

"Aw," replied honest Farmer Hornbeak, "prob'ly he slipped down and stepped on his own tongue."

Worse Luck.

"Did you ever figure in a lawsuit?"

"Nope. I just paid bills in one. My lawyers did the figuring."

To Teach Girls Cooking.

Vienna, Jan. 23.—A remarkable will was left recently by Fountz Bolor, a wealthy young bachelor and violent woman hater, who died in a Hungarian town.

During his lifetime the cause of his antipathy to women was never conjectured, but his curious will explains that he never married because modern women have little knowledge of the principles of cooking.

In order that young girls might be taught how to prepare food in a civilized manner he left his entire fortune to the municipality for the purpose of establishing a free cooking school. That he bestows on his relatives the privilege of daily free dinners at the school is an ironical observation made by the testator. The bequest has been accepted by the municipality.

Escaped From Flames.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 23.—About midnight the occupants of William Wylie's boarding-house at St. David's, which was formerly a hotel, were awakened by the light glare without. The fire quickly spread, the occupants escaping in night attire. Some leaped from the windows, but none were injured. The village has no waterworks system and assistance was summoned from here. The old hotel building and adjoining barn were totally destroyed. In the barn, which was afire, when the occupants of the house awoke, were four horses, and a cow burned to death. The rest of the live stock was rescued. The cause of the fire is unknown.

FIGHT PROVES FATAL

Italian Is Shot Through the Head in Montreal.

After Words Over a Woman, John Olander Is Found Dead In Gateway Near St. Dominique — Unknown Man Who Walked Through Gateway Is Believed to Have Been the Slayer—One Man Arrested.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—John Olander, an Italian, 35 years of age, who resided at 231 St. Martin street, was shot through the head in a gateway in Vitre street, near St. Dominique, on Saturday evening. He died in a few minutes.

The shooting is supposed to have been done by a fellow countryman, who was seen to empty the cartridge shell from his revolver after Olander fell, place the weapon in his pocket, and walk from the yard.

An ambulance from the General Hospital was summoned, but when it arrived, the physician, who accompanied it, said that life was extinct, and the body was taken to the morgue.

Words over a woman led to the quarrel that ended with the killing of Olander.

From what could be learned from the police, the woman's name is White. Detective Cowan arrested one Italian, a man named Frank Dorolo, 24 years of age. He was taken into custody early on Saturday. While there is so far nothing to connect him with the murder, he answers the description of a man seen walking through the gateway after the shooting, and it is thought that he knows something about it.

Chased the Firemen.

Toronto, Jan 23.—It is not often that the firemen are unwelcome when they come, but Saturday they were refused admission to 332 Parliament street. There had been a small fire at 11.28 in the morning, and somebody phoned for the firemen. Meanwhile the good lady of the house had fought it out with the infant blazes and whipped them to a frazzle. Therefore, she did not propose to have a herd of firemen tracking mud and snow on her spotless floors, and told them so, twice or more. Finally a bargain was made. The lady vowed that there was no more fire and the firemen departed.

Youngsters and matches caused a blaze in the kitchen of Chas. Davis' home at 219 Sumach street at 12.39 o'clock. The damage to the building was $20, and to the contents $200.

Moral Reform on Railroad.

New York, Jan. 23.—A despatch to The Tribune from Boston says: The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad has issued orders to its conductors to stop all card-playing on the trains of the system. Another order is that children shall not ride in the smoking-cars, either alone or accompanied by an older person. Conductors have been empowered to have arrested the parent or guardian of the child if accompanied by such, on failure to leave the car when so ordered. Hereafter no games of cards, games of chance, or the use of chips will be permitted. Complaints were made about the presence of card sharps on the trains and the fleecing of passengers.

Ottawa Faces Epidemic.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—As the result of the visit of a civic deputation to Montreal on Friday to investigate the hypochlorite treatment of water, City Engineer Kerr on Saturday took steps to begin purification of Ottawa's water at once. A special meeting of the council will be held to-day to sanction it. There were nearly 70 cases of typhoid reported in the city Saturday morning and the extent of the disease is rapidly assuming the proportions of an epidemic. Though the last samples of water sent to Toronto for analysis have not been reported upon, it is considered practically certain the typhoid is due to sewage contamination.

Pullman Car Rates.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—The Railway Commission will this week probably settle the rates in Pullman berths on the railways. The proposal to be laid before them by the companies will be for a 20 per cent. reduction on upper berths, and the lower will be charged on a mileage basis. As an example of the effect of the reductions, the dates out of Ottawa for upper berths will be: Toronto, now $8.50, will be $6.40; Vancouver, $17.50, down to $14; Montreal, $1.50, will be $1.20; New York has been $2.50, and will be $2. These rates will go into effect Feb. 1.

Perkins Medal Awarded.

New York, Jan. 23.—The Times says the American Society of Chemical Industry announces that the Perkins medal, which is awarded annually for important discoveries in applied chemistry, has been given this year to Charles M. Hall, who invented the process of producing aluminum at low cost.

The medal was first given to Sir William Henry Perkin, who discovered the first coal tar dyes, on the occasion of his visit to this country in 1906.

Bubonic Plague at Pekin.

Pekin, Jan. 23.—A number of deaths from the bubonic plague have occurred in this city since the first death from the disease here was reported on Friday. Delegation staffs are quarantining themselves within their own walls, having been unable to agree upon general measures for the entire legation quarter.

Offered Mediation.

Washington, Jan. 23.—In response to the request of Haiti, the American Government has formally tendered its good offices to both Haiti and Santo Domingo, in a friendly effort to bring about a settlement of the territorial dispute which is seriously threatening the peace of the two countries.

ADRIFT IN ATLANTIC.

Rescued Captain and Crew Had a Terrible Experience.

Halifax, N.S., Jan. 23.—Telling a tale of hardship almost unprecedented in the history of the North Atlantic, Captain Howard and crew of the Nova Scotia schooner H. J. Logan, which was abandoned off the Grand Banks on Dec. 19, arrived in Halifax on the Allan liner Hesperian from Liverpool. Captain Howard and his men were rescued from their waterlogged craft by the steamer Bardistan, bound from Norfolk for Bremen, after all hope of rescue had been abandoned.

The schooner, which was a four-master, and one of the last of her class now left in the province, sailed from Chatham, N.B., late in October for New York with a cargo of lathes. Off the Georges she ran into hurricane weather, which carried away her sails and rudder and also loosened her timbers, allowing the seats to sweep in. The pumps were kept working night and day, and the hardy seamen did all in their power to keep the big vessel on the American coast, but the gales carried her far off her course, and she drifted to the Grand Banks of Newfoundland.

Day after day, and night after night the aged captain and his men paced the deck expecting every moment that their ship would founder, as she pitched about in the trough of the sea. The provisions began to run out, and for days the crew were on short rations, which nearly added greatly to their sufferings. On the 19th of December Captain Howard decided to abandon his craft and signalled the Bardistan, which carried the men to Bremen.

The H. J. Logan was built in Parrsboro, and was owned by her captain. She was valued at $50,000.

New Minister of Justice?

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—It is reported here that Wallace Nesbitt, K.C., of Toronto, is to be Minister of Justice in succession to Sir Alan Aylesworth, who is slated for early retirement. It had been thought that Mr. Nesbitt was a Conservative, but it is stated that he has been close to the Government during the last few years. The fact that he has been exceedingly busy of late in addressing Canadian clubs and the like is taken to mean that he is paving the way for entrance into public life.

It is understood that he will run in Sir Alan Aylesworth's constituency of North York, if the statement that he is to become Minister of Justice is true, which it is affirmed it is.

Eight Chinese Killed.

Hankow, China, Jan. 23.—The death of a coolie, who was found in a state of collapse by the British police, resulted in serious disorders yesterday. The Chinese suspected that the police had killed the coolie, and rioting began in several sections. British and German gunboats landed detachments ,and fierce fighting followed, in which eight Chinese were killed. The viceroy is sending native troops to restore order.

Hankow is a treaty port of China, in the Province of Hu-Peh, on the Yang-tse-kiang. It is one of the largest cities of the empire, with a population of 850,000. Many foreign merchants reside in Hankow.

Calgary, Alta., Jan. 23.—James Winn, Calgary's immigration officer, dropped dead yesterday afternoon. He came to Calgary some twenty years ago from Cobourg, Ont. He was 75 years of age, and leaves a widow, one daughter and two sons. The deceased was very prominent in Masonic work, and was chaplain of the local lodge.

Berlin, Jan. 23.—Many hundreds of Socialist meetings were held throughout Prussia yesterday and resolutions of protest were adopted against the failure of the speech from the throne in the Lantag to mention franchise reform. Seventy-three meetings were held in Berlin alone. So far as reported there have been no disorders.

MUST FORTIFY PANAMA

Taft Says U. S. Navy's Efficiency Demands It.

President Addresses Panama Club In New York and Says There Is No Treaty Obligation That Will Prevent the U. S. From Fortifying the Canal—Andrew Carnegie Mild In His Applause.

New York, Jan. 23.—President Taft began in earnest his campaign for the fortification of the Panama Canal. His entire speech at the annual dinner of the Penna Society in New York was devoted to this subject.

In the Senate the President has been told the sentiment in favor of the fortifications is almost two to one. The House seems pretty evenly divided, but not along partisan lines.

In his speech last night the President declared there was absolutely no treaty obligations in the way of fortifying the canal; that the United States had every right and reason to protect what was purely an American waterway.

The President said he yielded to no man in his love of peace and hatred of war. He said he hoped to submit soon to the Senate arbitration treaties of a broader nature than had ever come before that body or any other legislative body of the world. At the same time, Mr. Taft cautioned his hearers that universal peace was still a long way off, and he could not conceive of any patriotic American being willing to allow an attacking force free and equal use of a waterway which was built by Americans largely as an instrument for the defence of their country.

The President recalled that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty of 1850 was made with Great Britain at a time when neither country contemplated building the canal. After the failure of the French company, he recalled, came the Spanish-American war, and the 12,000 mile cruise of the Oregon demonstrated the necessity for the canal to double the efficiency of the U. S. fleet. He quoted at length from the correspondence between John Hay and Lord Lansdowne in support of his proposition that nothing in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty precluded the right of the U. S. to fortify the canal.

"Suppose," said the President, "that England is at war with some other country that is not bound to us by treaty rights at all, isn't it essential that we should have fortifications here to protect the canal, not only for our own use and for the world's commerce, but for the use of England and her warships as a means of passage? In other words, we have to preserve that canal as a means of transit to belligerents in time of war as long as we are not ourselves engaged in the controversy."

It was interesting to watch the face of Andrew Carnegie as the President warmed to his argument and hammered home his points.

"Can we feel entirely safe from injury from some irresponsible belligerents?" demanded the President. There was a chorus of "Noes," but the ironmaster did not join in them. He followed the speech closely, but applauded seldom. It was not until the President spoke in favor of broader arbitration that he earned Mr. Carnegie's applause. Then the champion of peace stood up in his enthusiasm, and waved his napkin about his head. But he subsided again when the President admitted that it was still a possibility, and did not join in the cheers that marked the close of the address, although he applauded mildly with the others.

Picked Out Landing Place.

Havana, Jan. 23.—J. A. McCurdy, who is to make a flight from Key West to Havana and who arrived here on Saturday on the U. S. torpedo boat destroyer Paulding, for the purpose of picking out a suitable landing place, inspected the parade ground and polo field at Camp Columhis present intention to start to-polo field was an ideal spot for landing. He will leave here to-day on the Paulding for Key West, and it is his present intentio nto start tomorrow morning between eight and nine o'clock on the voyage to Cuba. He expects to make the run in two hours should the present favorable conditions continue. He will circle Morro Castle and then follow the line of the Maleoon drive along the shore to the camp.

Workman Killed.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—On the Canadian Northern Railway at an early hour yesterday morning, at Maisonneuve a snowplow ran down and killed Joseph Dulhaime of Charlemagne, who was going to his work and was walking on the track. Two others who were also present, named Beauchamp and Goulet, 17 and 18 years of age respectively, were also run down and badly injured. In fact, they may or may not live. The inquest will take place to-day.

Died at Prayers.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 23.—Leo Longo, 12-year-old son of Antony Longo, a well-known fruit dealer of this town, died while kneeling at his prayers in St. Mary's Church, about 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

The boy had been to confession during the afternoon, and was in the church repeating his prayers when he fell over while kneeling and died almost instantly. Death was the result of heart failure.

Whirled to Death.

Schenectady, N.Y., Jan. 23.—As J. Krygowski, an employe at the American Locomotive Works, was about to replace a chain on a sprocket wheel of a machine used to straighten scrap iron, his sleeves caught in the cogs and he was whirled about until his legs had been torn from his body, his head crushed and his clothes completely ripped off. He then fell 15 feet to the floor and was picked up dead.

TO BEGIN CANAL?

Money Said to Be Provided For the Georgian Bay System.

Ottawa, Jan. 23.—It is now regarded as a settled fact that this year will see a start on the Georgian Bay Canal. A special estimate of three million dollars, allowing for a beginning, has been prepared, and it is expected that it will shortly be brought down. Confirmation of the report is indicated in the remarks of Hon. Rodolphe Lemieux at Montreal, and also in statements that have been made by some of the Ministers to members for constituencies particularly interested in the work.

The amount proposed as a starter will be quite sufficient for this year, as by the time it is spent the next session will have convened. Then the big expenditure will be made at the two ends — Montreal and the French River.

Whether the route at Montreal will be in front of the city or by the Back River is an open question. Each has its advocates, but the latter, it is said, is the cheaper by two million dollars.

It is understood that while the work will be done by contract it will be a Government undertaking, rather than that of a private company with a bond guarantee. The canal, like the others of the Canadian system, would in all probability be free.

Two Killed In Railway Wreck.

North Portal, Sask., Jan. 23.—Word was received here Saturday morning that a bad wreck had occurred on the Portal section of the Soo Line, near Macoun. A rotary plow, going from Estevan to Weyburn to work on the forward branch, had a rear-end collision with No. 205 passenger train. After being in a snowdrift for eighteen hours near Kenmore, the passenger train left North Portal at 3.30 Saturday morning, running with the mail car in the rear owing to broker draw-bar. This undoubtedly saved the lives of many passengers.

Two passengers in the sleeper were killed and one of the mail clerks seriously injured. Two coaches went into the ditch. Trainmaster Hakette left here immediately on a special for the scene of the wreck.

The names of the unfortunate passengers who were killed in the smash are: P. J. Hunt, commercial traveler, ticketed from Toronto to Seattle, and R. Chapman, traveler, Toronto to Calgary.

The names of the injured mail clerks are: Lewis Manahan and Greenhaugh. A porter named Coble was also injured. All the injured are expected to recover.

Macoun is situated on the Canadian Pacific branch line between Moose Jaw and Portal, where the Soo Line connects with the Canadian Pacific. It is the first station north of Estevan.

Stamping Out Consumption.

London, Jan. 23.—In a letter to Hall Caine, who has been advocating Government measures with the object of stamping out consumption, principally through the state taking charge of all consumptives, David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, makes the interesting announcement that he has already been considering the practicability of dealing with the problem in connection with his forthcoming scheme of invalidity insurance.

The Chancellor says that the chief difficulty is financial, and that it will be especially hard to estimate the maximum contribution which can be levied on workingmen. However, he expresses himself as hopeful of doing something to arrest the terrible scourge, "whose livid wheals are deeply marked on the face of Great Britain."

Good for Newfoundland.

St. John's, Nfld., Jan. 23.—The decision of the United States Treasury that duty must be collected on fish cargoes purchased abroad and taken to American ports in American fishing vessels, is regarded in the Government circles here as likely to operate to the advantage of Newfoundland fishermen, who will be able to compete on equal terms in American markets with American vessels. Heretofore American vessels have secured free entry for fish purchased by them.

One outcome of the decision is expected to be the employment of colonial vessels to carry herring cargoes from the southern bays. The colonial Cabinet will not grant American vessels permits to purchase cargoes there, and The Hague decision denies them access to these bays.

Killed Father In Defence of Husband.

Cravenette, Ark., Jan. 23.—Mrs. Nellie Allen, 21 years old, shot and killed her father, John B. Boyer, a wealthy planter, at their home near Maysville Saturday, after the two had exchanged half a dozen shots. Boyer and the woman's husband, John Allen, were in a quarrel. Boyer rushed on Allen with a drawn knife, when Mrs. Allen opened fire. Boyer returned the fire, but his bullets went wild, while one of them from the woman's revolver pierced his brain.

Sailors Fought.

Frankfort, Germany, Jan. 23.—The Zeitung's Constantinople correspondent reports a serious collision between British sailors and Turks at Dubuya in the Indian Ocean. Several bluejackets were killed. The Britishers, according to the despatch, afterwards bombarded Dubuya.

Her Propellor Broken.

London, Jan. 23.—The British steamer British Sun, from London for Philadelphia, was spoken with her propellor broken on Jan. 17, in latitude 46, longitude 43, by the German steamer Breslau, which passed Scilly yesterday from Baltimore for Bremen.

SUES FOR CONSPIRACY

Mr. David Russell Enters Long Awaited Action.

Montreal Man Claims $200,000 From Pinkerton Agency, and Their Representative In Montreal, Alleging That They Gave Him False Information and Then Tried to Have Him Thrown Into an Asylum.

Montreal, Jan. 23.—The long-promised action of David Russell against the alleged conspirators was begun Saturday by his action of $200,000 through Hickson & Campbell, against the Pinkertons of Chicago and New York, as well as John W. MacNamara, the head of the Montreal office.

Russell alleges in his plea now before the courts that he hired the Pinkertons to investigate a badger game and that he received false information. After declaring that an effort was made to give him a sleeping draught, the plea goes on to say, "More especially, and in furtherance of their said plot and conspiracy, the defendants, acting as aforesaid, plotted and conspired to have plaintiff declared insane and of unsound mind, and, as such, incarcerated in an asylum or resort for insane persons in the state of New York. In furtherance of their plot and conspiracy, as aforesaid, the defendants wilfully and maliciously spread the false and libelous rumor and report throughout the city of Montreal and elsewhere that, in fact, plaintiff was of unsound mind, and mentally deranged, and that he should be restrained in an asylum.

"In furtherance of their said plot and conspiracy, the defendants also maliciously made similar false and libelous statements, and reports to members of plaintiff's family, and to his employes and intimate friends and acquaintances, for the purpose of deceiving and misleading them; and they in fact did deceive and mislead them.

"That moreover, the defendants and others (whose names are presently unknown to plaintiff) unlawfully cooperating with them, did, in fact, send to plaintiff false and misleading telegrams, and the defendant, McNamara, did cause to be sent to plaintiff a decoy telegram signed by another, and did further personally write and send to plaintiff two other telegrams, which he forged in the name of another, the whole in order to detain plaintiff in the city of New York, until defendants' plot and conspiracy was sufficiently perfected, to enable defendant to commence "action," to wit, on the 21st day of October last, 1910, when the plan of action as prepared by defendants was to enter the plaintiff's room at the Manhattan Hotel in the city of New York and there to "overpower" him and procure plaintiff's incarceration in a lunatic asylum without opportunity for defence or remonstrance by plaintiff, through the investigations of the William J. Burns National Detective Agency of New York."

It is understood that Donald MacMaster has worked up the legal part of the case, but the detective work was done by the famous New York officer, W. J. Burns, who spent several weeks in this city, and who has succeeded in winding a net around several people, making the case one of the most interesting ever brought before the Montreal courts. A trial by jury is asked for, and the arrests will follow as the case proceeds.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

We recently visited an electric plant having eight dynamos that supply energy for twelve elevators, three thousand lights twenty motors, besides lighting two large theatres. The eight dynamos in this power-house are connected together, so that they furnish a common fund of energy. Several times the wires that conduct energy have become grounded and then a large amount of the electricity leaked away to the earth. Under this condition the elevators were run and the theatres lighted but the dynamos were necessarily strained to their utmost capacity which rapidly wears and burns them out, thus making the 'brains' of the plant of very short lift.

To be continued.

WHITE MAN'S HOPE FOR CHAMPIONSHIP

A Monster of a Man Who Has Advantage in Size and In Years Over Johnson

Carl Morris, a young giant who was born in Kentucky, but now hails from Tulsa, Oklahoma, is now the white man's hope for wresting the pugilistic championship from Jack Johnson, the colored expert. Morris is a comparative novice, and it is proposed to try him out against one or more good heavyweights before challenging Johnson.

It is probable that Morris has physical advantages over every other heavyweight in the world. He is 6 feet 4 inches tall, has a reach of 80 1-2 inches, and he has trained down to 235 pounds. He weighed 300 last June. He has never indulged in liquor or tobacco in any form and is a stickler for health rules. He is married and owns a home in Sapulpa. Ever since he disposed of Hart with two broken ribs, a fractured nose, and other injuries, Morris has been discussed all over the United States.

In spite of his size and weight, Morris is said to be extremely fast and active. It is rather interesting to compare such of his measurements as are known with those of Jack Johnson. The two shape up as follows:

Age—Johnson, 33 years; Morris, 2[illegible] years.

Weight—Johnson, 205 pounds Morris, 235 pounds.

Height—Johnson, 6 feet 1 inch Morris, 6 feet 4 inches.

Chest—Johnson, 40 inches; Morris 49 inches.

Reach—Johnson, 72 inches; Morris 81 inches.

This gives Morris the advantage of 30 pounds in weight, 3 inches in height, and 9 inches in reach over the champion. His normal chest measure is 9 inches greater than Johnson's and within 2 inches of what Jeffries chest measures expanded.

Morris has been in six battles, the longest four rounds.

The following are the names of the fighters he has faced and finished:

Tim Husley, knockout, third round

Ed. Anderson, knockout, third round.

Battling Britt, knockout, 1 minute 10 seconds.

Jim Harper, knockout, third round

Marvin Hart, won, fourth round.

Spike Kennedy, knockout, second round.

The fights with Harper and Anderson were held in Tulsa, so the promoters there have had a chance to size up the man from Sapulpa, and the fact that they are willing to offer a big purse for his appearance with some good heavyweight shows that they believe that Morris has ability.

FOOT RACING.

New Haven, Conn., Jan. 22.—John Svanberg, of Sweden, won the fifteen mile marathon race here last night at the Casino, in one hour, 30 minutes and 44 seconds. Henry St. Yves, of France, was running a close second to Svanberg in the tenth mile when he turned his right ankle.

Kimberley, Cape Colony, Jan. 21.—Jack Donaldson, the South African professional sprinter to-day ran 150 yards in 14 seconds. This is a new world's record, bettering both the amateur and professional records.

The amateur record for 150 yards was made by R. E. Walker, of South Africa, in April, 1909. He covered the distance in 14 1-5 seconds. Walker since then has turned professional. Harry Hutchens ran 150 yards in 14 1-2 seconds. This has stood as the professional record.

The parlor match is to be prohibited if a bill introduced a few days ago by representative Mann, of Illinois, becomes a law. It prohibits the transportation of white or yellow phosphorus matches under the penalty of a fine of $1,000 and imprisonment for three years.

Recent investigations by the government have shown that the use of phosphorus in the making of matches is attended with such danger to the health of the employees that President Taft urged in his message legislation looking toward the betterment of conditions.

MAN WITH A WOODEN LEG.

One of the Best Civil War Stories Ever Told.

OLD CROPONE, as he was called, walked on a crutch after he lost a leg in the civil war. One day he was at the Macaroni club in Boston and was prevailed upon to tell the story of the missing member. He began by relating that there was a bunch of Union men, some of whom had lost a leg in the same battle and one had lost both. They were removed to a southern mansion soon after the battle.

"One day," he went on, "word was brought that a woman had crossed through the lines and would visit us that day. It is wonderful how a woman's visit will spruce up low ebb courage in a sick man. There we lay watching the door, and at last she appeared. She carried on her arm a basket filled with little packages which she distributed to the cots as she came along, meanwhile talking to each invalid. She wasn't what you would call a pretty woman—in fact, she would be called plain—but the influence of the hour and her presence made her appear to me angelic. I could hardly wait for her to reach my bed and hear her low spoken words of comfort. Her progress was very slow, and the poor fellows kept her talking to them as long as they could. I got to wondering what it was that she gave each of them as she left the cots and from the size of the package guessed that it might be tobacco.

"At last she came to me. I thanked her in advance for her kindness and told her in my plain words how cheering her presence made us feel—that if we took a new lease on life we owed it to her visit.

"She held her finger up to me in warning and said she had orders to do all the talking and not to tire us out. Then she began:

"'Sometimes trials are given us for a purpose. Who can tell? It may be that the wise Creator wishes to soften our hearts and cleanse us of our sins. Hardships come upon us—sickness, blindness and lameness—and they all mean chastisement of the carnal spirit. You are all on the road to recovery, and when you once more reach your loved ones at home it will not be an easy matter to resist the pleasures that have been denied you so long. I want you to promise me something before I leave your camp. If you do it will quite repay me for the risk and trouble I have undergone to be with you now.'

"I was ready to promise anything, sight unseen. Who could resist a woman in tears with a sob in her throat, especially under such conditions? But she interrupted me again:

"'You cannot promise my request until you know what I am going to ask you and not until you have fully understood its significance. I shall leave this little token with you and return in an hour. Then you will know. A pledge to me is sacred and should never be given unless with the intention of keeping it.'

"She left the room solemnly, and I fell to my package with all due haste. It was tied with a blue ribbon, and the first sentence on its printed page struck me with amazement. I was hit in a vulnerable spot. The sin she was asking me to blot out was one I loved dearly, yet I knew before she returned to that room that I should give her my pledge."

"What was she after?" we yelled in chorus.

"Her crusade was against the 'Evils of Waltzing.' I promised her then and there that I would never dance again. That was thirteen years ago, and I have kept my word."—John Mason in Associated Sunday Magazine.

MAYORALTY RECOUNT IS IN PROGRESS

Four Wards Counted Up To Adjournment--Ackerman Had Gained One

The recount of the ballots cast in the recent Mayoralty election took place to-day before Judge Deroche. Mayor-elect Ackerman was represented by Mr. J. F. Wills, whilst Mr. F. J. Butler looked after Mr. Thomas' interests. When the adjournment took place at 12.30 for lunch about one half of the ballots had been recounted and no change in the result as announced on the evening of the election had taken place.

LATER

Mr. Ackerman has gained one in Bleecker Ward.

The recount has been virtually completed, although a few ballots were reserved for argument, not enough, however, as stated by the Judge to affect the general result.

Smart, but Not a Hobble.

To follow the fashions at a safe distance should be the sartorial aim of the business girl who does not wish to spend all her salary on her clothes, but who likes a few dollars a week to "blow" in having a "good time."

The little frock pictured is a smart model which follows the present style in a sensible way. The bodice is of the peasant cut, and the skirt, though narrow, is not a hobble. The band of black satin is a modish feature, and the sleeves have the new flare at the elbow. It's altogether a most delectable little frock, and, let it be whispered low, it costs, ready made, only $15.

Her Secret

Why She Always Looked So Young

Everyone refers to her as one of the most attractive women in town. It wasn't her features, for while regular, they were not unusual. But the charm lay in the head of splendid, vigorous hair that made a veritable crown. It had that peculiar lustre and the sun gave it an added brilliance —you couldn't look at her without unconsciously commenting on the beauty of her hair.

When asked how she kept it so beautiful she replied that it was no secret, simply proper shampooing, regular combing and the conscientious use of Hirsutone. She admitted it had not always been in that condition, but that she found Hirsutone the best thing she ever got for the hair. It gave the scalp such a cool, refreshed feeling, and the hair was so much easier to dress after its use.

There are plenty of heads that would be just as attractive for Hirsutone soon brings the hair and scalp into good condition.

Your Nyal Drug Store will cheerfully guarantee Hirsutone to do all that is claimed for it, and every woman owes it to herself to try it.

Cookery Points

Sift two quarts of flour, which would be eight measuring cupfuls, with a level tablespoonful of salt and one-half cupful of sugar. Heat two cupfuls of milk to the scalding point, add one-quarter cupful of lard, and when lukewarm turn in one-half yeast cake dissolved in a little cool water. Make a hole in the center of the flour, pour in the mixture, but do not stir. Cover and set away to rise light. When risen mix and knead and let rise again. Repeat the rising and cut down, then roll out, cut in rounds, brush half of each with melted butter, fold over and let rise in a pan set closely together. Bake in a hot oven.

Dutch Apple Cake.

Two cups of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one egg, one scant cupful of milk, four sour apples, three tablespoonfuls of sugar, three teaspoonfuls of shortening. Work in shortening, rubbing it with flour though a fork with a knife. Add beaten egg to milk. Combine ingredients, mixing with a knife and as little as possible. Spread dough one-half inch thick on a greased plate. Place the peeled and sliced apples evenly, shape edges of dough, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and add a few drops of melted butter before cooking.

Banana Dainty.

Mix two tablespoonfuls of cornstarch with a little cold milk, boil one cupful of milk in the chafing dish, stir in the mixed cornstarch, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar and stir till it boils, then let cook very slowly for fifteen minutes, stirring all the time. Stir in three yolks of eggs, half a grated lemon rind and the strained juice of the half lemon. Cook till it thickens, but do not allow it to boil. Peel and slice four ripe bananas, place the slices in a glass dish, sprinkle over with sugar and half a wineglassful of sherry wine. When the custard is cold pour it over the bananas and let it set.

Delicious Creamed Tongue.

Boil a calf's tongue the day before you wish to use it. Put it in boiling salted water and when tender let it cool in the same water. Peel and trim off all the rough places about the root and slice in small pieces. Melt two tablespoons butter in your saucepan, add one and one-half cups of rich milk; when hot blend in three level tablespoons of flour, one-half teaspoon salt, pinch of nutmeg, a dash of cayenne pepper and a teaspoon minced parsley. When smooth and creamy add two cups of sliced tongue and serve very hot with a good dish of French fried potatoes and fresh baking powder biscuits.

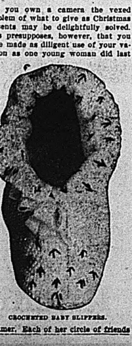
CHRISTMAS GIFTS

The Question of What to Give Settled by Camera.

FOR THE INVALID FRIEND.

Mother Goose Book Suitable Present For Small Boy or Girl—Date Pad a Good Selection For the Socially Active Woman.

If you own a camera the vexed problem of what to give as Christmas presents may be delightfully solved. This presupposes, however, that you have made as diligent use of your vacation as one young woman did last summer. Each of her circle of friends received a gift from her camera given in a novel manner.



CROCHETED BABY SLIPPERS.

For the invalid friend were many reminders of days in the country in the way of suggestive scenes—as a robin's nest in the crotch of an old apple tree, pussy willows growing beside a brook, an old mill in its picturesque setting.

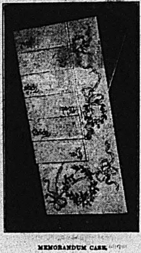
A suitable frame for the pictures was made from birch bark with an oval of glass to be hung in the window, where it formed a beautiful transparency. A few more photos were added to the collection, so that a new and charming view could be slipped in for every day of the month.

For a little girl she made a book from cardboard shaped like a little house. This was covered with grass linen in the natural color. The doors and windows were touched up in sepia, and on the old fashioned doorplate was the name "Mother Goose." All through the pages of the book moved a lively procession of Mother Goose friends and relatives sketched in with pen and ink.

Eggshell board comes in pretty, delicate tints of blue and pink and may be made up into little photo booklets, the pages decorated with wild or garden flowers, scrolls or dainty figures, suitable for the photos to be framed, as for a child's photos taken in sequence, two or three in a year, perchance, from the tender age of the baby to "sweet sixteen."

Crocheted slippers are not novelties, but the dainty ones seen in the illustration are very new. They are crocheted not from wool, but from mercerized cotton in a lovely shade of baby blue. At the toe is inserted a square of white crocheted cotton flecked with black in imitation of ermine fur. At the top of the shoe is a turnover effect of the ermine caught together with a tiny rosette of blue ribbon. The soles are not of fleece, but of leather, satin lined.

A charming accessory for the boudoir is a memorandum case into which one can slip important memos for the week and destroy them as they serve their purpose. The stand with an easel back is about twenty inches in height and a third of that measurement in width. The material may be linen or silk, but moire poplin is far the most attractive as a background for pretty ribbonsene embroidery in dainty blues, pinks, white and green. The pockets are six in number, one for each day of the week, and the proper abbreviation for each day is printed thereon in gold.



MEMORANDUM CASE.

Gross Carelessness.

Tom bought a gallon of spirits to take home and by way of a label wrote his name upon a card, which happened to be the seven of clubs, and tied it to the handle. A friend, coming along and observing the jar, quietly remarked, "That's an awful careless way to leave that liquor."

"Why?" asked Tom.

"Because somebody might come along with the eight of clubs and take it."

Like a Streak.

"Was his auto going very fast?"

"Your honor, it was going so fast that the bulldog on the seat beside him looked like a dachshund."

Queered Himself.

"Ah, Mr. Jimsoll," exclaimed the kittenish lady with the plenitude of powder on her face, "you must remember I am a daughter of Eve."

"Well honestly," replied the blundering man, "you don't look half that old."

HAVE YOU A "SLICKER?"

It's the Smith College Girls' Rainy Day Costume.

WATCH YOUR STEP, LADIES!

Bags of Many Kinds—Smart Reticules Made of Old Brocade That Can Be Turned Out at Home in Professional Fashion.

Dear Elsa—A girl I know at Smith college wrote to me last week asking me to get a "slicker" for her. "All the girls here have slickers," she rambled on in her letter, "and as they can't be bought in this town of Northampton I'm bothering you to secure one for me."

"Heavens and earth!" I gasped. "What is a slicker?"

As the girl said something about getting this thing at a rubber store I hied me there and found out.

Well, for your unregenerate soul I'll tell you that a slicker is not an oilskin worn by fisher folk and the like, but the black rubber coat and shiny helmet that firemen wear. Arrayed in this slicker costume, the Smith girls have solved the problem of keeping dry in a pouring rain. No more fruitless searches for the umbrella, no more bedraggled hats and sloppy skirts at Smith. Girls in long black rubber coats and shiny helmets pour out of the campus houses and stream to chapel. No fond mother could identify her own daughter in the host of rubber clad figures splashing through the rain, the faces hidden beneath low visors which come down almost to the shoulders, but if one looks intently there is a decided difference in the way the class beauty tilts her helmet in coquettish fashion from the headgear of the president of the Philosophical society. No one, though, can fail to admit that the Smith girl escapes many ills by her sensible rainy day costume, and it's economical, too—$2.50 for a slicker and 50 cents for a shiny black helmet. Let's get a slicker and helmet and be up to date.

GINGER ALE PUNCH.

Judging Character by Feet.

Yes, I've been gathering in a lot of queer information these days, and the latest was learned from an observant member of the masculine persuasion. He told me that the way wise men judged a woman's character was by studying her feet. "Note," says this wise guy, "how the step reflects the state of body and mind—the mincing step of the small minded and the kicking of the sidewalk by the energetic, nervous woman." "How about the hobble walk?" I inquired of my instructor, with much interest. "What does that indicate?"

The wise one answered, "She who changes her gait with the fashions lacks originality." It sounds prosaic, but the foot's the thing and loudly talks if you will listen to it. Do you see that girl who strides and shakes her hips with each step? She is coarse. There goes one with a short step and toes pointing straight forward. She will make a neat and economical wife. Note the girl who shuffles. She'll wear a slovenly dressing gown when she ought to be bewitching in a smart negligee. That bit of femininity with a not too slow but regular stride puts a high price on herself, but will always command respect and can be relied upon as being "good form." She will be a shoulder to shoulder companion to a man and not a mate of the ivy type.

"These points may serve as both a warning and a guide to both sexes," continued my informant, "and when an individual turns the right toe in he may as well label himself or herself 'egoist,' just as one who pounds the sidewalk with the heel announces a dislike of being contradicted." So I say to you, Elsa, dear, mind the step.

How to Tell a Woman's Age.

But worse than all the signs of the times is the awful fact that some one in England has discovered how to tell exactly a woman's age. What punishment will fit the crime perpetrated by this scientist? But it's accomplished—the divulgence of this well kept secret, by an ordinary watch and the possession of the wrist of the victim. It seems that in counting her pulse if it registers sixty-nine beats per minute her age is between twenty and twenty-five years. Another five years seventy-one beats go to the minute, and to the woman of thirty is permitted—well, let's change the subject. Horrible invention, isn't it?

Now to talk of pleasanter things. It is without doubt the day of the little bag. And the girl who has a limited amount of money with which to buy small accessories should be devoutly thankful for the fashion, as with a little industry she can turn out the smartest sort of reticule with her own hands. The easiest variety of bag to make is one of old brocade. To make it the top is drawn into a wide box plait on each side by means of four eyelets an inch apart and a half inch below the top. A narrow strip of wood two inches and a quarter long, with holes to correspond to the two central eyelets, is placed on each half of the bag. This is held to the brocade by the cord run through two slits in the material between the central eyelets and the corresponding holes in the wood. The lacers are then run in opposite directions and draw up firmly and easily.

Here, too, is the recipe I promised you for ginger ale punch, which I found in the Boston Cooking School Magazine: Melt one and three-fourth cups of sugar in one cup of lemon juice and stir in one quart of ginger ale. When the sugar is melted freeze to a mush. Serve in cocktail glasses with or after the meat course. Half a cupful of sauterne may be mixed through the ice after it is frozen. With best wishes for the success of your dinner, devotedly,

MABEL.

Some people don't believe in taking chances. Although the chances are 1 in 10,000,000 that the earth will be struck by a comet, every time a new comet is hailed some persons have to send for the doctor.

It is a good thing that the census is taken only once in ten years. The disappointment, if suffered oftener, might prove too much for some weak hearts in thriving towns.

CITY COUNCIL ORDERS INVESTIGATION INTO SALE OF CITY LOTS

The first regular meeting since the inauguration of the City Council was held last evening, and during the session considerable business was transacted. A number of interested spectators were present for the greater portion of the meeting, which was prolonged until 11.30 p.m.

The members present were Mayor Ackerman, Ald. Vermilyea, Caldwell, McGie, Parks, St. Charles, Marshall, Chown, Anderson, Adams, Clarke, Riggs, Lott, Bogle, Canning, Woodley, Sills, Thompson, Panter and Flagler.

After reading and confirming of the minutes of last meeting, the Council went into Committee of the Whole on Reports, Communications, etc., Ald. Woodley in the chair.

The reports of the various committees, as already published, were taken up and the accounts were adopted without discussion.

DECREASED ASSESSMENT.

The Executive Committee recommended that the assessment on the Deacon Shirt Company's new building be $3,520, including business tax and this assessment to be for a period of ten years.

Ald. Lott thought that this was a matter that should be considered before being acted upon. Other parties had suffered from fire and had had no reduction in their assessment made.

Mayor Ackerman said that Messrs. Deacon had not asked for the assessment recommended, but a number of citizens had written to the Council to take action in this matter and make a lower assessment owing to the company's loss.

Ald. Vermilyea stated that the Deacon Company had not asked for the recommendation proposed, but it was as the Mayor had stated.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE THE SALE OF CITY LOTS

Long Debate on the Subject at Last Night's Meeting—An Amendment Voted Down—Correspondence as to Grand Trunk Bonus--Consideration for the Deacon Company--The Early Closing Bylaw Repealed--Other Business

Ald. Clarke was of the opinion that the recommendation should be laid upon the table for further consideration and a motion to that effect prevailed.

TENDERS ASKED FOR.

Recommendations prevailed that tenders for 30 or 40 cords of hard heads and for a quantity of cement be advertised for.

INCREASE TO FIREMEN.

The Fire Committee recommended that the increase of $25 per annum be paid the firemen of the city.

Ald. Canning said that at present 20 firemen were on the pay sheet and they received $100 per year. The increase proposed was $25 per man and also that they be provided with a rubber hat, rubber coat and a pair of rubber boots. He was in favor of the committee's recommendation.

An amendment prevailed that the matter be referred back to the Fire Committee for further consideration.

SALE OF PROPERTY.

The Railway and Industrial Committee recommended that an offer be made of the 100 feet on Coleman St. south of the Graves property, and all land east of the Graves property to 18 feet from the river line of the revetment wall for $800, provided the McLaughlin people agree to erect a brick, stone or cement reinforced building of the value of $6,000.

Ald. Bogle said that the matter had been considered by the Industrial Committee and the result was the recommendation as presented by the committee.

Mr. Lee, representing the McLaughlin Company, was, on motion, heard in reference to the matter. He said it was the intention of the company to erect a building, and the company wanted about 100 feet south of the present building on the south east corner of Coleman and West Bridge street. It would be a building for the storage of carriages and automobiles. The building proposed to be erected would cost about $6,000.

Ald. Riggs asked the Solicitor if the city had the right to sell to a private individual any land which was used as a park.

City Solicitor—The city had the right to sell if it desired. He was not aware that there was a by-law setting apart that portion of land as a park.

Ald. Clarke favored the referring back of the matter to the Industrial Committee for further consideration.

Mayor Ackerman was of the opinion that the matter should be settled to-night. The city had an opportunity of having a $6,000 building erected.

Mr. Lee said the company would be prepared to commence building operations on March 1st if they procured the property they desired.

The recommendation of the committee was amended so as to read 50 feet south of the present building and eastward to within 11 feet of the outside of the revetment wall, and the price to be paid by the McLaughlin Company to be $500 for said land.

In answer to a question Mr. Lee said that he thought the company could have the building erected by the 1st of July of this year and a motion to that effect was passed.

A lengthy communication was read from ex-Mayor Marsh in reference to certain insinuations made by the Property Owners' Association, and he thought that Council should take no action until a definite charge was made. As to the Association being composed of all property owners, the writer said this had not been fully shown.

Ald. Lott—Let some one make a definite charge if one can be made.

Ald. Panter said the letter was just ex-Mayor Marsh's opinion, and the only thing to do with it was to file it.

A motion to that effect was adopted.

A JUDICIAL INVESTIGATION.

A communication was read from Mr. J. F. Wills, as Secretary of the Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association, presenting to the Council the following resolutions which were adopted at a recent meeting of the Association:

"That we would recommend, that the City Council at its next meeting do petition the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to appoint a commission to enquire into the financial affairs of the corporation, and things connected therewith, respecting particularly the years 1909-1910, and such other years and affairs as it may find necessary to have the fullest investigation into any and all matters in question referring to the affairs of the Corporation, as provided for in Section 428 of the Municipal Act.

"That this Association request that the City Council take immediate steps to secure an amendment to the judgment of the Board of Railway Commissioners compelling the dredging of the river before the construction of the C.N.R. bridge."

Ald. Clarke moved that the communication be referred to the Executive Committee.

The recommendation was adopted without discussion.

W. C. A. GRANT.

The Woman's Christian Association asked the Council to make as large a grant as possible to the Association for the hospital and the Home for the Friendless.

A motion prevailed to refer the communication to the Executive Committee.

G. T. R. MATTERS.

A communication was read from Mr. E. Donald, of the G. T. R. office in Montreal, in reference to protesting against the request that the company refund $25,000 to the city in lieu of removing certain of its shops, etc., outside of the city limits.

City Clerk Mikel stated that plans were being prepared for presentation to the Legislature to have certain lands and buildings, including the new round house, annexed to the city.

Ald. Panter asked the Clerk if he thought the G. T. R. would be favorable to annexing to the city.

City Clerk—The communication did not indicate that such was the company's desire.

Ald. Bogle said that in the communication there was an imputation that the city was getting out of the G. T. R. all it was entitled. A con-

BOY SLAIN IN PLAY

ANN ARBOR, Mich., Jan. 23.—The death of Frank Campbell, seven years old, has furnished an unusual mystery for the Ann Arbor police. His body was found late last night hanging from the rafter of the shack the boys of the neighborhood had built for a playhouse, the position of the body indicating that he had been murdered

For several days, it is said, the boys had been quarreling among themselves as to the question of precedence in the "gang" and finally it was decided to tear down the little building. Coming from school this afternoon the Campbell boy and a younger companion proceeded to the shack to remove such parts of it as they had contributed to its construcion. Obtaining a large piece of tin from the place, the two boys went to a hill a short distance away, and after coasting for a while, Campbell returned alone to the shanty.

That was the last time he was seen alive. When he did not return home at night his mother and elder brother set out with a lantern to find him and upon entering the playhouse which was only about eight rods from their home, found the little fellow dead.

WOMAN SHOT HER FATHER DEAD

CRAVENETTE, Ark., Jan. 23.—Mrs Nellie Allen, 21 years old, shot and killed her father, John B. Boyle, a wealthy planter, at their home near Maysville, yesterday after the two had exchanged half a dozen shots Boyle and the woman's husband John Allen were in a quarrel. Boyle rushed on Allen with a drawn knife when Mrs. Allen opened fire. Boyle returned the fire but his bullets went wild, while one of those from the woman's revolver pierced his brain.

PECK OF TROUBLE HITS HONEYMOON

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—A dark haired boy stood befor a Magistrate today and said with a southern accent that his real name was Emile Shott and his home was in New Orleans, while a small procession of hotel detectives and railroad representatives made complaints against the youngster, who claims 18 years and looks younger The boy had been arrested under the name of Charles S. Bougher, charged with obtaining $18 worth of food and lodging from the Hotel Knickerbocker without paying for it and with grand larceny from the Pennsylvania railroad. He told the magistrate that his bride, whose maiden name he refused to give, is also of this city He married her in Chicago and they were on their honeymoon.

Shott wore a dress suit, which, although new, looked a little frowsy for he had worn it since Saturday evening, and his silk hat was placed on the table with his white gloves when the magistrate asked him if he would like to have his case set for examination on another day so that he could communicate with his friends.

"I sure would like a little time Judge," he said, "to write to my mother in New Orleans."

The magistrate set the date for examination on the first complaint petit larcency, on Wednesday and put the bail at $500.

"Others who wish to make complaint against this young man will step into the Clerk's room," said the magistrate.

There was a general movement and a dozen or more passed into the complaint room. Inspectors Spencer and Rykert, of the Pennsylvania railroad said that the boy got a suit case from them worth $35 and had secured $75 from their agent in Chicago on a worthless check. Martin Browning of McLeod, King and Co., said Shott had bought the evening clothes he was wearing at his store Saturday night for $38 and had given a worthless check.

"My boy, this is a pretty serious business," said Magistrate Herbert when the complaint of grand larceny had been made against him.

The boy said he would give the clothes back. "Will that be all right?" put in a representative of the clothing house.

"I make no directions," said the magistrate, "but I have no objections as long as the boy is decently clothed."

His mother, Shott said, is a widow and he brought with him to New York a little girl whom he had married in Chicago.

"Where is she now?" he was asked

"Oh, she's being taken care of," replied the boy. "She's 18 years old too, but I would not tell you her name for the world."

The prisoner said he thought he would get money to square matters before he was found out.

"You know," he said, seeming to realize the seriousness of his position "I am only a kid and I don't know much about these things."

$250,000 WAS HIS SALARY

The action of the U. S. Steel Trust in cutting the president's salary from $100,000 to $50,000 a year has created no little discussion.

The record salary ever paid is understood to have been that received by John Hays Hammond, from the Guggenheims.

Mr Hammond earned a reputation as a mining engineer in California, and then, in common with many others there, he gravitated to the newer gold fields of the Witwatersrand.

Here he quickly rose to the very top of his profession, and it was commonly understood on the Rand that while there he made a comfortable fortune.

Troublous times broke out when Dr. Jameson ventured upon his armed revolt against the Kruger regime, and Mr. Hammond was actually sentenced to death and placed in prison to await execution in company with Mr. F. R. Lingham. Tremendous influence was brought to bear, however, not only by the United States, but by Great Britain, and finally Mr. Hammond was released afer a large sum had been paid by way of a ransom. Thereafter he betook himself to his native land.

His record as a skilful engineer had, of course, preceded him, and in the course of time he was placed in entire charge of all the field operations of the Guggenheim companies. His salary, it has always been understood, was $250,000 a year

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Are the doubting "Thomas'" convinced?

RECOUNT WAS OF NO ACCOUNT.
Recount of ballots over;
Result remains the same.

Doubters put to shame.

Even a $25 recount failed to put Mayor Ackerman out of the Mayoralty chair. Some people are hard losers and bad advisers.

Now for a progressive Mayor and busy Council, and the paving of Front Street. Don't know upon what terms paving will be paid for, but by all means get busy as soon as weather permits. No more mud!

Kingston Standard:—We allow Quebec bridge collapses which cost millions and G. T. R. over-classifications which cost hundreds of thousands but we cannot afford even $2.50 over coats for liberated convicts.

The lunatic who tackled Sir Thomas Lipton with a razor found the worthy knight's wits were sharper than his keen-edged weapon; for while Sir Thomas kept his would-be slayer amused with a choice cigar he put himself in communication with the police, who arrested the man after a desperate struggle. That was diplomacy.

One estimate made in London is that during 1910 Canadian enterprises asked for and obtained 35,815 000 pounds or about $179,000,000, by bond and stock issues taken up in England This probably is one of the causes of the active business that prevailed in Canada during the past twelve months and still largely prevails. We are spending the money we borrowed and are having a good time.

Over two hundred delegates, representing different patriotic organizations in Ontario, waited on Sir James Whitney last week to ask for the erection of a suitable memorial to the soldiers who fell in the war of 1812 Sir James, after saying that the sacrifices made and the heroism displayed in that struggle had preserved Canada for the Canadians, advised the delegates to prepare a concrete proposition for presentation to the Government. The Premier's remarks implied that the proposal would receive favorable consideration.

Frederick, Hamilton, Ottawa correspondent to the Toronto News, had the cheek to make calculation in his paper last week of relative voting strengths of the various provinces of Canada. Taking the figures of our last general election, he showed that 410,000 voters in Quebec province got 65 members, or a member for each 6379 voters, whereas, in Ontario there is but one member for each 7682 voters; in Nova Scotia one to each 7399; in New Brunswick one in each 7580 in Prince Edward Island one to each 9564; in Manitoba one to each 8471 and so on until in British Columbia namely, a member for every 10,042 namely, a member for every 10, 042 voters. And now Mr. Bourassa lands in Montreal proclaiming that he will carry on the good fight for justice to his race and equal rights.

He was ientified as the party who was in the bedroom. This morning, before Magistrate Masson, the accused was charged with housebreaking an vagrancy. A good sized audience greeted Mr Bailey last Sunday afternoon at the Palace. The subject, "Life of Elisha" was illustrated with stereoptican views. Mr Bailey described the scenes as they were thrown upon the screen, and at the same time gave some good sound advice to those present, regarding their spiritual welfare. The Symphony Orchestra rendered several selections which were greatly enjoyed.

Twenty young men, strangers in the city, and many of them strangers to each other, were entertained at a tea Sunday evening which Mrs. O'Flynn had so kindly provided. After the inner man had been satisfied, each one was requested to stand and tell who he was, where he was from and what he was doing. A vote of thanks was tendered Mrs. O'Flynn by Mr Hess, to which Mrs. O'Flynn gave a very fitting reply.

TWO VERY AGED LADIES DEAD

One Was 93 Years Old and the Other Was But A Few Years Younger

Our Wellington correspondent writes under date, January 23rd:

On Wednesday, Jan. 8, 1911 about 11 o'clock, Ellen Cotter Morden, widow of the late Daniel B. Fones, aged 93 years, 3 months, passed peacefully away at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. W. H. Garratt. She was taken with pneumonia, from which she never recovered. She leaves two daughters, Mrs. W. H. Garratt, and Mrs. A. G. Whittier, of Trenton, who mourn the loss of a devoted mother She also leaves same grand children and great-grand children. She was a member of St. Andrew's English church The funeral was held Friday afternoon at W. H. Garratt's, the Rev. O Fenton taking charge of the services which were largely attended. The interment was made in Wellington cemetery beside her late husband and daughter. We extend sympathy to all those who are left. Her daughter Mrs. Garratt has also been very ill with La Grippe but we hope she may soon recover.

Another death occured at West Wellington, of Mrs. Thomas Giles, aged 84 years. She was married over 67 years ago to her now sorrowing husband who is in feeble health. She died on Saturday of pneumonia. The funeral was held Monday morning She leaves one son and three married daughters to mourn her loss.

A. O. U. W. HAD FINE BANQUET

Ameliasburg Lodge Declared it Was The Best They Ever Had

The members of Ameliasburgh Lodge, No. 262, held their annual banquet at Roblin's Mills Town Hall on Wednesday evening the 18th, inst The attendance was large, between two and three hundred sitting down to a sumptuous supper of oysters and confectionery.

After all had partaken of the many good things that were provided, the meeting was called to order by Master Workman File, and an interesting program was given, consisting of solos by Messrs. Frederick and Quackenbush, also by Brother Burton Fox and Bro. Roy Anderson.

Addresses were given by Rev. Bro F. J. Anderson of Amelinsburgh and Rev. Bro. W. B. Sexsmith, of Rednersville, also by Bros. B. O. Frederick W. H. Mabee, and W. J. McFaul. after which the National anthem was sung and one and all united in saying that this annual banquet was one of the best they have ever held. The gathering broke up at 12 o'clock, p m.

DEATH RECORD OF THE DAY

During the month of October last Mr. Wm. Stewart, who resided on Turnbull Street, was the victim of a stroke which eventually resulted in his death to-day. Deceased, who was in his 77th year, was born in North Hastings and had for the past 23 years been a resident of this city. Of late years he had been employed at the rolling mills. Mr. Stewart was for years a member of the Methodist church. He was a man much respected by a large circle of friends. An aged widow, two sons, Arthur, of this city, and Wilbert, of Walkerton, and two daughters, Mrs. J. F. Weese, of Ameliasburg, and Mrs. W. H. Hubble, of Frankford, survive.

MARGARET CALDWELL.

Miss Margaret Caldwell died this morning at her late home, Zion Hill, Thurlow Township. Deceased, who was 55 years of age, was born at Zion Hill and had resided there all her life. An attack of pneumonia was the cause of death. Deceased was a daughter of the late Mr. Joseph Caldwell, of Thurlow. Miss Caldwell was a member of the Methodist church, and a lady highly esteemed. Two brothers, Ald. Caldwell, of this city, and David of Thurlow, and one sister Mrs. Sophia Sills, of Ameliasburg, survive.

GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE.

Malone and Jacobs' Happy Youngsters Co. opened to a capacity house at Griffin's Opera House last night. To say that the show pleased would be putting it mild. It was a decided hit. Jules Jacobs as a German monologoist, kept the audience in roars of laughter and the Rice Sisters specialty was one of the features of the act. The show closed with the original "School Kids," which is the funniest act seen here.

There will be an entire change of programme on Thursday, when the Happy Youngsters will present new specialties and a new musical comedy act, which is claimed to be a bigger laughing hit than the "School Kids." Big houses are assured for all this week.

PREPARING FOR DRAINAGE SURVEYS

An Extensive Campaign is to be Made Through The Country

The Department of Agriculture at Stirling is making preparations for an extensive drainage campaign througout the County during the coming season. We have instruments whereby we make actual surveys of the lands to be drained, then determine where drains will be most advantageous, the exact fall along those drains the size and number of tile required and the grade at which the drains should be dug. These points are clearly marked on a plan which will be made in the presence of the farmer thus making sure that all points will be understood by him. One of these plans may be seen at the office in Stirling, where we shall be pleased to explain it in detail to all persons interested, and to discuss drainage matters with them.

Any persons wishing to have drainage work done would do well to inform us immediately as there will will likely be a ruch as the spring opens when drainage appeals to so many. We are distributing application forms among the farmers which if filled out and returned to us will bring a drainage adviser to them when wanted. Call or write for one of these applications.

Remember, this work is free and every farmer should grasp the opportunity afforded and have his work laid out accurately and systematically. "BETTER BE SURE THAN SORRY."

SERIOUS CHARGE AGAINST A WOMAN

Convicted on One Charge She is Confronted With Another—Remanded

A week ago to-day Mrs. Hannah Richardson, a middle aged woman, was convicted of the theft of a sum of money from the lady of the house where she was employed. The accused was this morning, when brought up for sentence, confronted with another charge, namely, the theft of silverware and linen from the Queen's Hotel, where she was employed some time ago as a domestic. The silverware and linen were found in Mrs. Richardson's trunk and is stamped with the name "Queen's Hotel" on them. The accused pleaded not guilty and was again remanded to jail for a week in order that she might communicate with friends. Mr. Anderson represented the Crown and the accused was not represented by counsel.

"As You Were"

That is the position in which the parties stand in the recount of the votes cast in the Mayoralty election. There were a few slight errors in the returns, but the net result was, strange to say, that these errors balanced exactly, and Mayor Ackerman's maority of 9 was left unimpaired.

We congratulate Mayor Ackerman on the result and feel assured that his administration will be highly satisfactory to the people and to himself.

Judicial Investigation Wanted

Despite the obstructive tactics of some of the aldermen at last night's meeting of the Ctiy Council, that body decided to appoint a special committee to inquire into the facts connected with the sales of city lots as to which serious allegations have been published in the press. This committee is to hold a preliminary inquiry into the facts and report the result to the council, when if considered necessary, a judicial investigation may be held.

In taking this action the council are paltering with a matter of very serious import—making as it were two bites of the cherry. What was asked for by resolution of one of the largest public meetings ever held in Belleville was not a preliminary inquiry by gentlemen who have no power to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of books papers and other documents, or to sift evedence, but a judicial investigation by an impartial jurist who has all the powers and competence which is required, and whose investigation would not be confined to any specified subject, but could embrace every part of the city's financial administration in all detail. This, in view of serious charges in connectin with other transactions than the land sales, is not only desirable but necessary. This is what the people want. This what the people have asked, and they will not be satisfied with anything less; and the council will do well to abandon their temporizing, make-shift expediency and act in accordance with the will of their constituents.

Looking Into the Future

With the population of Canada going up by leaps and bounds, it is interesting to compare the present status of Canada and its prospects with her neighbor to the South at the same period in its history. In 1790, the population of the United States was about equal to that of Canada in 1890, and by a strange coincidence, the figures for the former for 1800 and 1810 correspond with Canada in 1900 and 1910.

The figures of the United States census since 1790 are as follows:

1790	3,929,000
1800	5,308,000
1810	7,239,000
1820	9,633,000
1830	12,866,000
1840	16,069,000
1850	23 191,000
1860	31,443,000
1870	38,558,000
1880	50,155,000
1890	62,622,000
1900	76,603,000
1910	91,920,000

With no desert areas and no untamed Indians to interfere with the onward march of progress, as has been the case with the United States, there is no reason why Canada should not at least equal Uncle Sam's strides in growth. These figures, therefore, may be taken to be as accurate a conjecture as could be found.

Accordingly, a Canadian now twenty years of age, who lives to the prescribed four score years, will find that Canada's population will be about 40,000,000.

The United States, however, in their immigration policy, did not pursue a course which resulted in the best being added to her population, for years allowing the scum of Southern Europe to flood her shores, until now New York is the most cosmopolitan city to be found. It contains more Jews than Palestine, and enough Italians to form a number of Neples. Canadian statesmen on the other hand, profiting by the experience of the United States, have closed the doors to all but those who pass an efficient inspection at their port of landing. Consequently, there seems no reason why the 20th century should not belong to Canada.

A Nice Point

In the debate in the House of Comonsm during Thursday's session on the bill to regulate match factories, Mr. Northrup raised a nice point. He challenged the jurisdiction of the Federal Parliament to pass such legislation dealing with health, which was the prerogative of the Provincial Legislatures. He also argued that the measure would make all manufacturers pay toll to the holders of the patent for the substitute formula. Ontario's factory law, he maintained, did all that was necessary.

The Premier's reply was of a decidedly hesitating character. He said that before the bill had been introduced the Minister of Justice had been consulted, and had declared Parliament had power to enact this bill. That was the opinion of the Minister of Justice, but the member for East Hastings thought otherwise, and he might be right. This was not the first time lawyers had differed, and in such a case as this he thought the House should follow the Minister of Justice until he had been declared wrong by the courts.

Ex-Judge Doherty sided with Mr. Northrup, so it may not improbably be found that the member for East Hastings is in the right; and it is well that it should be so, as he pointed out that the result of the proposed legislation would be the enrichment of the great match trust in the United States, to which all Canadian factories would become subject, because, of course, they would have to pay royalties if they used the patent.

And possibly this was the "nigger in the fence."

MISSION BAND MET

The Mission Band of Bridge Street Church met yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Geo. Barragar, No. 3 Bellevue Terrace. Some time was spent in sewing, after which a pleasing programme was given by the members. Dainty refreshments were served. Miss Estella Barragar assisted her mother. An enjoyable time was spent by all present.

A WONDERFUL EXPERIENCE

With Newbro's Herpicide

While there are no thrills in the narration of Mrs. P. T. Nichols, 623 Broad St., Beloit, Wis., her story is nevertheless one of amazing interest. "Stricken with neuralgia and erysipelas, I lost all my hair My doctor recommended Newbro's Herpicide I used six or eight bottles and now have a fine head of slightly curly light brown hair. Not a gray hair in my head. This is the more remarkable as I am middle-aged."

While the results which follow the use of Newbro's Herpicide are always more or less astonishing, the yare always natural. Herpicide destroys the dandruff germ, stimulates the flow of blood to the hair follicles and keeps the scalp perfectly healthy. It makes possible a natural and luxuriant growth of hair, except in cases of chronic badness.

While remedies said to be "every bit as good" as Newbro's Herpicide are frequently offered, one should insist upon having the original germ destroyer, Herpicide. That is genuine. It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly.

For sale at J. S. McKeown's, Belleville. One dollar size bottles are guaranteed. Applications may be obtained at good barber shops. Send 10c in postage for sample to The Herpicide Co., Dept. R., Detroit, Mich.

THE COUNTRY OF THE CONQUEST

Interesting Lecture in Bridge Street Epworth League Last Night by Prof. Phelps

At the Literary meeting of Bridge St., Epworth League last evening, Prof. Phelps gave a very interesting address on the country of Peru. A large number were present to greet the talented speaker, who is master of other than musical gifts. His fluent style and racy manner of speech held the close attention of his hearers while he descibed in well couched language the characteristics of that country, its social and political life, and the tragical effect of the Conquest during the 16th Century, from which many imported conclusions were graphically portrayed.

During the course of the programme, Miss Potter rendered a nice solo in a very pleasing way.

MAYORALTY RECOUNT MAKES NO CHANGE

Mayor Ackerman's Majority Still Remains as it Stood on Polling Day

The recount of the ballots cast in the Mayoralty election was concluded last evening before Judge Deroche. Strange to say, although a few slight errors were found in some of the returns from the polling sub-divisions, these exactly balanced each other and in consequence Mayor Ackerman retains his seat by a majority of 9, as was given out on election day.

HEBREWS CHARGED WITH CONSPIRACY

Harry Robert, Abe Solomon and Charles Sloma, Hebrews were this morning arranged before Magistrate Masson and the charge preferred against them is that they did purchase certain goods and then conspire with intent to defraud their creditors. The parties were conducting stores in this city and at Campbellford and were placed under arrest a few days ago, to the charge they pleaded not guilty and the investigation was proceeded with. The accused's interest was looked after by Mr. W. Carnew. Mr. McMaster, K.C., of Toronto with the Crown Attorney was conducting the prosecution. Mr. McMaster appears on behalf of Aziz & Co. of Toronto, who are the parties commencing the proceeding on behalf of other creditors. The case was proceeding when we went to press.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"Don't run away with the idea that I was, therefore, endowed with ample means. There are baronets poorer than some crossing-sweepers. The estate was encumbered. During my father's life, during my own until five years ago, it yielded only a thousand a year. Even now, after fifteen years of retrenchment—you both forget that whilst I was stationed at Flamborough Head I was absent for a few days to attend my father's funeral—it produces only a little over three thousand. Enough for us, eh, to enjoy life on? Enough to satisfy Lady Margaret's scruples, Enid, as to her son's absurd notion of matrimony? Enough, too, Constance, to mate you to the man of your choice, whatever his position?"

"Dad," murmured Constance, "is there no hope of the old days coming back again?"

"Who can tell? These things are not in mortal ken. I need hardly say that my allowance of one-third of the family revenues was barely sufficient to maintain a junior in the diplomatic service. Yet I married, Heaven help me, in the pursuance of an ideal, only to find my ideal realized, after much suffering, on lonely rocks and bleak headlands. With strict economy, we existed happily until you were born. My wife, at first, was sufficiently delighted to exchange Jersey society for Paris and the distinguished circle in which we moved there. But you were not many months old until a change came. A Frenchman, a rich fop, began to pay her attentions which turned her head. I do not think she meant any harm. People never do mean harm who accomplish it most fatally. I did that which a man who respects himself loathes to do—I protested. There was a scene, tears, and wild reproaches. Next day the crash came. She endeavored to mislead me as to an appointment. God knows I only wished to save her, but it was too much to ask me to pass over in silence the schemes of a libertine, though he, too, was infatuated by her beauty. I discovered them in a clandestine meeting, and—and—my blood was hot and the country was France. We fought next morning, and I killed him."

Constance bent her head and kissed his right hand. Here, at least, was a lineal descendant of nine generations of border raiders, who held their swords of greater worth than musty laws.

Brand's eyes kindled. His voice became more vehement. The girl's impulsive action seemed to sanctify the deed.

"I did not regret, I have never regretted, the outcome of the duel. H was mortally wounded, and was carried to his house to die. I fled from Paris to escape arrest, but the woman in whose defence I encountered him behaved most cruelly. She deserted me, and went to him. Ask Mrs. Sheppard. She was your English nurse at the time, Constance. It was she who brought you to England. I never met my wife again. I believe, on my soul, that she was innocent of the greater offence. I think she rebelled against the thought that I had slain one who said he worshiped her. Anyhow, she had her price. She remained with him, in sheer defiance of me, until his death, and her reward was his wealth. Were it not for this we might have come together again and striven to forget the past in mutual toleration. The knowledge that she was enriched with that man's gold maddened me. I could not forget that. I loathed all that money could give, the diamonds, the dresses, the insane devices of society to pour out treasure on the vanities of the hour. By idle chance I was drawn to the lighthouse service. It was the mere whim of a friend into whose sympathetic ears I gave my sorrows. It is true I did not intend to devote my life to my present occupation. But its vast silences, its isolation, its seclusion from the petty, sordid, money-grabbing life ashore, attracted me. I found quiet joys, peaceful days, and dreamless nights in its comparative dangers and privations. Excepting my loyal servant and friend, Mrs. Sheppard, and the agent and solicitors of my estate, none knew of my whereabouts. I was a lost man, and, as I imagined, a fortunate one. Now, in the last week of my service—for I would have retired in a few days, and it was my intention to tell you something, not all, of my history, largely on account of your love-making, Enid—the debacle has come, and with it my wife."

"Father," asked Constance, "is my mother still your wife by law?"

"She cannot be otherwise."

"I wonder if you are right. I am too young to judge these things, but she spoke of her approaching marriage with Mr. Traill in a way that suggested she would not do him a grievous wrong. She does not love him, as I understand love. She regards him as a man admirable in many ways, but she impressed me with the idea that she believed she was doing that which was right though she feared some unforeseen difficulty."

Brand looked at her with troubled eyes. It is always amazing to a parent to find unexpected powers of divination in a child. Constance was still a little girl in his heart. What had conferred this insight into a complex nature like her mother's?

"There is something to be said for that view," he admitted. "I recollect now that Pyne told me she had lived some years in the Western States. But he said, too, that her husband, the man whose name she bears, died there. My poor girls, I do, indeed, pity you if all this story of miserable intrigue, this squalid romance of the law-courts, is to be dragged into the light in a town where you are honored. Enid, you see now how doubly fortunate you are in being restored to a father's arms—"

"Oh, no, no!" wailed Enid. "Do not say that. It seems to cut us apart. What have you done that you should dread the worst that can be said And why should there be any scandal at all? I cannot bear you to say such things."

"I think I understand you, dad," said Constance, her burning glance striving to read his hidden thought. "Matters cannot rest where they are. You will not allow—my mother—to go away—a second time—without a clear statement as to the future and an equally honest explanation of the past."

This was precisely the question he dreaded. It had forced its unwelcome presence upon him in the first moment of the meeting with his wife. But he was a man of order, of discipline. The habits of years might not be flung aside so readily. It was absurd, he held, to inflict the self-torture of useless imaginings on the first night of their home-coming after the severe trials of their precarious life on the rock.

Above all else it was necessary to reassure Constance, whose strength only concealed the raging fire beneath, and Enid, whose highly strung temperament was on the borderland of hysteria.

He was still the arbiter of their lives, the one to whom they looked for guidance. He rebelled against the prospect of a night of sleepless misery for these two, and it needed his emphatic dominance to direct their thoughts into a more peaceful channel.

So he assumed the settled purpose he was far from feeling and summoned a kindly smile to his aid.

"Surely we have discussed our difficulties sufficiently to-night," he said. "In the morning, Constance, I will meet Mr. Traill. He is a gentleman and a man of the world. I think, too, that his nephew will be resourceful and wise in counsel beyond his years. Now we are all going to obtain some much-needed rest. Neither you nor I will yield to sleepless hours of brooding. Neither of you knows that, not forty-eight hours ago, I made myself a thief in the determination to save your lives and mine. It was a needless burglary. I persuaded myself that it was necessary in the interests of the Trinity Brethren, those grave gentlemen in velvet cloaks, Enid, who would be horrified by the mere suggestion. I refuse to place myself on the moral rack another time. In the old days, when I was a boy, the drama was wont to be followed by a more lively scene. I forbid further discussion. Come, kiss me, both of you. I think that a stiff glass of hot punch will not do me any harm, nor you, unless you imbibed freely of that champagne I saw nestling in the ice-pail."

They rose obediently. Although they knew he was acting a part on their account they were sensible that he was adopting a sane course.

Enid tried to contribute to the new note. She bobbed in the approved style of the country domestic.

"Please, Sir Stephen," she said, "would you like some lemon in the toddy?"

Constance placed a little copper kettle on the fire. Their gloom had given way to a not wholly forced cheerfulness—for in that pleasant cottage sorrow was an unwelcome guest—when they were surprised to hear a sharp knock on the outer door.

At another time the incident, though unusual at a late hour, would not have disturbed them. But the emotions of the night were too recent, their subsidence too artificially achieved, that they should not dread the possibilities which lay beyond that imperative summons.

Mrs. Sheppard and the servant had retired to rest, worn out with the anxious uncertainties of events reported from the lighthouse.

So Brand went to the door, and the girls listened in nervous foreboding.

They heard their father say:

"Hello, Jenkins, what is the matter now?"

Jenkins was a sergeant of police whom they knew.

"Sorry to trouble you, Mr. Brand, but an odd thing has happened. A lady, a stranger, met me ten minutes ago and asked me to direct her to your house. I did so. She appeared to be in great trouble, so I strolled slowly after her. I was surprised to see her looking in through the window of your sitting-room. As far as I could make out she was crying fit to break her heart, and I imagined she meant to knock at the door but was afraid."

"Where is she? What has become of her?"

Brand stepped out into the moonlight. The girls, white and trembling, followed.

"Well, she ran off down the garden path and tumbled in a dead faint near the gate. I was too late to save her. I picked her up and placed her on a seat. She is there now. I thought it best, before carrying her here—to tell you—"

Before Brand moved, Constance ran out, followed by Enid. In a whirl of pain, the lighthouse-keeper strode after them. He saw Constance stooping over a motionless figure lying prone on the garden seat. To those strong young arms the slight graceful form offered an easy task.

Brand heard Enid's whisper:

"Oh, Connie, it is she!"

But the daughter, clasping her mother to her breast, said quietly:

"Dad, she has come home, and she may be dying. We must take her in."

He made no direct answer. What could he say? The girl's fearless words admitted of neither "Yes" nor "No."

He turned to the policeman.

"I am much obliged to you, Jenkins," he said; "we know the lady. Unless—unless there are serious consequences, will you oblige me by saying nothing about her? But stay. When you pass the Mount's Bay Hotel, please call and say that Mrs. Vansittart has been seized with sudden illness and is being cared for at my house."

"Yes, sir," said the sergeant, saluting.

As he walked away down the garden path he wondered who Mrs. Vansittart could be, and why Miss Brand said she had "come home."

Then he glanced back at the house, into which the others had vanished. He laughed.

"Just fancy it," he said; "I treated him as if he was a bloomin' lord. And I suppose my position is a better one than his. Anyhow he is a splendid chap. I'm glad now I did it for his sake and the sake of those two girls. How nicely they were dressed. It has always been a puzzle to me how they can afford to live in that style on the pay of a lighthouse-keeper. Well it's none of my business."

CHAPTER XVIII.

ENID WEARS AN OLD ORNAMENT

Lady Margaret took her departure from the hotel at an early hour. Her son went with her. Their house was situated on the outskirts of the town, and, although Stanhope would gladly have remained with the two men to discuss the events of this night of surprises, he felt that his mother demanded his present attention.

Indeed, her ladyship had much to say to him. She, like the others, had been impressed by Mrs. Vansittart's appearance, even under the extraordinary difficult circumstances of the occasion. The feminine mind judges its peers with the utmost precision. Its analytical methods are pitilessly simple. It calculates with mathematical nicety those details of toilette, those delicate nuances of manner, which distinguish the woman habituated to refinement and good society from the interloper or mere copyist.

It had always been a matter of mild wonder in Penzance how Constance Brand had acquired her French trick of wearing her clothes. Some women are not properly dressed after they have been an hour posing in front of a full-length mirror; others can give one glance at a costume, twist and pull it into the one correct position, and walk out, perfectly gowned, with a happy consciousness that all is well.

Every Parisienne, some Americans, a few English women, possess this gift. Constance had it, and Lady Margaret knew now that it was a lineal acquisition from her mother. The discovery enhanced the belief, always prevalent locally, that Brand was a gentleman born, and her ladyship was now eager for her son's assistance in looking up the "Landed Gentry" and other works of reference which define and glorify the upper ten thousand of the United Kingdom. Perhaps, that way, light would be vouchsafed.

Being a little narrow-minded, the excellent creature believed that a scandal among "good" people was not half so scandalous as an affair in which the principals were tradesmen, "or worse."

She confided something of this to her son as they drove homewards, and was very wroth with him when he treated the idea with unbecoming levity.

"My dear boy," she cried vehemently, "you dont understand the value of such credentials. You always speak and act as if you were on board one of your hectoring warships, where the best metal and the heaviest guns are all-important. It is not so in society, even the society of a small Cornish town. Although I am an earl's daughter I cannot afford to be quietly sneered at by some who would dispute my social supremacy."

As each complaisant sentence rolled forth he laughed quietly in the darkness.

"Mother," said he suddenly, "Mr. Traill and I have had a lot of talk about Enid during the past two days. I have not seen you until this evening before dinner, so I have not had an opportunity to tell you all that has occurred."

"Some new embroglio, I suppose," she said, not at all appeased by his seeming carelessness as to what the Dowager Lady Tregarthen or Mrs. Taylor-Smith might say when gossip started.

CHRONIC ULCERS

Mrs. Jas. Elsworth, 902 Selkirk Ave., Winnipeg, says:—"Four years ago ulcers broke out on my left ankle and spread until from the top of my foot to my knee was one extended sore. One ulcer would be almost healed when a second would appear in a new place and in a remarkably short time a deep hole would be eaten into the flesh. The flesh on my leg turned blue and looked shocking indeed. I started using ointment after ointment, but received little or no benefit. The ulcers would heal for a time and then break out afresh. I was laid up in bed for a long time, absolutely unable to walk. My limb was so painful that I had no rest night after night.

"I consulted five different doctors! Some advised my going into hospital; others said there was no cure for me. After using their ointments and preparations until I was positive they could not cure, I almost gave up in despair.

"It was then Zam-Buk was tried and how I bless the hour I got it! Within a day it had given me some ease, and from that time I went on improving! The sores were so bad that it took some time to heal them, but Zam-Buk healed them all. The last was healed over a year ago and I have never had a moment's trouble since, from any form of ulceration."

Zam-Buk is just as good for eczema, piles, festering sores, scalp sores, children's rashes, cuts, burns, scalds, and all skin injuries and diseases. Druggists and stores everywhere 50c box, or post free, Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, for price.

TWO GIRLS WERE BURNED IN CELL

CHICAGO, Jan. 23.—"Don't blame Stella for this, I am to blame for it all. I pleaded with Stella to set fire to her clothes and she refused. Then I ignited my own dress and as I was burning asked Stella to end her life with me. The she lighted her dress from my burning clothes.

Frieda Knappe, before her death yesterday, at St. Joseph's Hospital made this statement to physicians after learning that her companion, Stella Maxwell, 18 years old, had died in an adjoining room.

The girls had made living torches of themselves while in a cell in a jail at Lemont, where they were being held on a charge of having stolen two fur coats and a set of lynx furs from the wardrobe of a dance hall.

They had read an account of their arrest in a newspaper and could not bear the disgrace, according to their story.

In the confusion that followed the discovery of fire, Margaret Ripple sister of the jailer, mislaid the jail keys and the firemen had to break down the jail door.

City Orders Investigation Into Sale Of City Lots

tract was a contract and should be lived up to.

Ald. Flagler said that at least $25,000 was paid out to-day by the G. T. R. in wages, which was nearly double what it was some time ago. The round house and shops he felt confident would be later on annexed to the city.

Mayor Ackerman said he understood the G. T. R. was willing to be annexed to the city but their hands were tied owing to the action the company took last year with the Township of Thurlow.

Ald. Clarke contended that the G. T. R. some years ago was granted a bonus of $50,000, but only one-half of that bonus was paid. They did not employ the number of men they claimed would be employed in certain buildings belonging to them. If they move these shops outside of the city the city is deprived of the opportunity of levying upon it for taxes. He move that the matter be referred back to the Industrial Committee for further consideration.

The motion prevailed.

The report was referred to the Executive and the Market and City Property Committees to consider.

A report of sewers constructed and cost of same was laid upon the table, and, on motion, was referred to the Public Works Committee.

The Financial Post, of Toronto, wrote the Council in reference to advertising in that journal the advantages of the city as an industrial centre.—Received and filed.

THE DEACON COMPANY.

A communication was read from Mr. Henry Pringle, which requested the Council to take some action in reference to the Deacon Company, whose factory was recently destroyed by fire.

Mayor Ackerman read communications which the Deacon Company had received from Sherbrooke, Que., Guelph, Midland, Ottawa, Owen Sound, Penetanguishene, Port Hope, Orillia, Brantford and St. Thomas, all offering inducements to the firm to locate in their respective places.

Ald. McGie thought the city should deal leniently with the Deacon Bros. They have suffered a loss which will not be recouped to them in some years. He had no doubt the citizens would be willing for the Council to do something in this matter.

Ald. Chown and Pringle spoke in support of doing something for the Deacon Bros., so as to encourage them and strengthen their hand.

Ald. Riggs said the Deacon Bros. were energetic young men and he would favor the recommendation of the Executive Committee.

The recommendation of the Executive Committee above referred to was on motion confirmed.

Messrs. F. D. Ketcheson and W. A. McMullen wrote soliciting a share of the city's insurance.—Referred to Market and City Property Committee.

TAXES COLLECTED.

Mr. F. D. Diamond, tax collector, presented a report which showed that the collection of taxes since December 10th, up to the present, and balance uncollected, was as follows:

	Collected.	Uncolct'd.
1908	$ 511.08	$375.00
1909	1,827.15	8,169.20
1910	3,431.65	......

The total collection on the 1910 roll to date was $90,619.30.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Panter asked if Mr. G. A. Bennett, who has the contract for remodelling the old meat market, would be made to remove the old material lying about the building.

Ald. Parks—I will attend to it.

Ald. Woodley desired to know who purchased the verandah around the old meat market and how much it was sold for.

Ald. Parks—I will tell you later, as I do not know now.

INTRODUCTION OF BY-LAWS.

Ald. Vermilyea introduced a by-law to authorize the Treasurer to borrow the sum of $25,000 to meet the current expenditures of the city.

Ald. Panter moved, seconded by Ald. Woodley, that a by-law to rescind By-law No. 1546 relating to the early closing of retail groceries be introduced.—Carried.

Ald. Bogle was chairman of the Committee of the Whole on By-Laws.

These two by-laws were passed through their various stages and numbered respectively, 1626 and 1627.

MOTIONS.

Ald. Panter moved, seconded by Ald. Vermilyea, that in accordance with the wish of the Treasurer and the demand of the P. O. A., Ald. Caldwell, Riggs and McGie be a committee to investigate charges re sale of lots.

Ald. Clarke said the motion was not a statement of facts. Will the charges be made so that the committee can deal with facts? There are no charges for the committee to investigate.

Ald. Panter said the city had been ringing with accusations, and he thought this committee could deal with the matter and the Council could then be presented with the facts.

Ald. Clarke still contended that there had been no charges made, hence the committee had nothing to investigate. The motion might read to deal on the request made by the Treasurer. The Property Owners' Association had made no direct charges and he was not in favor of investigating street rumors or insinuations.

Ald. Woodley said Mr. Price had asked for an investigation and he should have what he asked for.

Ald. Flagler said that he had been offered by Mr. Price certain lots at a figure which was cheaper than they were subsequently sold for.

Mayor Ackerman was in favor of having the matter investigated, as requested by Mr. Price.

Ald. Clarke moved, seconded by Ald. Flagler, in amendment that the words "the demand of the P. O. A." be struck out.

Upon a vote being taken 6 voted for the amendment and 9 against it.

Ald. Clarke desired to know what the result would be if the motion carried. Would we not be committed to a judicial investigation of an expensive nature?

The Clerk—The resolution is contradictory, as the P. O. A. have demanded an investigation by commission, whereas the motion is for an investigation by a committee of the Council. He would suggest that the committee consider the matter and report.

Ald. Panter asked the City Clerk if the motion committed the Council to have a judicial investigation.

City Clerk—No, it does not.

Ald. Bogle suggested that the auditors present a full report of all lots, what they were sold for and the taxes against the same.

Ald. Panter's resolution was adopted by a vote of 10 to 5.

NOTICE OF A BY-LAW.

Ald. Clarke gave notice that at the next meeting he would introduce a by-law to repeal By-Law No. 308 which regulates signs and awnings on Front Street.

Council adjourned.

BLUE-BLOODED BARDS.

English Nobility Has Done Pretty Well in the Role of the Poet.

Ah! Love! If only thou wert born
Princess,
Or else myself were only something less
Than that which I am now—of rank
so high—
Oh! then we two might know such happiness.

It was thus that the new King of Siam, who was educated in England, lamented to an actress, to whom he wrote some very original verse, the gulf twixt throne and stage. The king has a decided penchant for literary work, and has several novels and comedies to his credit. Indeed, he might very well be compared to King Oscar of Sweden, another royal poet, whose literary work was published under a nom de plume. The Czar, too, is rather fond of writing poetry, and thus mournfully sums up his feelings in the third verse of one of his poems, which was translated six years ago:

My soul strives blindly for relief—
Chilled, as by drifting snow,
By doubts which scoff at the belief
Of finding peace below.

Lord Cromer, like the Right Hon. George Wyndham, has a "pretty turn for sonnets," while the following verse, composed by Lord Curzon, appears on a brass memorial tablet erected in the cathedral at Calcutta to members of the Indian volunteer contingent who lost their lives in South Africa:

These sons of Britain in the East
Fought not for praise and fame.
They died for England, and the least
Made greater her great name.

General Sir Ian Hamilton is a poet of no mean order, whilst it may surprise many people to learn that Sir George White some years ago wrote a poem entitled "Edward VII.," which was published in the Gibraltar Chronicle and Official Gazette, the first verse of which ran:

Unfold his standard! Let it greet the day.
Hymn loud an Anthem to the regal
sway
Of Edward's Crown; the symbol of a reign
That hails the dawn of peace, the end of pain.

Lord Crofton, it might be mentioned, a musician of taste and talent, has composed many hymns and chants, including the favorite wedding hymn, "Oh, perfect love," while Sir George Young, too, has written many poems. There are also a number of society ladies—Viscountess Galway, Lady Esher, Lady Lindsay, Lady Alfred Douglas, and the Marchioness of Townshend—all of whom have published poems which have earned the praise of the critics.

Mention of the fact that the Right Hon. George Wyndham, M.P., has poetical inclinations reminds one that there have been one or two witty versifiers in the House of Commons. Sir Wilfrid Lawson was the best, but Mr. John O'Dowd, M.P, for Sligo, aroused considerable amusement when he wrote "The Lay of South Sligo," which was inspired by Mr. Patrick O'Brien's championship of lady teachers who wished to wear their engagement rings in school:

Oh, Patrick, dear, come over here;
Your smile I'd wish to see.
Give me your hand; you needn't stand
On ceremony with me.
By all the girls you're idolized,
From New York to Kettering.
No wonder; sure, you've legalized
"The wearin' o' the ring."

Empty Competitions.

A remarkable angling competition has just been held on the River Witham, England, where for two hours fifty-six Lincoln anglers fished in vain. They were on the bank of the river between Washingborough and Lincoln, but not a single fish was caught. About ten years ago a similar thing happened, but on that occasion there were only thirty competitors taking part. In another competition recently open to twelve clubs in Derby, the match for the twenty-five guinea challenge cup took place in the Derby Angling Association's private water in the canal at Wellington. After fishing for an hour and a half, only fourteen competitors out of sixty-four had taken any fish, and the challenge cup was won by Mr. J. Dawney with a gross weight of only 2 1-4 ounces, four shot. The lowest weights to take a prize were 1-4 ounces, six shot and three shot.

"Poor Polly."

Talking of aspiring dramatists who pester him with plays, Mr. Charles Hawtrey, who has made another "hit" in "Inconstant George," at the Prince of Wales' Theatre, London, mentions a letter he once received:

"Dear Sir (it ran).—If you are in want of an oppening one-act drama at your house I have such a domestic drama to offer. It is not a representation of the iper classes, but rather off the lower. It is called "Poor Polly Newly Married and Done." It is certainly orriginal, and will delight your middle and lower class audiences."

"The same man," says Mr. Hawtrey, "made me an offer of another play a little while later, entitled 'Saved by the Skin of Your Teeth'—a piece which he declared contained 'a thrilling love-story, with enthralling closing precedents'."

A Record Trip.

A journey of 2,419 miles on an arab pony has just been accomplished by Mr. J. H. Bill, a British consul in southern Persia, whi has reached his home in Staffordshire on the back of this plucky little animal. He told a newspaper representative that he believed it constituted a record for one animal. The early stages of the journey were the worst, for the pony had to tackle hilly and broken country, and he was unable to average more than twenty miles a day. One incident of the journey was an attack by brigands.

IT IS UP TO THE DEPARTMENT

Commenting on the Farmers Bank and the correspondence between the Dominion Department of Finance and the State Insurance Department of New York, regarding that institution the Monetary Times says:—

"We think the Department of Finance must share the responsibility for the failure of the Farmers' Bank unless later explanations prove otherwise.

"It is understood that the department was apprised to some extent of the manner in which money was obtained to get the charter. The provisional directors had collected $211 000 and $41,000 was paid for expenses. This left $170,000. The provisional directors turned over notes of subscribers to Travers, who borrowed on them $80,000. This made $250,000, including the cheque for $80,000 obtained for the notes, which were deposited with a trust company The bank was left with $170,000 paid-up capital. As Mr. Clarkson says this was an evasion of the Bank Act if nothing worse. Did the Department know anything of this?

SHOULD HAVE ACTED.

"The letters which passed between the Department of Finance and the State Insurance Department of New York last year respecting the Farmers Bank transactions with a fraternal insurance company make a sorry exhibit. Mr. Hotchkiss, the insurance superintendent, knew that something was radically wrong with the Farmers Bank and communicated as much to the Finance Department at Ottawa The reply was that they could not take acion. 'Probably the Bank, on application from you,' wrote Mr Fielding to Mr. Hotchkiss, 'would explain the whole matter.' Which would be almost tantamount to asking a thief whether he had stolen and how he did it. The New York State Superintendent was persistent, and one of his examiners reported that he hoped his 'visit to Ottawa would get the Finance Department and the Bankers' Association scared into doing something.' The department, apparently did nothing, when it might very well have approached the Bankers' Association, saying: 'The Farmers' Bank is not doing legitimate business and action must be taken.' The Bankers' Association have more than once stepped in and prevented an inevitable disaster becoming too ruinous. In the case of the Farmers Bank the well-informed public, the Finance Department and the bankers allowed the bank officials all the rope and time needed for that institution to hang itself."

More Massacres.

Athens, Jan. 24.—A recrudescence of the anti-Christian agitation in Adna, a villayet of Asiatic Turkey, is feared. The Turks are believed to be preparing for fresh massacres of Armenians, many of whose houses are marked with a red cross and the inscription "readth." The Government has asked that troops be sent to Adna to keep order, as the garrison there is not to be relied upon.

FOSTER BEGINS FIGHT

Farmers' Bank Is Discussed in the Commons.

He Asks For a Full Return of the Correspondence Regarding the Conduct of the Bank Since Its Formation With a View to Looking Into the Inadequacy of the Banking System.

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—Hon. George E. Foster started the firing in the impending battle over the Farmers' Bank collapse in the House of Commons last evening, when he moved for a return of all correspondence regarding the conduct of the bank since its organization. Mr. Foster spoke at some length, and said that many irregularities appeared to obtain in the methods pursued by the Finance Department and treasury board in not satisfying itself regarding the bona fides of the promoter, and the warning given by the superintendent of insurance of New York.

Sir Wilfrid replied that the statutory requarements having been complied with, Mr. Fielding had no option but to allow the bank to continue doing business.

J. A. Robb (Huntingdon) said that the people who lived along the canal did not agree with Mr. Monk's view. One of the direct results of this action on the part of the agreement was that last month the people of Valleyfield had been offered electric light and power at 46 per cent. below the present rates.

Mr. Pugsley said that the idea back of the granting of the lease was to develop the water power and to insure its use for the people at the lowest price. In order to get the best results it was necessary to give a lease extending over a long term of years. Every care had been taken to protect the public interest. The price charged was to be fixed by the Railway Commission in the event of a disagreement, and fixed every five years. The lesses should not amalgamate with the Montreal Light, Heat & Power Co. It was also provided that by giving one year's notice, the Government could take over the works by paying the cost of construction and five per cent.

A. C. Boyce (West Algoma) said: "I beg to give notice that to-morrow I will move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance, to wit, the receipt by the Ministers of the crown of gifts of money in the form of testimonials, and the reported contribution to such testimonials or testimonial, of a sum of money by one W. R. Travers, late general manager of the Farmers' Bank of Canada, now in liquidation, and said Travers being convicted and being now under sentence of six years' imprisonment for having falsified returns and theft of sums of money."

Towards the middle of the evening, Hon. Geo. E. Foster rose to move a motion, among other things, for an order of the House "for a copy of all correspondence between the Government or any member thereof or any official of the board of finance, and any person or association with reference to the conduct and affairs of the Farmers' Bank since the date of its organization."

"My desire," said the member for North Toronto, "is to get all the information possible in the hands of the Government that will enable the House and the people of this country to form an accurate opinion as to what, if any, responsibility lay at the door of an imperfect act, on the one hand, or of an imperfect administration of the act on the other, and to define as sharply as possible the difference between the two, or the line between the two."

"The failure of the Farmers' Bank, was, to say the least, unpleasant reading, and not a pleasing comment on the Banking Act and the system founded upon it. The baneful effects of the failure of the Farmers' Bank, Mr. Foster pointed out, were found in the circumstance that it was a farmers bank, the canvass made for shareholders was among the farming community, and these shareholders also became depositors. But these people not only lose their share capital and the profit they expected to make out of it, but also their deposits, and are responsible for the double liability.

Continuing, Mr. Foster said there was a strong feeling of unrest in the country, and a demand was made for both an investigation and a remedy. He recited the method adopted in the formation of a bank, outlining the statutory requirements, and asked whether the treasury board, presided over by the Minister of Finance, had satisfied itself that the compliance with the statutory requirements had been bona fide. This was vital. The treasury board was not bound to take the affidavits without making some investigation. He stated that the $250,000 required by law to be deposited to the credit of the Receiver-General only represented $170,000 of actual cash paid in, and the balance had been secured by the discounting of notes given for stock subscribed, and that $41,000 had been paid out to the provisional directors.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said all the information in the hands of the Government would be brought down fully and frankly and freely. He had reason to believe that some of Mr. Foster's surmises would not be borne out by the facts. If there was any carelessness, everybody in the House was to blame, for a renewal of the charter had been granted twice without dissent. Mr. Foster had blamed the action of the treasury board in granting a certificate, but he could not see that the board was in any way blamable, in view of the fact that $250,000 had been placed to the credit of the Receiver-General, accompanied by an affidavit that all requirements of the law had been observed.

Strangled In Berth.

Thief River Falls, Minn., Jan. 24.—A mystery surrounding the death of a man identified yesterday as L. R. Lowe of Cannington, Ont., has developed here. He was apparently strangled by some one unknown last Thursday night on the Winnipeg flyer, and the body robbed. The dead man was at first supposed to be Rodney Lewis, as the return portion of a ticket in this name was found in a pocket. Then a man who had talked with him in St. Paul said he had told him his name was Theodore Hymesdorth of Winnipeg. Later, the authorities declared the dead man was Lowe of Cannington.

Brockville Boy Missing.

Brockville, Jan. 24.—J. Leslie Sheridan, aged 22, a Brockville boy, filling the position of assistant agent on the New York Central Railway at Morristown, across the river from here, has been missing since Sunday night. He spent the day in Brockville, and between nine and ten o'clock left here to skate to the other side. The channel in the river is open in several places, and the belief grows that he went into open water and was drowned. Two men on the shore heard cries for help coming from the direction of the river shortly after the hour Sheridan is said to have left Brockville.

Only Four Inspectors.

Winnipeg, Jan. 24.—Investigation by the civil commission, which is enquiring into the causes of recent fires and studying the work of the brigade, brought out the information that only four men are employed by the city to inspect the wiring of buildings. When it is considered that structures to the value of $15,000,000 were erected in 1910 alone, the force seems ridiculously small. The same shortage of staff applies to the building department.

Dropped Dead.

Guelph, Jan. 24.—Frank Dowler, for 25 years one of the best known drygoods merchants of Guelph, and only recently retired from business, dropped dead at his residence last evening. He was in his usual good health, and had just come in from a drive, when in a severe fit of coughing he ruptured a blood vessel and expired immediately. He leaves a widow and family of grown-up daughters.

Eleven Killed In Wales.

Cardiff, Wales, Jan. 24.—Eleven persons were killed and 42 others injured, seven of them fatally, when a passenger train crashed into the rear of a freight train at Hopletinstown, near Pontypridd, yesterday.

The freight train was standing still on the tracks when the passenger train, going at a terrific rate of speed, dashed into the rear car. The victims were crushed to death.

Ex-Mayor Dead.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 24.—William McHattie, a well-known resident of this city, died at 9 o'clock last evening, being taken with pneumonia on Saturday. He came from Scotland about forty years ago, had filled the position of city councillor and was elected mayor in 1889. He was an officer on the provincial detective force, resigning about a year ago on account of poor health.

Will Arbitrate.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Jan. 24.—The Haitien and Santo Dominican Governments have both accepted the proposal to submit to arbitration the delimitation of the frontier, which has been the cause of serious dispute between the countries. Pending this they have agreed to withdraw their respective forces.

The Colonel Will Pay.

Winnipeg, Jan. 24.—Fifty officers and men of the 79th Cameron Highlanders, Winnipeg, are to be sent to the coronation celebration in London. Their expenses will be defrayed by R. M. Thomson, lieutenant-colonel of the regiment.

LEGISLATURE TO-DAY

Ontario House Opens Its Proceedings This Afternoon.

Technical Education Will Be Provided For In the Legislation of the Session and the Liquor Act Will Probably Be Changed In Some Measure —Prison Reform a Success—Extension of Agriculture.

Toronto, Jan. 24.—At three o'clock this afternoon the booming of cannon will announce the arrival of His Honor Lieutenant-Governor Gibson at the Parliament Buildings to open the first session of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario under the reign of His Majesty King George V.

The speech from the throne promises to be one of interest, importance and inspiration. In accordance with precedent and the unbounded loyalty of the banner province of the Dominion of Canada, it will naturally first make fitting reference to the death of his late Majesty King Edward VII.

Appropriate felicitations will then be extended to His Majesty King George V. on his accession to the throne of the British Empire, of which the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Ontario form a loyal integral part.

His honor may then be expected to congratulate the members of the Legislature upon the progress in the work of the west wing of the Parliament Buildings, and also in the preparations which are under way for the erection of a modern and suitable viceregal residence for the Lieutenant-Governor of the province, in place of the now inadequate residence on West King street.

Congratulations will be extended to the assembly upon the excellent results which have already marked the steps which have been taken for the establishment of a central prison farm at Guelph, and the success which has attended the experiment of placing prisoners at work road-making in the Porcupine district.

The great public benefits in the conservation of the natural resources of the district secured by the extension of the Algonquin National Park will be briefly enumerated.

One of the most important features of the speech from the throne will be a concise review of the mining situation, which will point to the large increase in the mining output of Northern Ontario.

Commendation will be tendered the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Commission for the success of the Government line. The reasons for the extension of the railway to the new Porcupine gold mining camp will be given and for the extension to the junction of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.

His honor will call attention to the completion of the transmission line for the hydro-electric system, and the benefits which have already accrued to many important Ontario municipalities as a consequence.

Devout thankfulness will be expressed to divine Providence for the bountiful crops of the past year, and for the progress and hopeful outlook for the agricultural interests of the province.

Along the lines of new legislation important announcements will be foreshadowed, especially in the matter of public education.

It is known that Hon. Dr. Pyne has in view the making of provision for technical and industrial education, although the scope of the movement is a Ministerial secret. As a Dominion Government commission is at present engaged in making a report, with a view to adopting a national policy of technical education, the definite announcement of what Ontario will do will be awaited with interest.

Plans will be referred to for an extension of the present system of agriculture, to render it more comprehensive and more generally available to the youth of the rural parts of the province.

The speech will also state that the Government will submit some amendments to the liquor license law. There appears to be good reason for the belief that a graded system of license fees, based upon the revenue of individual establishments, will be foreshadowed. It is not thought that the three-fifths requirement in local option voting will be changed, but the laws may be made more stringent in other respect.

A. C. Pratt of South Norfolk has been selected to move the address in reply to the speech from the throne. James Torrance, North Perth, will be the seconder.

A detachment of infantry, a band, and a cavalry guard, provided by the Royal Canadian Dragoons, will form the guard of honor for His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor. A salute of 15 guns will be fired by the Ninth Field Battery on the west side of the building, in the direction of the university grounds.

In the new wing on the west side are now situated the offices of the provincial police, the law clerks, the committee-rooms, cloak-rooms, and reading-rooms, on the second floor. On the south side of the first floor are the offices of Hon. Adam Beck and Hon. Col. J. S. Hendrie, the express office, the King's printer, and the dining-room.

Family Burned to Death.

Albert Lea, Minn., Jan. 24.—N. C. Jensen and three of his children were burned to death in a fire which destroyed their home at Richmond, 11 miles from here, but owing to the heroism of Mrs. Jensen she and the other children escaped.

New Marine Depot.

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—The contract for a new marine depot at Prince Rupert has been awarded to the Pacific Construction Co. of Victoria. The price is $150,000.

Easy For Travelers.

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—A feature of nego- One important feature of the negotiations at Washington is said here to be the extension to the United States of the provisions of the French treaty (article xly.), by which a commercial traveler may, upon entering Canada, deposit the dutiable value of his samples with the first customs house which he meets, with the understanding that when his departure from Canada, he shall, if the samples are still intact, receive a rebate of the full amount of duty deposited.

This will, if agreed upon, prove of immense value to the business houses of the United States. At present they have to pay full duty upon their samples, no matter how many times they may bring the same articles into Canada, and the practice has been for a majority of such travelers to dispose of their samples at any price they could get before returning home.

A Direct Line.

Ottawa, Jan. 24.—"We have, in view a direct line from Ottawa to Toronto," stated Vice-President Wm. Wainwright of the G.T.R., last night, "but as to just what route we will take I am not prepared to say. As a matter of fact, it has not been decided.

"There are three suggestions. One is by what is known as the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa line. We control that now. Then the Rideau Valley and Brockville people are after us, while yet another interest wants the line to go by way of Gananoque. That Ottawa needs direct connection with Toronto is obvious, and I think the matter will be determined before long."

Smuggling Aliens.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 24.—The immigration authorities believe they have unearthed a smuggling system in the arrest and conviction of Hagop Abraham, on a charge of illegal smuggling of aliens into Canada. He was fined $75.

Sam Moldstein was held in $1,500 bail, on the American side, on a charge of bringing alien women into the United States. His alleged partner, Isaac Wolunski, was held in $500 bail.

Express Rates on Fruit.

St. Catharines, Jan. 24.—Three hundred fruit growers and transportation men last night listened to very timely talks on fruit growing, general agriculture and transportation by prominent men, guests of the St. Catharines Cold Storage Forwarding Co., in celebration of another very successful co-operative year. Hon. James Duff, Minister of Agriculture, was among the guests.

Seven Years For Mrs. Snead.

Newark, N.J., Jan. 24.—The last echo of the mysterious death of Ocey W. M. Stead in an unoccupied house in East Orange came here yesterday, when her mother, Mrs. Caroline B. Martin, was sentenced to seven years' imprisonment by Judge Ten Eyck, in the court of oyer and terminer here. The aged woman collapsed following sentence, and had to be carried back to her cell.

Refused the Writ.

Trenton, N.J., Jan. 24.—Judge Rellstab, in the U. S. Circuit Court, after an argument lasting all of yesterday, refused to grant a writ of habeas corpus, asked for on behalf of Porter Charlton, whose extradition had been requested by the Italian Government to answer a charge in Italy of having murdered his wife, Mary Scott Cadslte Charlton, in that country last summer.

Blaming the Authorities.

Toronto, Jan. 24.—Many are blaming the police for the absence of effective action against those charged with the wrecking of the Farmers' Bank. They say that an efficient police department would lay extraditable charges against the men wanted, and that, even if these charges cannot be laid, an efficient police department would have arrested these men before they had time to leave the country.

The answer made to these is that the police cannot act in the matter without warrants, and that charges cannot be laid without the consent of Crown Attorney Corley. In a recent case the crown attorney declared in court that the police had no right to lay charges without his consent, and the police clerks have said that they had orders not to issue warrants without his consent. This, the police say, relieves them of responsibility for the nature of the charges and the delay in the issuance of the existing warrants.

It is understood that the matter will be brought up at the meeting of police commissioners to be held this afternoon, when an investigation as to the inactivity of the police and the reasons for it may be made.

Carnegie Gets Three Years.

Toronto, Jan. 24.—Three years in Kingston Penitentiary was the sentence meted out to James Carnegie, aged 55, who a week ago pleaded guilty to a charge of making counterfeit money.

The money was in 25 and 50 cent pieces. He had only been in the country for a year, and it is supposed that he has been issuing the money ever since.

Hugh Carnegie, a son, was charged with disposing of the money. He pleaded not guilty, and was remanded for a week.

Flight on Wednesday.

Key West, Fla., Jan. 24.—J. A. D. McCurdy, the Canadian aviator, who will try to fly from Key West to Havana, returned yesterday afternoon from the Cuban city, where he secured a landing place. While the date originally set was to-day, it was said he would set sail about daylight Wednesday.

Platforms will be built on the decks of the destroyers, which will convoy him, to permit him to make fresh starts if he falls into the water. The boats will be stationed ten miles apart.

SHOOTS DOWN WRITER

Insane Musician Wounds David Graham Phillips.

Fitzhugh Coyle Goldsborough, a Violinist, Formerly of Toronto, Makes Murderous Attack on Well-Known Writer, and Then Kills Himself—Phillips Is In a Critical Condition In the Hospital.

New York, Jan. 24.—David Graham Phillips, editor, publicist and novelist, was shot six times yesterday as he appeared at the Princton Club, by Fitzhugh Coyle Goldsborough, a Harvard man, who immediately committed suicide. Goldsborough was well known in Toronto.

Phillips is at Bellevue Hospital in an extremely critical condition, but with a chance for life. The body of Goldsborough, whose career at Harvard was brief, lies in the morgue. Apparently insane, he had a fancied grudge against the author and sought his life. He was only 31 years old, and is a son of Dr. Edmund K. Goldsborough of Washington.

David Graham Phillips was born in Madison, Ind., on Oct. 11, 1867. His first literary work was done as a reporter for The New York Sun, which he left to become an editorial writer for The New York World. While still with The World he published, in 1901, his first novel, "The Great God Success." It brought him royalties, and he resigned from newspaper work to devote his life to fiction and the magazines.

Adding to the Force.

Peterboro, Jan. 24.—Acting upon the recommendation of Chief Thompson, the police commissioners yesterday decided to add two officers to the force. P. C. Newhall will do plain clothes duty, and P. C. Adams, the oldest member, will be sergeant.

H. Lebrun, one of the oldest and most prominent citizens of Peterboro, died yesterday at the age of 63.

Want to Quash Local Option.

Brockville, Jan. 24.—The two hotelkeepers affected by the passing of the local option bylaw in the townships of Bastard and Burgess, were in Brockville yesterday, seeking legal advice, with a view to taking steps towards having the measure quashed.

Her Head Was Severed.

London, Jan. 24.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The body of Hazel Hamilton Brown, a Canadian, was found on the railway line near Brockenhurst, New Forest. It is not known how she got on the tracks.

The verdict of the jury is that Hazel, the daughter of Francis F. Brown, aged 26, suicided. She was suffering from tuberculosis and was depressed with the fear that she would never get better. She put herself under the train, and her head was severed from her body.

The Cartridge Exploded.

Rockland, Jan. 24.—A peculiar and very sad accident occurred at the home of Thomas York, when his youngest son, had the end of the first finger of his right hand and the thumb of his left hand blown off. At the time he was picking a revolver cartridge to get the lead out so that he might use the shell for his lead pencil. The boy lit a match to look inside, when it exploded. The palm of his left hand and his forehead are badly burned.

Casserole & Ramequin Cookery.

WE INVITE THE LADIES TO VIEW THE EXHIBIT WE MAKE SATURDAY AND ALL NEXT WEEK OF IMPORTED EARTHEN COOKING WARE.

The modern housekeeper has begun to learn that there are other ways of cooking food than by broiling, boiling, or roasting, all of which processes call for high heat. She has come to know that long, slow cooking, at a gentle heat, best conserves the nutritive elements of food and the flavors that render it most agreeable to us. It is this method of cooking that the earthen Casseroles, with its close fitting cover has made possible for us.

Some of the lines we show:

Game Dishes, Milk Boilers, Hot Water Jugs, Stew Pots, Sauce Pans, Jelly Moulds Entree Dishes, Shirred Egg Dishes, Hot Water Muffins, Bean Pots, Egg Poachers Custard Cups, Ramequins, TEA POTS with percolators, and COFFEE POTS.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

The dynamos in the human body are also intimately connected by conductors, so that, when an organ or part is called upon for excessive work part furnishes the excess of energy by robbing all of the other dynamos of their energy, or working power.

Thus, all other parts of the body for the time being, must suffer from the lack of functioning power they are deprived of. So, in this way, an organ may be weak or deficient without it or its needed energy to supply some overtaxed function.

The occasional overtaxing of a function may not result in much observable injury to other parts; but through oft-repeated and continued experiences the excessive function becomes a habit, and more or less continuous in its excessive

LOCAL PROFESSIONALS MADE A REPUTATION

Belleville's New Professional Hockey Team Defeated Port Hope—Both Sevens Played a Brilliant Game--Locals Rather the Better in All Departments--Ice Was Keen and Spectators Enthusiastic--The Score Was 10 to 6

Belleville's new professional hockey team, who played their first match on home ice last night, were out to earn a reputation, and they acquired it Their opponents were the doughty Port Hopes, who were very confident of an easy victory; but they had to go down to defeat at the hands of a clever team, which was a little better than they in every department of the game, particularly in stick handling and combination.

The Bellevilles presented as their representatives five of the seven who had been playing in Trenton, with two new men, Lane of the Wanderers, and Nichols. Port Hope had six of their usual seven and one new man McMillan, who added to the strength of their line-up. The referee was Mr Harry Burgoyne, of the Picton pros. who was competent and impartial.

The temperature was mild, the ice in the best possible condition, and there was a fair crowd, but not so large as there should have been However, after last night's brilliant exhibition it is safe to assert that the patronage will be much more liberal in future.

FIRST PERIOD.

The game was divided as usual with professionals, into three periods of twenty minutes each. Immediately following the face-off the puck travelled towards the Belleville goal, on which there were several straggling attacks, but Tooze warded off the shots that looked dangerous, until matters took a turn. Then the Bellevilles by some pretty combination, worked the rubber into Port Hope's territory, and after about five minutes play, succeeded in getting one past Mercer, who had been kept very busy and had stopped many hot ones. Very fast work followed, largely in Belleville's favor, and a second shot soon slid into Port Hope's net. The local fans were now jubilant, but their joy was short lived. The visitors succeeded in tieing the score by shooting twice successfully within five minutes. Following this the play was very evenly divided, but Belleville again tallied after five minutes' more and the record at the close of the first period was—

Bellville	3
Port Hope	2

SECOND PERIOD.

The players responded promptly to the bell and resumed play, with undiminished vigor. From the outset Belleville had a shade the best of it and in two minutes they had raised their score to four. For a length of time the struggle was maintained with such brilliant wark on the part of both teams that the audience was roused to enthusiasm and complimentary remarks were freely made on the fine hockey shown by both teams. And certainly it was deserved. Finally a Port Hope shot bulged the net, and their supporters once more began to hope for victory. But their dream was of short duration as after a long struggle which embraced ten minutes of strenuous and skilful hockey, Belleville tallied for the fifth time; and once more they added to their string after two minutes sharp work.

The bell rang soon afterwards, and the second period closed, the score board showing:

Belleville	6
Port Hope	3

FINAL PERIOD.

Play in the final period was even faster than before, the visitors striving hard to turn the tide of victory and the homesters to increase their lead; and they did so shortly, as the result of superior play. Then the struggling athletes scored in turn but Belleville, playing with skill and determination, got two more tallies and it was evidently all over but the shouting. However, Port Hope, in their dying flurry, scored again, and at the bell the tally stood:

Belleville	10
Port Hope	6

And the cheers of the Belleville rooters made the welkin ring.

The line up.—

Belleville		Port Hope
	—Goal—
Tooze		Mercer
	—Point—
Debeau		Kyle
	—Cover—
Lane		Nixon
	—Rover—
Chipchase		Manson
	—Centre—
Mallen		Randall
	—Right—
Lightfoot		Rowden
	—Left—
Nichols		McMillan

NOTES.

The hockey players who watched the game all through said it was one of the most scientific and fastest games of hockey that they had ever seen.

While all the local men played finely, those who starred were, Nichols, Lightfoot and Tooze.

The Port Hope men certainly put up a strong game, but they met a better team last night.

Randall and Nixon were the only two Port Hope men who tried to rough it, but they had none the best of the bargain.

The play was, on the whole, fairly clean, and the penalties, which were nearly all for minor offences, were about evenly divided.

INQUEST OPENED ON RAILWAY VICTIMS

A Full Inquiry To Be Held--Bodies of the Victims Have Arrived

KINGSTON, Jan. 23.—The inquest into the death of Engineer William Dennis and Fireman Thomas McDermott, of Belleville, killed this morning in a rear-end collision of two freight trains at Collins Bay, was convened at Corbett's undertaking rooms this evening, but was adjourned after the jury had viewed the remains of the dead railwaymen. A full inquiry is to be made into the catastrophe.

At an early hour this morning the remains of Wm. Dennis, the engineer and Thomas McDermid, the firemen arrived in this city and were taken to their late homes. McDermott, whilst apparently instantly killed was not mutilated about the body. Dennis' remains, however, were unrecognizable, having been terribly burned. Both victims will be buried to-morrow.

DOCTOR ADVISED OPERATION

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Canifton, Ont.—"I had been a great sufferer for five years. One doctor told me it was ulcers of the uterus, and another told me it was a fibroid tumor. No one knows what I suffered. I would always be worse at certain periods, and never was regular, and the bearing-down pains were terrible. I was very ill in bed, and the doctor told me I would have to have an operation, and that I might die during the operation. I wrote to my sister about it and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Through personal experience I have found it the best medicine in the world for female troubles, for it has cured me, and I did not have to have the operation after all. The Compound also helped me while passing through Change of Life."—Mrs. LETITIA BLAIR, Canifton, Ontario.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has proved to be the most successful remedy for curing the worst forms of female ills, including displacements, inflammation, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, bearing-down feeling, flatulency, indigestion, and nervous prostration. It costs but a trifle to try it, and the result has been worth millions to suffering women.

The Waiter.

"All things come round to him who waits."

"Don't you believe it!"

"No?"

"No. They have abolished tips."

Why?

"Can you sing?"

"Yes."

"But you never do."

"No."

"Why not?"

"If I were to do so all the other singers would be silenced."

Modern Ways.

"Will you marry me?"

"Let me see. I can't tell just now."

"Why not?"

"I must first look at my date book. Thanks, no; I shan't be able to do so this year, but perhaps may be able to do so next."

Exception.

The whole is greater than a part.
On that we ring the bell.
It may be true in books and art.
It's not so in a well.

A Sure Cure.

Mother—I'm afraid Gwendoline is setting her heart on that young Penniless.

Father—You think so?

Mother—I am almost sure of it.

Father—Well, he is not a fit person for her to marry. He is as poor as a rat and has no prospects. Something must be done to set her against him.

Mother—I have thought of that and have hit upon what I think is an excellent plan.

Father—Yes? What is it?

Mother—We must tell her that we want her to marry him.

The Park of the World.

Kioto, Japan, is spoken of as the "park of the world." Everything there is beautiful. It was formerly the capital of the empire. It has a population of 380,000. Within the city limits are 378 Buddhist temples and eighty-two Shinto shrines. The principal products are pottery and porcelain, cut velvets, cloisonne wares, brocades and embroideries. The beauty of the products is significant of the beauty of the place.

A Good Idea in Hair Treatment.

The trouble with most women's hair is that they won't take the time to give it proper treatment. If you want your hair to have that look of lustre and vitality, you must take care of it.

You cannot expect to have splendid hair if you simply run a comb through it in the morning—give it a dab on the outer edge with a brush—throw it into a braid—switch it around the head—jab in a few hair pins—and let it go at that.

Hair is like any other growing thing—it needs attention—it needs care—it needs thorough grooming regularly—not only the hair but the scalp.

If you have the time and patience you won't need any hair tonic—but most women haven't. The next best thing is Nyal's Hirsutone. It is the best thing offered to take the place of hours of combing and brushing.

It tones up the roots, brightens the color, improves the texture and makes it stay gracefully where it is put.

Hirsutone literally revitalizes the neglected hair.

Your Nyal Druggist cheerfully recommends Hirsutone because he knows.

If you haven't a velvet calling suit this winter you're very much out of it sartorially. Opinions Divided on Hobble Skirt.

There is much dispute over the hobble skirt. Society women are divided as to whether it is graceful and commodious and whether it will be retained in style. Lady Duff Gordon insists it soon will be abolished, because it is hideous and makes woman the slave of a fad. "While the hobble skirt is not becoming to French, German and American women on account of their broad hips," she says, "it adds grace and charm to the slimmer figures of the Englishwomen. Short persons especially have welcomed the skirt, because it has the appearance of increasing their height. Women are naturally eager to look as becoming as possible, and any fashion which helps toward this may become popular among many of them. As an instance I may mention hair pads. Women who formerly were compelled to wear their hair flat now find their looks greatly improved by the stylish coiffures which hair pads make possible. Hair pads thus remain, like the veil, a permanent feature of dress among many women."

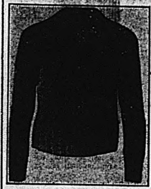
BOY'S KNITTED SWEATER.

Directions How to Make This Comfortable Garment.

This very useful sweater for the small boy, which opens on the shoulder, is made in the following manner: Five 2 ounce skeins of double knitting wool, four bone or ivory knitting needles No. 7. Cast on 68 stitches.—First row. Slip 1, knit 3, purl 2, * knit 2, purl 2; repeat from * to within 4 of end of row; knit these 4 stitches; repeat this row 3 times more.—Fifth row. Slip 1, knit 1, make 1 by putting the wool before the needle, knit 2 together (this will form a buttonhole), work in pattern rib as in previous row, knit the 4 last stitches; repeat the first row 9 times more, always taking care to keep the rib of 2 purl, 2 plain in the center, and 4 plain stitches at each edge.—Fifteenth row. Same as fifth row, for second buttonhole.—Sixteenth and seventeenth rows. Same as first row. This forms a collar 2½ inches in depth. For the shoulder piece, knit the first 12 stitches, leaving the remaining 56 on the needle. Take another needle, * turn, and knit 12 stitches; repeat from * 5 times more, then make a third buttonhole as before, taking care that it is exactly under those already made. Knit 9 plain rows, a fourth buttonhole in the tenth row; knit 9 plain rows, make a fifth buttonhole; knit 3 rows plain. This finishes the first shoulder piece, which consists of 40 rows and should measure 4 inches. Thread the 12 stitches on a piece of wool. Break off. Knit the next 20 stitches (these are for the front of yoke); take another needle. Knit the next 12 stitches, turn, and knit back, and work 40 rows for the second shoulder piece, without buttonholes. This leaves 24 stitches on the needle. Knit the next 20 stitches for the back; take another needle and knit the last 4 stitches. Turn and knit back on the 4 stitches for 40 rows. Cast off. Pick up and knit 20 stitches along the side of this piece just worked, 20 along the back needle and 20 along the other shoulder piece (60 in all).—to row. Turn, purl to end of row.—Second row. * Knit 3, purl 13; repeat from * to end of row. Third row. Purl.—Fourth row. Purl 3; knit 3; repeat from * to end of row. Repeat these rows till the yoke measures 5 inches (40 rows).—For the front pick up and knit 20 stitches along the first shoulder piece, 20 on front needle and 20 along the next shoulder piece (60 stitches). Work in pattern the same as the back for 5 inches. The rest of the jersey is knitted on 4 needles. Divide the stitches evenly, and knit plain for 9 inches, measured from the bottom of the yoke. Finish with ribbing of knit 2, purl 2, alternately, for 4 inches; cast off loosely.—For the sleeves, pick up and knit 24 along the side of front, 12 along the top, and 24 along the side of back (60 stitches). Divide the stitches evenly. * Knit plain for 6 rounds.—Seventh round. Decrease thus: Knit 1, knit 2 together, knit plain to within 3 stitches of the end of round, knit 2 together, knit 1; repeat from * till reduced to 40 stitches. On these 40 stitches knit plain till the sleeve measures 13 inches. Finish with ribbing of knit 2, purl 2, alternately, for 4 inches, when the sleeve should measure 17 inches. Fasten the narrow strip worked on 4 stitches neatly under the buttonholes on the left shoulder and sew on five buttons.



A SPORTY LOOKING SWEATER.

Well Trained Servants.

"When I married," said a dear old lady, "I had only these two servants, but they were trained ones." And she stretched out her two hands.

It is given to very few women to be mistress of a great house and manage a corps of servants, but we each have two hands, and in just such measure as they are properly trained to service that is deft and capable shall housekeeping prosper.

CATTLE MARKETS.

Lower Prices for Hogs at Bufalo and Chicago—Markets Active.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 23.—John Rogers & Co., Liverpool, cable to-day that Saturday's prices were well maintained in the Birkenhead market; the demand was slow, and, altho supplies are very light, it is extremely improbable that there will be any material rise in prices, States and Canadian steers making from 12¼c to 12¾c per lb.

Union Stock Yards.

TORONTO, Jan. 23.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Stock Yards were 94 carloads, consisting of 1957 cattle, 1 hog, 567 sheep and lambs, 31 calves and 21 horses.

Exporters.

E. L. Woodward bought for Swift & Co. 237 cattle as follows: Export steers, 206, weighing 1140 to 1367 lbs., at $6 to $6.25; 4 heifers, 1050 lbs., at $6; 27 bulls, 1580 to 1900 lbs. each, at $5.10 to $5.50.

Butchers.

Prime picked lots, $6 to $6.25; loads of good, $5.75 to $5.90; medium, $5.40 to $5.60; common, $5 to $5.35; cows, $3.75 to $5.50; bulls, $4 to $5; canners, $2.50 to $3.

Milkers and Springers.

A limited number of milkers and springers were all bought by Fred Rowntree at $45 to $80 each.

Veal Calves.

Prices for veal calves were unchanged at $3 to $8.50 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Receipts of 567 sheep and lambs, met a dull market; sheep, ewes, sold at $4.25 to $4.50; rams, $3 to $3.50; lambs, $5.80 to $5.90; with one or two selected lots at $5.90, and one lot of 31 lambs, reported at $6.

Hogs.

Wm. Harris, W. J. Johnston and H. P. Kennedy all reported hogs lower. Selects, fed and watered, at the market, $7.50 and $7.15 to drovers for hogs, f.o.b., cars, at country points, which means that the farmer will get $7 per cwt. this week.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Jan. 23.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, the receipts of live stock for the week ending Jan. 21 were 2300 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 2000 hogs and 200 calves, while the offerings this morning amounted to 1300 cattle, 500 sheep and lambs, 850 hogs and 125 calves.

An easier feeling prevailed in the market for cattle, owing to the more liberal supplies coming forward, but prices practically showed no change as compared with those of a week ago. Dealers who bought cattle in the Toronto market last week which cost 6c per lb., laid down here, stated that they would lose plenty of money to-day in this market, as some of them were offering such stock in carload lots at $5.85 per cwt., and found it rather difficult to make sales even at this figure.

The trade early in the day was slow, but later it improved some under an improved demand from local buyers for small lots and sales of a few picked steers of very choice quality were made as high as 6⅝c per lb., while choice stock sold at 6¼c to 6½c; good, at 5¾c to 6c; fairly good, at 5¼c to 5½c; fair, at 4¾c to 5c, and the lower grades at 4c to 4½c per lb. There were some choice bulls on the market, which brought 5½c to 5⅝c per lb.

Owing to the smaller receipts of hogs a stronger feeling prevailed in the market, and prices advanced 10c to 15c per cwt. At the advance there was a good demand from packers and a fairly active trade was done with sales of selected lots at $8.10 to $8.25 per cwt., weighed off the cars.

There was no important change in the condition of the market for sheep or lambs. Supplies were ample to fill all requirements and prices ruled about steady. Sheep sold at 4c to 4¼c and lambs, at 6c to 6¼c per lb. The demand for calves was fair and sales of choice stock were made at 6½c per lb., and the lower grades at 4c to 5c per lb.

SAVED SELF AND DAUGHTER

Mattoon, Ill.—"Will you allow me for the benefit of others who may be in the same condition as I was to make a statement in this paper.

"I was in very poor health for years, was weak, ailing, and all run-down, and had lost in weight until I only weighed ninety pounds. I had been under a physician's care, without any benefit, for so long I was discouraged.

About a year ago I decided to try a tonic called Vinol, concerning which I had heard many favorable reports. I commenced to gain, and increased in weight until I now weigh 127 pounds, am in perfect health—and never felt better in my life.

Then, my daughter who lived in Martinsville, Ind., was an invalid, and no encouragement was held out for her recovery. After my experience with Vinol, we went to Martinsville and brought her to Mattoon, as she was helpless. When we got her here I put her on Vinol, with the same good results from it's use which I had—she gained in weight, and today she is wel and strong and feels better than she ever did in her life." Mrs. O. M. Watrous. (We guarantee this letter is genuine.)

We have for years recommended Vinol as a grand tonic and body-builder, and every year we gain more and more faith in its wonderful virtues. It is certainly the best and simplest tonic restorative we know of. J. S. McKeown.

It's awfully hard for a man to pray for his neighbor as strenuously as he prays for himself.

A wise Chicago millionaire has refused to buy a title for his daughter because of what went with it.

LOT OF MONEY IN A VAULT

NEW YORK, Jan. 23.—A special to the World from Pittsburg says:

Thinking they were about to find only a few papers of little value, attorneys for the estate of S. A. D Yokum, of Corapolis, were amazed to find in a safety deposit vault of the Fidelity Title and Trust Company treasury, certificates of gold and silver to the amount of over $100,000

Yokum died Jan. 10th, apparently a poor man, He had a small home in Corapolis, but it was thought this was all he had earned from his operations in the oil fields. He was generally regarded as one of the thousands of wildcat speculators who spent their lives drilling dry holes.

Yokum's wife died a few days before his death, and his sister, Mrs Prizilla Weikle, and a brother are the only heirs.

MR. D. MCLEAN'S BAD ACCIDENT

Struck by a Horse at Campbellford and Shoulder Dislocated

The many friends of Mr. Donald McLean, the well-known commercial traveller, will regret to learn that he was the victim of a serious accident at Campbellford on Monday. As he was walking in the middle of the street, the sidewalks being icy, the horse attached to a passing rig shied and, striking Mr. McLean with great force, threw him to the ground, with the result that his shoulder was dislocated. Mr. McLean, who will be laid up for some days, has the sympathy of a host of friends.

County Clerk Chapman annunced that that the first business to be transacted was the election of a warden for the year 1911.

Mr. Charles Ketchenson moved, seconded by Mr. Moore that Mr. James Dryden, Reeve of Deseronto, be warden for 1911.

Mr. Dyden ws unanimously elected, there being no other nomination.

After signing the declaration of office the warden elect addressed the council thanking the members for the unanimous nomination tendered him. There were many ex wardens and old county councillors in the council and he had no doubt he would receive their assistance. The council of 1910 did good work and congratulations were due that council. In referring to the Roads and Bridge report which was submitted annually it should be well looked after nd especially if in that report a defective bridge was reported. The last two years we had to regret the loss of lives by the going down of bridges. He belived that by care the bridges of this county could be better taken care of. All should work harmoniously for the good of the county. Get the best men we can get upon important committees of the county.

On motion the council adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning

FOUL METHODS OF OBTAINING NEWS

LONDON, Jan. 24.—The full weight of the heaviest condemnation of London's leading newspapers descended yesterday with a sickening thud upon on American woman who is attempting to introduce the latest methods of yellow journalism for procuring news of England's society. The Times does not give the offender's full name and address. It is content to describe her as Harriet Blank. It seems she wrote a letter to a butler who advertised for a situation, wherein she said:

"I shall be pleased to hear from you if you have a half an hour to spare once or twice a week and would care to turn it into cash by writing me a long, gossipy letter about well-known people in English society who stay in houses where you are employed. I pay liberally and settle each month. I write for some American papers which insist on having current gossip, amusing stories, etc., about well-known people over here. I buy large quantities of such letters regularly. If you think you would care to doublt or treble your salary on this work, write me a good specimen letter. I will then write you more fully as to terms. To give you an idea of what I may say that just now anything about Lady Gerard and the De Forests is good copy, on account of the slander cases btween them now coming off; also about Dillon, the jockey, on account of the Marie Lloyd divorce suit, in which he is co-respondent; also about Lord Howard de Walden's suit for libel against Lewis. If you write I wish you would tell me if you have any friends with whom you could put me into communication among the staff of the Howard de Waldens, Lady Gerard Baron de Forest, Sir Thomas Lipton Sir Ernest Cassel, Mrs. George Keppel, or her brother, Sir Archibald Edmonstone or at Mrs. Leeds, who has taken Mrs. Keppel's new house on Grosvenor street."

It may be readily imagined that nothing could so stir the English people to its depths as so low an attempt as this to violate privacy. The Times heads a scorching leader on the subject: "A New Pest of Society," and says: "The letter is a complete revelation of the existence of a system the existence of which has often been suspected but never fully exposed It will shock and disgust all decent people and especially those of the same seed with the debased journalist who wrote the letter. We suppress her name and address, not wishing to give her and her system an advertisement or to direct venal possessors of the news she asks for to a market for their worthless wares. The letter suggests the origin of many of those stupid, nasty or exaggerated stories of English society which fill the lower sort of American newspapers. To this point has come, in the hands of the worst kind of American journalists the art of society reporting. The story and the letter throw a lurid light upon the tastes, ideals and standards of life which flourish in a modern democracy, and which, we regret to say, are fostered by a democratic press. The heirs of all ages are thus brought every morning in tittle tattle about a world with which they have nothing in common, and cultivate a snobbishness of which Thackeray never dreamed. Half a chance for a new Thackeray to make the readers of this tainted stuff thoroughly ashamed, for they know now, if they did not before, that it is tainted. It is bought with the price of corruption. It is got by means deliberately designed to violate the most elementary of social rights, the right to preserve one's privacy. Money is lavished to break down the confidence of between masters and servants and to change the constant service of the antique world into habits of hypocrisy, which sells secrets behind one's back. This is an odious state of things indeed, and surely something could be done to stop it, if the reputable American newspapers would take the matter up and expose the damaging nature of the news purveyed and the detestable methods of the purveyors.

TABERNACLE S. S. ENTERTAINED TWO CLUBS AND AN ORCHESTRA

Banquet Given in the Sunday School Rooms--A Large Attendence Enjoyed a Bountiful Spread, and a Fine Programme--Mr. Reggie Hinchey Presented With a Gold-Headed Umbrella—Interesting Addresses and Pleasing Music

The officers and teachers connected with the Sunday School of the Tabernacle church last evening tendered a banquet to the orchestra and the Eureka and Alpha clubs which are organizations in connection with the church

The affair was held in the basement of the church and was largely attended, the S. S. rooms being filled. A most bountiful spread was provided and thoroughly enjoyed. Mr. J. E Walmsley, the superintendent of the school, occupied the chair, filling that position in a highly acceptable manner. After supper a toast list was carried out, and the various speakers acquitted themselves very creditably The toast list was as follows:

The King—the National Anthem, by all present.

The Orchestra.—Proposed by Mr. G Waddell and responded to by Prof Denmark.

The Eureka Club.—Proposed by Rev. G. Andrews, and responded to by Miss Alice Bell.

The Alpha Club.—Proposed by Mr S. A. Gardner, and responded to by Mr. Arden Betts.

Our Classes.—Proposed by Mr. F. Wills, and responded to by Mrs McLean, Miss Watson and Miss Cummings.

During the evening Mr. T. G. Bell gave a brief but appropriate address and presented Mr. Charles Hanna with a music case. The recipient made a suitable reply.

Mr. J. E. Walmsley read an address to Mr. E. R. Hinchey and presented him with a gold headed umbrella, which presentation was acknowledged. These presentations were in recognition of Messrs. Hanna's and Hinchey's services in connection with the orchestra.

Rev. H. B. Kenny, pastor of the church, and Mr. T. A. Rothwell, B. A., sr., gave addresses which were much appreciated.

The vocal selections rendered during the evening were much appreciated. They consisted of solos by Miss Lottie Watson, Miss May Terwilliger Mr. Jas. S. Dyer, Vera Morton, and a duet by Mrs. Nicholson and Miss Cummings.

No place for the man with a GROUCH.

Notwithstanding what has been said in these columns re. the paving of Front street roadway, we are convinced that a majority of our readers desire to see the street paved and free from mud, and the work finished during 1911.

Let the council decide upon what terms the road shall be built on, a 60—40—75—25 basis, or in any way they think best, but get it settled and commence negotiations for material at as early a date as possible. Consult your Engineer and buy only the best; no makeshift will do for Belleville's main thoroughfare.

Ex-Mayor Marsh's letter to the council re. a civic investigation as proposed by the P. O. Association apparently does not meet with the approval of "Boss Marsh"—"the leading Liberal of Belleville." What can be the matter? Is the gentleman afraid of a portion of a gas holder arising from the cellar of the city hall and staring him in the face?

Investigation of the sale of city lots by a committee who have no power to examine witnesses under oath to compel their attendance or the production of papers must necessarily be a farce. Let there be a real investigation by an impartial jurist.

GENERAL BOOTH, HIS COURTSHIP

Gave the World a Peep Into His Personal History—A Lifelong Attachment

General Booth gave the world a peep into his personal history—full of touching incident—on the occasion of the twentieth anniversary of the death of his wife. He said:

"In tender remembrance I recall to mind the day—April 10, 1852—when I met my beloved wife, and commenced a relationship which has lasted from that day to this and which I am reckoning will continue to the closing hours of my earthly history, and be renewed at the gates of the Celestial City. We met that evening at a sort of public festival of some Methodist people with whom we were both associated. Between the tea drinking and the speaking Catherine Mumford was introduced to me by a mutual friend, who spoke of her in terms of 'the strongest admiration.'"

Never Dislodged

"No doubt," proceeded the General, "I involuntarily threw my heart's door wide open, not knowing, perhaps, what I was doing, and she, not what she was doing, walked in and took the first place there. From that place she was never dislodged—indeed, from it there was never the least inclination to remove her, and there never will be."

There were difficulties in the way of an engagement. He felt that his position was not equal to the responsibility of keeping a wife and home in comfort.

"These views led me to look upon the unexpected situation in which I found myself as a real calamity, and I fought with all my might against the strange feelings that had taken possession of my breast. What could I do with a wife? In the first place I was without any settled income, and had no immediate prospect of finding one, having just separated myself not only from business, but from the people in whose ministry I had the prospect of a call. . . . However, we looked carefully at each other and at our circumstances, and found that we were both quite prepared to wait any number of years that might be necessary before marriage; and with this understanding we entered into an engagement that lasted for nearly forty years in this world, and will, I fondly believe, last forever in the world to come."

Three Years' Courtship

Three years, as a matter of fact, elapsed before the marriage was celebrated. These years were devoted by the General to making the most of his opportunity for saving the people to whom he ministered. "In all this," he went on, "this beautiful woman strove, in season and out of season, in circumstances pleasing or painful, to keep me faithfully and self-denyingly to my task."

Mrs. Booth did not speak at any of her husband's meetings until some years after her marriage, always giving as her reason her conviction that she was not called to the duty.

"We had had a number of testimonies" said the General, referring to a meeting at Gateshead, "and I was on the point of closing the meeting, when I saw my wife rise from her seat, and, trembling with emotion, walk up the aisle, asking for permission, as she did so, to deliver a message which was on her heart. I thought something had happened to her, and so did the people. Stepping down from the pulpit, I asked, 'What is the matter, my dear?' She replied, 'I want to say a word.' I was so taken by surprise that I could only say, 'My dear wife wishes to speak,' and I then sat down. The influence which rested on the congregation convinced every thoughtful person present that this was the beginning of a marvellous career. When men listened to her all questions of sex were forgotten. That it was a woman who was speaking was seldom thought about. Her personality was lost in the message she delivered.

Her Fatal Illness

"I shall never forget," said the General, in conclusion, "the day that my darling wife crossed the room in which we were sitting and, putting her arms round me, told me how she had received the sentence of death in herself. She had been to consult some eminent surgeons, and they had each informed her that she was smitten with the terrible disease of cancer, which in a couple of years' time, unless some miracle were performed, would certainly carry her away. The agony I suffered through the thirty-two long months which intervened between the announcement of her sad fate and its realization I could not describe. All that time I seemed to see death drawing nearer and nearer, until at length, with her hand pointing to the text, 'My grace is sufficient for thee,' which was hanging before her, she passed away into the presence of her Lord."

Specific Charges Wanted

So claims Aldermen Lott and Clarke. What constitutes direct charges? Let us investigate.

The question of an investigation into the conduct of ex-Mayor Marsh and Treasurer Price in the matter of selling city property to mother-in-law, son-in-law and wife, claimed consideration at the hands of our Aldermen at the last meeting of the City Council, and after no little pettifogging carping, led by Alderman Clarke, aided by Alderman Lott, upon a technicality as to whether a direct charge "had been made of any wrong doing on the part of the ex-Mayor, the question was referred to a committee of Council consisting of Aldermen Caldwell, Riggs and McGie," on a vote of 10 to 5. Who the five were, who voted to stifle investigation, the records do not disclose.

Among other things that occurred at the meeting was the reading of a letter from ex-Mayor Marsh, which, to say the least of it, was never equalled in cheek and impudence. It was a message dictating to the Council what it should do before taking steps to ascertain whether he, when Mayor, had used his position to feather the nest of his relatives, at the expense of the city. This letter is worthy of reproduction as a Bay of Quinte curio for future generations to study and learn what kind of city officials reigned in Belleville in the year 1910. Read this unique document. It is as follows:—

Belleville, Jan. 23, 1911.

His Worship the Mayor, and Aldermen of the City Council:

Gentlemen,—From reports in the newspapers of issue of January 14th, it would appear that an association calling themselves a "Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association" intends to petition your honorable body, asking that you request the Provincial Government for a judicial investigation of the conduct of civic affairs of this city for a number of years back. I do not know whether this body calling itself a "Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association" is representative of the property owners and taxpayers of the city of Belleville, but it might be well for your honorable body to investigate."

As one of the men against whom certain insinuations have been made, I shall personally welcome a proper investigation after due charges have been laid.

As a "property owner and taxpayer," however, I do now object to the action the "Association" is taking, and respectfully submit to your honorable body that until the "Association" demonstrates that its membership roll contains the names of at least a majority of the property owners and taxpayers of this city, and until something more than insinuations are made against ex-mayors, ex-aldermen and officials, your honorable body would not be right in acceding to any such a request as above mentioned.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed.) L. W. MARSH.

What does this letter contain apart from Mr. Marsh's sneer at those who organized and constitute the Property Owners' Association? Among other things, that the Council should take no action to inquire into his conduct until they, the Aldermen, have "investigated" who compose the Property Owners' Association, and then generously adds: "As one of the men against whom certain insinuations have "been made, I shall personally welcome a proper investigation after "some charges have been laid," tendering the advice that "until" the Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association "demonstrate that its "membership roll contains the names of at least a majority of the tax-"payers of this city, and until something more than insinuations are "made against ex-Mayors, ex-Aldermen and officials, your honorable "body would not be right in acceding to any such a request as above "mentioned," that is a demand for an investigation.

We have heard of many explanations of what constitutes the height of impudence, but this dictation of what the Council should do, by one who is charged with wrong doing, caps the climax; but it seems to meet the views, approval and judgment of what is right and wrong by some of the Aldermen, among them Aldermen Lott and Clarke, the former bellowing out: "Let some one make a definite charge, if one can be made." That Mr. Lott should come to the rescue of his chief will not surprise any one. He did not hesitate to take for his own use city property while an Alderman. It could not, therefore, be expected that he would not come to the rescue of those who had dabbled in city property for their own, or their relatives', benefit; but that a man of Mr. Clarke's presumed knowledge of right and wrong should have joined in the cry of "no charges having been made" will surprise everyone who knows him. He is reported as saying:—

"There have been insinuations and innuendoes, but there have never been any charges in the P. O. A.," and then ostentatiously "defies the face of clay," etc.

Let us bring to the mind of the reader the contents of Mr. Burrell's letter, and the charges therein contained; the statements of Messrs. Corby, Johnson and Bowell at the public meeting, and then ask the question whether they consisted of "insinuations and innuendoes"? They might be so interpreted by men who desire to cover up wrong doing and stifle investigation, but we venture the opinion that not a man who has the remotest knowledge of what the English language means will so interpret what has been said.

What are Mr. Burrell's charges? Simply that he could get no satisfactory information from the Treasurer as to the price of certain lots he wanted to purchase further than that they were "under offer," but it was intimated to him that he could procure the lots through Ford, who was in his employ, to interview the Mayor and see what could be done. This Mr. Ford did, and, after some negotiations with him, succeeded in purchasing the lots wanted by Mr. Burrell at $75 per lot. These negotiations took place in September, and that when he received deeds for the lots, he found he was not buying from the city, but from Mrs. Smith, the Mayor's mother-in-law, and that the deeds from the Mayor and Treasurer to Mrs. Smith were dated in October, the month after which Mr. Ford had negotiated the purchase from Mayor Marsh, and that the amount paid for the lots by, or on behalf of, Mr. Smith was $25 per lot. Yet, in the face of these plain facts, Messrs. Lott and Clarke solemnly declare there has been nothing but "insinuations and innuendoes" made.

In addition to this direct charge of Mr. Burrell's that lots were held in reserve for mother-in-law, at $25 a lot, until son-in-law found a purchaser for them at $75 a lot, this precious trio, Marsh, Lott and Clarke, declare that there has been nothing but "insinuations and innuendoes" thrown at the officials. Add to these plain statements of Mr. Burrell, those of Messrs. Corby, Johnson and Bowell at the public meeting, based upon records secured at the Registry Office, and made upon their own responsibility and those of Messrs. Phillips and Solmes, and ordinary mortals will have no difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what constitute "direct charges." If more were wanted, read Mr. Johnson's letter, in which he clearly indicates conspiracy in the transactions to take from the city that which belongs to it, and then declare there was only "insinuation and innuendo" indulged in, it would be sufficient, to use the trite expression of the late Hon. John Sanfield Macdonald, "to make a horse laugh."

Let us suggest a mode by which these injured souls, if injured they have been, can clear their skirts, if innocent. The courts are open to them, and, so far as The Intelligencer is concerned, no technicality will be resorted to to prevent a full and thorough bringing to light of what has been done in the matter of selling city property. Let's have the truth, and the innocent should demand it.

Unless our Aldermen have come to the conclusion that city officials are right in utilizing their positions to speculate in city property at the expense of the city, they should insist upon a judicial investigation, no matter what the cost might be. The future welfare of the city demands it. The interests of the city are at stake, and it is the duty of those in authority to ferret out all wrong doing, if any exists, and punish the offenders. If there has been no wrong done, let the innocent have a clean sheet and be relieved of all suspicion. Surely, no honest man can justify, if true, the charges laid at the door of ex-Mayor Marsh and Treasurer Price, and if not true let the dishonor rest upon the men who have made, not "insinuations," but charges, plain and distinct.

The annual oyster supper in connection with the local Home Circle came off on Tuesday evening, Jan. 17. About 175 members and friends gathered in the newly decorated Town Hall to do justice to the sumptuous repast provided.

Some were restrained from doing their utmost by the brilliant lights, especially installed for the occasion, which shed perhaps too much lustre. However, a number to their credit be it said were able to respond to their name on the program which was in charge of City Solicitor Mikel. Addresses were given by Russell Chown, Esq., and W. D. M. Shorey, Esq., Belleville. Mr. Scammell enlightened the occasion wih some songs but perhaps the star feature was a chorus composed of Messrs. Moorman, Rosevear, Kerr, Bedell, Gallery Campbell and Clarke, led by Mr. Mikel, entitled "Be Hankus and Be Hunkus" which elicited much applause.

This circle has increased its membership by sixtyfour members, thereby making it the Banner Circle of the Dominion. A congregational meeting this week decided to increase their funds for the church tower by holding a tea meeting.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

"Well it is, in a sense," he admitted. "You see, we are jolly hard up. It's a squeese for you to double my pay, and, as I happened to inform Mr. Traill that I was going to marry Enid, long before he knew she was his daughter, it came as a bit of a shock afterwards to hear that he intends to endow her with two hundred thousand pounds on her wedding-day. Now the question to be discussed is not whether the adopted daughter of a poor lighthouse-keeper who may be Lord This-and-That in disguise is a good match for me, but whether an impecunious lieutenant in the Royal Navy is such a tremendous catch for a girl with a great fortune."

Lady Margaret was stunned. She began to breathe quickly. Her utmost expectations were surpassed. Before she could utter a word her son pretended to misunderstand her agitation.

"Of course it was fortunate that Enid and I had jolly well made up our minds somewhat in advance, but it was a near thing, a matter of flag signals—otherwise I should have been compelled to consider myself ruled out of the game. Therefore, during your tea-table tactics, if the Dowager, or that old spit-fire, Mrs. Taylor-Smith, says a word to you about Brand, just give 'em a rib-roaster with Enid's two hundred thou', will you? Whilst they are reeling under the blow throw out a gentle hint that Constance may ensnare Traill's nephew. 'Ensnare' is the right word, isn't it? The best of it is, I know they have been worrying you for months about my friendship with 'girls of their class.' Oh, the joy of the encounter! It must be like blowing up a battle-ship with a tuppenny happenny torpedo-boat."

So her ladyship—not without pondering over certain entries in the Books of the Proudly-born, which recorded the birth and marriage of Sir Stephen Brand, ninth baronet, "present whereabouts unknown"—went to bed, but not to sleep, whereas Jack Stanhope never afterwards remembered undressing, so thoroughly tired was he, and so absurdly happy, notwithstanding the awkward situation divulged at the dinner.

He knew that Brand was not likely to leave them in dubiety as to the past. Discussion now was useless, a mere idle guessing at probabilities, so he boldly plunged into the mystery as yet surrounding Enid's first year of existence.

Mr. Traill, glad enough to discuss a more congenial subject, marshalled the ascertained facts. It was easy to see that here, at least, he stood on firm ground.

"Your father, as you know, was a noted yachtsman, Charlie," he said. "Indeed, he was one of the first men to cross the Atlantic in his own boat under steam and sail. Twenty years ago, in this very month, he took my wife and me, with your mother, you, and our little Edith, then six months old, on a delightful trip along the Florida coast and the Gulf of Mexico. It was then arranged that we should pass the summer among the Norwegian fiords, but the two ladies were nervous about the ocean voyage east in April, so your father brought the Esmeralda across, and we followed by mail steamer. During the last week of May and the whole of June we cruised from Christiana almost to the North Cape. The fine keen air restored my wife's somewhat delicate health, and you and Edith throve amazingly. Do you remember the voyage?"

"It is a dim memory, helped a good deal I imagine, by what I have heard since."

"Well, on the fourth of July, putting into Hardanger to celebrate the day with some fellow-countrymen, I received a cable which rendered my presence in New York absolutely imperative. There was a big development scheme just being engineered in connection with our property. In fact, the event which had such a tragic sequel practically quadrupled your fortune and mine. By that time, the ladies were so enthusiastic about the sea-going qualities of the yacht that they would have sailed around the world in her, and poor Pyne had no difficulty in persuading them to take the leisurely way home, whilst I raced off via Newcastle and Liverpool to the other side. I received my last cable from them dated Southampton, July 20th, and they were due in New York somewhere about August 5th or 6th, allowing for ordinary winds and weather. During the night of July 21st, when midway between the Scilly Isles and the Fastnet, they ran into dense fog. Within five minutes, without the least warning, the Esmeralda was struck amidships by a big Nova Scotian barque. The little vessel sank almost like a stone. Nevertheless, your father, backed by his skipper and a splendid crew, lowered two boats, and all hands were saved, for the moment. It was Pyne's boast that his boats were always stored with food and water against any kind of emergency, but, of course, they made every effort to reach the ship which had sunk them, rather than endeavor to sail back to this coast. As the Esmeralda was under steam at the time, her boilers exploded as she went down, and this undoubtedly caused the second catastrophe. The captain noticed that the strange ship went off close hauled to the wind, which blew steadily from the west, so he, in the leading boat, with your father and mother, you and my wife and child, followed in that direction. He shouted to four men in the second boat to keep close, as the fog was terrific. The barque, the John S., hearing the noise of bursting boilers, promptly swung round, and in the effort to render assistance caused the second and far more serious catastrophe. The captain's boat encountered her just as the two crafts were getting way on them. Someone in the boat shouted, they heard an answering hail, and instantly crashed into the barque's bows. The sail became entangled in the martingale of the bowsprit, the boat was driven under and filled, and the second boat crashed into her. All the occupants of the captain's boat were thrown into the sea. You were grasped by a negro, a powerful swimmer. He, with yourself and two sailors, were rescued, and that was all. Your father was a strong man and he could swim well. He must have been stunned or injured in some way. The two sailors jumped from the second boat and clung to the barque's bobstays. The whole thing was over in a few seconds."

Mr. Traill rose and paced slowly to the window. Pyne stared into the fire. There was no need for either of them to conjure up the heart-rending scene as the sharp prow of the sailing-ship cleft through the seas and spurned the despairing hands clutching at her black walls.

Too often had the elder man pictured that horrific vision. It had darkened many hours, blurred many a forgetful moment of pleasure with a quick rush of pain.

Even now, as he looked out into the still street, he fancied he could see Enid's mother smiling at him from a luminous mist.

He passed a hand over his eyes and gazed again at the moonlit roadway. From the black shadows opposite a policeman crossed towards the hotel, and he heard a bell ring. These trivial things restored his wandering thoughts. How the discovery of his lost child had brought back a flood of buried memories!

"It is easy to understand that I should be fanciful to-night," he said, returning to the cheery glow of the fire and the brightness of the room. "The whole story of the disaster centered in the narratives of the sailors and the negro. They all declared that both boats went down. The crew of the barque, who ran to starboard, as the leading boat was swamped and sank on that side, imagined they heard cries to port. But though they lowered a boat, and cruised about the locality for hours, they found nothing but wreckage. You, Charlie, when I went to St. John's five weeks later, could only tell me that you had felt very cold and wet. That is all I ever knew of the fate of the Esmeralda until, in God's good time, I met Stanhope on board the Falcon."

"Then the manner of Enid's rescue is conjectural?"

"Absolutely. But Stanhope, who is a sailor, and two men named Spence and Jones, who were Brand's colleagues on the Gulf Rock at that time, have helped me in building up a complete theory. It is quite clear that the second boat did not sink, as was reported by the captain of the John S. She was damagad, and had her mast broken, by the collision. In the darkness and confusion she would be readily carried past the barque, which was probably traveling four knots an hour. The two sailors, in springing from her gunwale into the bobstays, would certainly cant her considerably, and at that instant my poor wife either threw her child into the boat with a last frenzied effort, or someone caught the baby from her as she sank. The boat was seen by Brand floating in with the tide on the morning of the 30th of July. She had been nine days at sea. Some survivor must have given the little one nourishment in that time, as a twelve-months-old child could not possibly have lived. In all likelihood, the bank of fog clung to the surface of the sea and followed the tides, as there was little or no wind on the days following the loss of the yacht. Again, there were provisions in the boat, but no water. Why? Either the water-casks had started their staves when the smash took place, or a careless steward had failed to fill them. The next thing is the identity of the boat. By the stupidity of a sailor, one of the Esmeralda's life-boats was burnt to the water's edge in Norway. He upset a tin of petroleum whilst he was opening it, and a lighted match did the remainder. Indeed, he and another man at the oars narrowly escaped death. A boat was purchased, but accident or mischance prevented the Esmeralda's name being painted on it. There was a Norwegian port number on the stern-board, and this was smashed away by the falling mast. As the sail was trailing in the water when the boat was found by Brand, it is assumed that the survivor or survivors, who paid some heed to the child, suffered from injuries which prevented him or them from hauling it in. One man's body was found on board and he had been dead many days. Finally, we have the evidence of the child's clothing."

"The girls told me something of the story on the rock," said Pyne. "Gee whiz! I little dreamed that Enid, or Edith, I mean, was my first cousin."

"You know that her garments were marked E. T., and that a little shawl was pinned about her with a gold brooch set with emeralds arranged as a four-leafed shamrock?"

"No. I fancy that they were hindered in their yarn. Believe me, there was always enough to do in that wonderful place. Besides, I knew about the brooch. Had they mentioned it, I guess the gray matter at the back of my head would have become agitated by thought."

"Yes, of course. I am talking to you as if you were hearing this sad history for the first time."

"It is new enough. It has a fresh point of view, which is everything. Now, about that brooch?"

"I bought it in Bergen. I remember your poor father laughing about it. It was odd to find an Irish emblem in that out-of-the-way little town. I have not seen it yet, but it is ludicrous to think that so many coincidences can affect two different children cast adrift about the same time in open boats at the junction of the St. George's Channel and the North Atlantic."

"It's the kind of thing that doesn't occur with monotonous regularity," agreed Pyne. "By the way, I have just made an interesting discovery on my own account."

"What is it?"

"It might easily have happened that not Enid—sorry—I mean Edith—but I should have been the youngster cast adrift in that boat."

"Yes, that is so, of course."

"And I would have grown up as Constance's brother. Guess things have panned out all right as it is."

It was on the tip of his uncle's tongue to ask for some explanation of the very gratified tone in which Master Charles made this remark, but the head waiter entered, solemnly, with the air of respectful and discreet decorum which only an English family butler or a head waiter can assume without burlesque.

"Beg pardon, gentlemen," he said, "but I thought you would like to know about the lady in No. 11, Mrs. Vansittart."

"Yes, what of her?" demanded Traill, whilst Pyne found himself imagining that which caused his heart to beat more rapidly than even the fight for life in the saloon of the Chinook.

"She went out, sir about an hour ago, and—"

"Has she not returned?"

"No, sir. A policeman has just called to say that she was taken ill, and is now bein' cared for at Mr. Brand's house."

Uncle and nephew glared at each other as men do when they call the gods to witness that no madder words could be spoken. Before the waiter, they perforce restrained themselves. But Pyne shouted:

"Where is the policeman?"

"He is down below, sir. Shall I bring him up?"

Sergeant Jenkins, however, was too loyal in his friendship to Brand to tell them exactly how it came about that Mrs. Vansittart was sheltered in Laburnum Cottage. He admitted that he directed the lady to the house in the first instance, and that Mr. Brand told him subsequently to convey the stated message to the hotel.

Nevertheless, he was the richer for a sovereign as he went out.

Mr. Traill helped himself to a whiskey and soda.

"Here's to the reconciliation of Brand and his wife," he said, with a lighter tone and more cheerful manner than he would have deemed possible five minutes earlier.

Pyne followed his example.

"Say, uncle," he cried, "here's a queer item. When I first met Constance I spoke of Mrs. Vansittart, and I called her my prospective step-aunt."

"A d——d silly name, too."

"Constance seemed to think that, or its feminine equivalent. She corrected me, 'You mean your fiancee's aunt,' she said."

"Oh, did she?"

"Yes, and here's to her being my fiancee's mother."

* * * * *

With the morning came doubt. A maid, who was given charge of the two children, told Pyne that Mrs. Vansittart had been greatly upset the previous evening. The girl was sure that the lady had passed nearly an hour in tears kneeling by the side of her bed. Then, having regained control of herself to some extent, she rang for the maid and asked at what time the first train left for London next day. She ordered her breakfast at an hour which seemed to indicate her intention to depart by that train, said that she would leave instructions with Mr. Pyne concerning the children, and gave the maid two letters which she had written. These were to be delivered at nine o'clock. It was now nine o'clock. What was to be done with the letters?

As they were addressed to Pyne and his uncle respectively he soon settled that point.

His letter read:

"Dear Mr. Pyne—I am leaving for London quite early, so I will not see you again in Penzance. I have supplied the little girls with all the garments they will need during the next few days. If, on inquiry, you ascertain that they have no relatives anxious, not merely willing, to take charge of them, I shall be most pleased to assume that responsibility. In that event, kindly write to me, care of my bankers.

"Yours very sincerely,
"E. Vansittart."

Woman's Power Over Man

Woman's most glorious endowment is the power to awaken and hold the pure and honest love of a worthy man. When she loses it and still loves on, no one in the wide world can know the heart agony she endures. The woman who suffers from weakness and derangement of her special womanly organism soon loses the power to sway the heart of a man. Her general health suffers and she loses her good looks, her attractiveness, her amiability and her power and prestige as a woman. Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo, N.Y., with the assistance of his staff of able physicians, has prescribed for and cured many thousands of women. He has devised a successful remedy for women's ailments. It is known as Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive specific for the weaknesses and disorders peculiar to women. It purifies, regulates, strengthens and heals. Medicine dealers sell it. No honest dealer will advise you to accept a substitute in order to make a little larger profit.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG.
SICK WOMEN WELL.

AFTER TREATMENT

He was surprised at how the sores healed—"I took your NEW METHOD TREATMENT for a serious blood disease with which I had been infected for twelve years. I had consulted a score of physicians taken all kinds of blood medicine, visited Hot Springs and other mineral water resorts, but only got temporary relief. They would help me for a time, but after discontinuing the medicines the symptoms would break out again—running sores, blotches, rheumatic pains, looseness of the hair, swellings of the glands, palms of the hands scaling, itchiness of the skin, dyspeptic stomach, etc. I had given up in despair when a friend advised me to consult you, as you had cured him of a similar disease 8 years ago. I had no hope, but took his advice. In three weeks' time the sores commenced to heal up and I became encouraged. I continued the NEW METHOD TREATMENT for four months and at the end of that time every symptom had disappeared. I was cured 7 years ago and no signs of any disease since. Death to Autonomy.

London, Jan. 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—Touching the reciprocity agreement, The News asserts that the tariff reformers' scheme of an imperial preference is shown to be merely the old colonial system under a different name. Its establishment as an ideal would mean the death of colonial autonomy, which has always been the colonies' own ideal. Free trade alone asks nothing of the colonies, who have deliberately omitted the preference from the list of conference resolutions.

Mormons In Montreal.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—A Mormon propaganda has been opened in Montreal. The emissaries of Joseph Smith for a week past have been sowing their literature as thick and wide as possible in the north end of the city. Many houses have received circulars from the disciples of Mormonism, who are making a door-to-door canvass in that part of the city. There are supposed to be two workers engaged in distributing Mormon literature in the city.

Sold Cocaine Illegally.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—In the recorder's court yesterday morning, Achille Goyette, a druggist in this city, was ordered to pay $25 and costs or go to prison for three months for the illegal sale of cocaine. Last November Recorder Dupuy gave a similar sentence, and strongly rebuked Goyette for what he described as a cowardly act.

ARMY SMOKER WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

Some Clever Bouts Were Witnessed and the Regimental Band Furnished Music

The Regimental Smoker held in the Armories of the XV. Regiment, last evening was a decided success. In the centre of the main hall an elevated ring, 20 feet square was erected and with its roped sides and padded floor presented a very pleasing sight to many of our sporting citizens.

The Regiment Band, under the direction of Bandmaster Robinson, rendered a very pleasing and creditable programme of music, which was much enjoyed.

The first number on the programme was a Bag-pipe selection by the world renowned Pipers of the Kilties' Band

Referee John Mackie then announced the first contest, a four-round event in the 135 pound class between Kid Meyers, of Salt Lake City, and Tommy Daly, of Toronto. These rounds proved to be a very scientific exhibition of the manly art of self defence No decision.

Willie Grant, of Belleville, danced the Highland Fling, which was loudly encored.

The second and main bout of the evening was then announced, being contested by Frank Laura, ex-amateur heavy weight champion of Canada and Chas. Lang, champion of the Pacific coast, and now a resident of this city.

This event was indeed a clever exhibition, each in turn meriting the approval of the audience. Both seemed to be evenly matched, and at the end of the four rounds, Lang, if anything, had a little the better of his opponent.

The last event, in the 118 pound class, was between Tommy Gallant of Buffalo, and Alex Murray, of Belleville, and during the first round Murray, who suffered the effect of a recent accident was forced to retire.

The promoter, Mr. Chas. Laing, was loudly praised for his untiring effort in being responsible for bringing before the public sporting events of this kind, and he stated that in the course of a short time he would present a still better smoker, as he has received a number of challenges.

Quite a number of spectators witnessed the affair, among whom were Col. Hemming and Col. Young, of Kingston, and Lieut.-Col. Stewart the commanding officer.

The playing of 'God Save the King' brought a pleasant and very enjoyable evening to a close.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Jan. 24.—Jack Johnson offered to bet $10,000 to $5,000 that he can knock out either Al Kaufman or George Cotton. In the case of Cotton the champion is willing to fight the moment the contest is arranged and guarantees to win in less than 10 rounds or forfeit $10,000. As to a fight with Kaufman, Johnson is not specific, except to say he would want four weeks in which to prepare himself.

Johnson visited the Gazette-Times office, made out the $10,000 check, payable to he newspaper, and left disappointed when the newspaper refused to hold the money. He insisted that he would place the check with some reputable person before leaving the city.

GOOD SPORT AT THE WINTER RACES

A Fair Crowd Attended on the Opening Day--The Track Was Slow, But Fast Time Was Made--Some Exciting Racing Was Witnessed--One Favorite Was Bowled Over--Tom Tariff and Furioso Were the Winners

Under the auspices of the Belleville Driving and Athletic Association winter races were held on the driving park yes'e day and wi'l be continued to-day. There was a good attendance yesterday afternoon and considerable interest was manifested in the two events carried out, namely, the 2.50, and 2.17 classes. Owing to the weather during the day being mild, and especially so in the morning, the track was by no means in first-class condition; in fact in some spots it was muddy. This, of course, had a tendency against the best possible time being made, nevertheless some good time was made and the sport provided was pleasing to all.

2.50 CLASS, MILE HEATS.

PURSE $125.

This was the first event called out, and to the sound of the bell five horses responded, namely, Tom Tariff a dark gelding, owned by C. Fife, of Napanee; Edward the King, a bay gelding, owned by Geo. Powell, of this city; Windsor Belle, a chestnut mare, owned by Mr. Leo Ketcheson of this city; Pickett Boy, a brown gelding, owned by W. Simpson, of Campbellford, and Birdie Forest, a brown mare, owned by James Hume of Toronto.

In this event it was anticipated that it would be a horse race between Tom Tariff and Edward the King, and such proved to be the case. In the first heat Edward the King was the winner, and Windsor Belle, which exhibited good speed, was second. In the succeeding three heats Tam Tariff finished first and in each case with a fair margin. The horsese were well bunched in the first half of the mile heat, but in the second half became separated from each other. The summary was as follows:

Tom Tariff, d.g., C. Fife, Napanee	3	1	1	1
Edward the King, b. g., G. Powell, Belleville	1	3	2	3
Windsor Belle, ch. m., L. Ketcheson, Belleville	2	3	2	5
Birdie Forest, b. m., James Hume, Toronto	4	4	4	4
Pickett Boy, b. g., W. Simpson, Campbellford	5	5	5	3

Time—2.31; 2.25; 2.32; 2.28.

2.17 CLASS, MILE HEATS.

PURSE, $150.

Four horses were entered and started in this event, which proved an interesting one. Furioso, a bay stallion owned by J. Powell, Orillia, Forest Pointer, a bay stallion owned by Arnold Bros., of Toronto; Berlin Belle, a brown mare, owned by Simon Bros of Berlin, and Alvardo, a brown stallion, owned by McCue Bros., of Kingston.

In the four heats necessary to determine the winners, some fine exhibitions of speed were at times to be seen. Furioso was naturally the favorite and he proved a winner, although in the first heat the best position he could secure was third place In the three succeeding heats he however, forged ahead and was not overtaken. Considering the condition of the track the time made was creditable. In the first heat Forest Pointer passed under the wire first, but in the next three heats had to be content with second, third and fourth places. By many present this animal was looked upon as the winner of the event, but as the saying is, "there is nothing more uncertain than a horse race." The summary in this event was as follows:

Furioso, b. s., J. Powell, Orillia	3	1	1	1
Forest Pointer, b. s., Arnold Bros., Toronto	1	2	3	4
Berlin Belle, b. m., Simon Bros., Berlin	2	3	2	3
Alvardo, b. s., McCue Bros., Kingston	4	4	4	2

Time—2.27 1-2; 2. 24 1-2; 2.24; 2.24.

THE OFFCIALS.

Mr. M. Sprague was an efficient starter, being not in the least partial to any of the drivers Whilst strict he was by no means too strict.

Messrs. J. A. Mackie and S. Curry were the judges, whilst Dr. Clapp and Capt. Bottum held the time pieces.

NOTES.

Nothing ocurred during the afternoon to mar the passing sport, and all appeared to be well satisfied.

Amongst those in attendance were many lovers of horse from outside the city and vicinity.

SEVERAL BIG SCHEMES

Ontario Government Plans Important Advances.

Speech From Throne Indicates That Money Will Be Spent on Technical Education and Agricultural Improvement—Opening of Third Session Is a Brilliant Affair, Although Handicapped by Recent Fire.

Toronto, Jan. 25.—Once more the legislative mill is at work grinding out government for the greatest of British provinces. The session opened yesterday in almost the usual manner. There was a disturbing element in the air owing to the conflagration of the year before last, which still curtails the accommodation of the Government officials. It is hoped, however, to have the building ready before the next general election. There is nothing like being sanguine.

As a result of the fire there are no Speaker's apartments, and the usual entertainment and reception could not be extended to the great company of ladies assembled. There was no ice-cream and no tea and no cake—nothing, in fact, to stay the failing energies of those in attendance.

Bishop Sweeny was early on hand and Col. Sweeny came about the same time, and they had a chat while the ladies kept coming in. Women take full advantage of such chance as they do get to sit in the Legislature. At 2 o'clock the chamber was half filled.

Ex-Speaker Charlton came in and shook hands with Dr. Smellie. J. K. Brewster, G.C., established himself among the ladies in the opposition benches. The sergeant-at-arms, who has been doing it for two generations of ordinary men, and twelve of politicians, showed the way about.

It was 2.52 when the guard announced the arrival of his honor. Three minutes later Sir James Whitney entered with Mrs. Gibson on his arm, followed by her two daughters. The ladies all rose. The men had no seats to arise from. The costume display was scarcely so brilliant as usual, the absence of the reception customary to the proceedings perhaps accounting for this. Ermine was the only wear, and estimates were in circulation as to the number of defunct felines necessary to compose an ermine robe.

Promptly at three his honor entered, preceded by the military staff. They appeared to have some indecision which side of the table to attack, but divided their forces and got into position.

After the ceremonial, the number of the elect was completed by the introduction by Sir James and Capt. Machin, of John Ransome Howitt, the new member for South Wellington. Real business will be done at three o'clock this afternoon.

Sir James Whitney met J. R. Howitt, at the Bar of the House, and escorted the new legislator to the foot of the throne, where he was welcomed by Mr. Speaker and invited to take his seat.

The Prime Minister introduced the usual statutory notices for the appointment of the statutory standing committees and the administration of acts of office to justices of the peace.

The speech from the throne was, in part:

The speech from the throne referred to the death of the late King in touching terms and paid tribute to his successor, King George.

Plans are being prepared, the speech continued, by the architect of the Department of Public Works for a new residence for the Lieutenant-Governor, which will be suitable for all state functions and have an architectural character in keeping with the importance of the province.

Prison labor has been employed in the construction of roads into the Porcupine mining district with excellent results. The work has been well done, and the effect on the prisoners has been very beneficial. Temporary premises have been erected on the Central Prison Farm near Guelph; quarries of building stone have been opened; and considerable progress has been made in the erection of permanent buildings.

"The necessity for and the advantages arising out of the adoption of a system of technical and industrial education are becoming more obvious day by day, and you will be asked to make an appropriation for this purpose.

"With the view of preserving and increasing the usefulness and beauty of the Algonquin National Park, steps have been taken to extinguish the title of certain timber limit holders of over three hundred and fifty square miles of territory within the limits of the park.

"The output of silver from the mines of Cobalt has been greater than in any previous year, and the discoveries of gold at Porcupine, and the development which has ensued, give promise of richness and permanency.

"During the past year the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway was completed to Cochrane, on the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, a distance of 252 miles from North Bay, and a large sum has been expended in improving that part of the line previously constructed. There has been a substantial increase in the revenue from the railway over that of the previous year.

"An attempt by a syndicate to build an electric railway from the main line of the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway to Porcupine ended in failure, and my Government has undertaken the building of a steam railway, which, it is confidently expected, will be finished not later than June 30, 1911.

"The construction, by the Hydro-Electric Commission of the line for the transmission of electric power has been completed. In working out a new problem of more or less difficulty and delicacy, such as the hydro-electric scheme, certain delays have necessarily occurred, but it is confidently expected that this great undertaking will soon be in full operation. The earnest and unselfish efforts of the members of the commission in this matter merit acknowledgment and commendation.

"Most important work in agriculture has been done by practical demonstrations carried on in live stock, dairying, fruit growing and the growing of field crops by the district representatives of the Department of Agriculture in a number of counties in the province.

"So prompt and conclusive have been the results from this work that there is now a very general demand for its extension, and you will be asked to consider an appropriation for this purpose.

"I am pleased to inform you that the revenues of the province are considerably in excess of the estimates."

BIRD-MAN'S WEDDING.

Romance Culminates In Wedding In London To-day.

London, Jan. 25.—A real aviation romance will culminate to-day when Count Jacques de Lesseps, of France, will be married to Miss Grace Mackenzie, a Toronto girl, and daughter of Sir William Mackenzie, president of the Canadian Northern Railway.

Most of the prominent members of French, American, Canadian and English society here will attend the nuptials at St. James' Church.

Sir William Mackenzie, who was gazetted for knighthood because of his services in developing Canadian railroads, several weeks ago, arrived here yesterday accompanied by Lady Mackenzie.

Count de Lesseps met Miss Mackenzie last July when he visited Toronto and took part in the aviation meet there. She attended the international aviation tournament at Belmont Park, N.Y., and made several flights with him.

Count de Lesseps was one of the trio to make the Statue of Liberty flight over Brooklyn. He is the son of the builder of the Suez Canal, and his father was one of the starters of the Panama Canal.

After a honeymoon in Egypt the count and countess will reside in Paris.

One of the stipulations of the marriage is that the aviator shall not attempt any dangerous aeroplane flights in the future.

Sleeper Tariff Approved.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—The Railway Commissioners yesterday morning gave their formal approval of the new sleeping and parlor car tariffs, which will go into effect on the 15th of February. As pointed out by Chairman Mabee, the new tariffs will make a general reduction in Pullman car rates, in spite of the fact that the rates west of Calgary will be higher by two mills per mile than in the eastern sections of Canada.

The new tariffs, Judge Mabee said, were the first effort to put the sleeping and parlor car rates on a scientific mileage basis.

East of Calgary, 6 mills per mile would be charged for sleeping car berths, with a 20 per cent. discount on the upper berths. In the case of parlor cars, 5 mills per mile will be the charge.

West of Calgary sleeping car rates will be computed on the basis of 3 mills per mile, with a 20 per cent. discount on uppers. The railway companies explained the difference by saying it costs more to haul the cars through the mountains. The parlor car rate will be two-thirds of a cent per mile.

Boat to Open Harbor.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—Edouard Duplessis has invented an ice-plow boat which he believes will solve the problem of keeping the port of Montreal open for navigation during the winter months.

This new boat is not of the same pattern as boats for breaking ice in the St. Lawrence. It does not ride upon the top of the ice and break it by sheer weight, but cuts the ice as the share of a farmer's plow turns the sod.

Mr. Duplessis is a French-Canadian and was born 60 years ago at Three Rivers, Que. He has been a mechanical engineer for thirty years, and is at present employed by the Canadian Government at Sorel as a mechanical engineer. During the life of Mr. Duplessis, including his last invention, he has patented and marketed 35 different devices.

Lured Away by Bogus Telegram.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—W. F. Pope, the missing Bromptonville merchant, may have been lured away by a bogus telegram from a mysterious Boston woman.

The young man, who dropped from sight a week ago, leaving behind him a gruesome stage setting, which, at first glance, indicated murder, has not since been heard from, but among his papers was found a Boston telegram signed by a young woman, who, his friends say, has not been in Boston for several years. Pope's accounts are said to be in good shape, and no motive for his dramatic disappearance can be discovered.

Phillips, the Novelist, Dead.

New York, Jan. 25.—David Graham Phillips has lost his brave fight for life. He died in Bellevue Hospital late last night, a victim of Fitzhugh Coyle Goldsborough, an eccentric and emotional musician, who, although of refined tastes and aristocratic southern stock, shot the novelist down Monday for a fancied grudge, then killed himself.

Fatally Injured In Explosion.

Galt, Jan. 25.—Laing Cowan, aged 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. Laing Cowan of the Hespeler road, was fatally injured on Monday in an explosion while attempting to repair the acetylene gas plant in his home. He was struck on the head by a flying piece of machinery and passed away yesterday afternoon.

"Jacky" Fisher Retires.

London, Jan. 25.—Sir John Arbuthnot Fisher, first baron of Kilverstone, admiral of the fleet, will retire from the navy to-day under the age limit. He was born in 1841 and has been admiral of the fleet since 1900.

PAYING HIGH RENTAL

Government's Landlords Are Making Their Fortunes.

Richard Blain Shows That Canada Is Paying In Rents For Buildings In Ottawa at the Rate of Eighteen Per Cent. on the Owner's Investment—Motion Voted Down—Sir Frederick Borden's Absence.

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—Imagine Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Hon. William Pugsley excelling each other in the art of self-effacement. Such was the treat the House of Commons enjoyed yesterday afternoon.

W. M. German (Welland) had asked Hon. George P. Graham what truth there was in the report that the sum of $3,000,000 would be placed in the supplementary estimates as provision for commencing the Georgian Bay Canal. "As far as I know, no such appropriation has been discussed by council," was the evasive reply of the Minister of Railways, "and as it is not in my Department I would not have any knowledge whether the head of the Department which it would be under, has it in mind to bring in any appropriation. Personally, I would not be disappointed if both the Georgian Bay and Welland Canals were constructed."

The Premier remarked that his hon. friend would know all about it when the estimates were brought down.

Dr. F. L. Schaffner (Souris) drew the attention of the House to an article appearing in a Toronto paper that Sir Wilfrid had received a $100 Farmers' Bank note as a souvenir, in reply to which the Premier laid the following correspondence on the table:

Toronto, Jan. 1, 1907.

To the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, K.C.M.G., Ottawa:

My Dear Sir Wilfrid—I take great pleasure in enclosing you the first $25 bill ever issued by any bank in Canada.

Please do us the favor of accepting this bill as a souvenir, with the compliments of the Farmers' Bank of Canada. Yours very truly,

W. R. Travers,
General Manager.

Ottawa, January, 1907.

Dear Mr. Travers,—I have your very kind favor of the 1st instant, and I feel very much flattered by the honor which has been done me by your institution.

I accept the souvenir which you have enclosed with the greatest pleasure, and you will add to your kindness if you will present my grateful appreciation to the members of your board.

Believe me, dear Mr. Travers, yours very sincerely.

Wilfrid Laurier.

Beyond reading the correspondence, Sir Wilfrid did not add a word of explanation, and resumed his seat amid Liberal applause.

Adam B. Crosby complained of the absence of Sir Frederick Borden, who is attending a bye-election campaign in Nova Scotia.

Replying in point, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that he had no hesitation in informing his hon frend that he was aware of the fact that Sir Frederick was in Nova Scotia; that he had consulted him before going there, and intimated that an election was on.

"My colleague is not only a member of this House, but I understand he is an elector in the County of Kings, Nova Scotia, and at the present time he is exercising his duty as a citizen, and for that nobody can find fault with him."

In reply to a question by Mr. Middleboro, Sir Wilfrid Laurier said that the Government had been advised of the intention of the Japanese Government to denounce the existing trade agreement with Great Britain, and to make a new treaty. Canada had been asked whether she desired to become a party to the new treaty.

In reply to a question by R. L. Borden, the Premier said that he had received a telegram from Mr. Fielding, stating that the Finance Minister would arrive in Ottawa on Wednesday, and that the result of trade negotiations at Washington would be presented to Parliament on Thursday.

On the motion to go into committee of supply, the House of Commons was thrown into a prolonged discussion yesterday by an amendment introduced by Richard Blain (Peel), that "the action of the Government in renting certain building in the City of Ottawa at prices which net the owners from 15 to 18 per cent. on the cost of their property, is unbusinesslike, indefensible and merits the censure of this House."

The debate for the first part was a repetition of a previous year's discussion, but as the talk extended late into the evening, it became apparent that the Opposition was determined to thresh the whole matter out, and as fresh speakers were continually put forward, a decision was not reached till half an hour after midnight. The motion was voted down. The vote stood yeas 61, nays 104, Government majority 43. A. Gilbert (Drummondville and Arthabaska) voted with the Government.

Gladstone Denounced.

London, Jan. 25.—Great excitement and resentment have been aroused in Rhodesia and South Africa generally, according to despatches received here, on account of the new governor, Viscount Gladstone, commuting the death sentence on a native for criminal assault on a white woman.

Influential meetings of protest have been held in Buluwayo and elsewhere, at which Governor Gladstone's interference has been hotly denounced.

Turkey's Resentment.

Rome, Jan. 25.—Considerable excitement has been caused by the departure of the battleship Pisa for Egypt, and the order just issued to the battleships Sangiorgio and Sanmarco to hold themselves in readiness to sail at any moment.

JAPAN'S POLICY.

Komura Makes Important Commercial Statement.

Washington, Jan. 25.—Significant interest attaches to the speech made yesterday in the Lower House of the Japanese Diet at Tokio by Count Komura, Minister of Foreign Affairs. The Japanese embassy made public last night a transcript of the address, which defines the foreign policy of Japan, with especial reference to the Japanese-Russian arrangement with regard to Manchuria, the annexation of Korea, and the contemplated revision of the tariff treaties of Japan with foreign powers.

"The relation of Japan with foreign powers," said Komura, "have been steadily growing in cordiality unhampered by any incidents standing in the way of international friendship. Above all it will be noted with the highest gratification that the Anglo-Jap alliance, which has been constantly gaining additional strength and solidity, continues to be a powerful factor in the preservation of general peace in the east."

Speaking of the agreement of July 4 last, between Japan and Russia, in adjustment of their respective interests in Manchuria, Count Komura said:

"It appears that in some quarters this last understanding has been looked on with a sense of suspicion and misgiving. I have no hesitation in positively declaring that it has for its sole object the maintenance of the status quo in Manchuria and of the enduring peace in the Far East by confirming the principles and supplementing the policy laid down in 1907.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Sir Edward Morris denies that Newfoundland rejects reciprocity.

Campbell's pulp mill at Weymouth, N.S., was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $50,000.

Slipping beneath the wheel of a work train at Montrose, near Niagara Falls, Frank Hyde, a Michigan Central trainman, was killed almost instantly yesterday.

A resolution favoring the appointment by the Government of independent bank inspectors was passed yesterday afternoon at the annual meeting of the Traders' Bank in Toronto.

Another shipment of eggs in Montreal has been seized. They came from Russia and comprise 10,000 eggs. The eggs are canned and in commercial circles are known as "liquified eggs, sold in bulk."

A permanent tariff board of five members to investigate all questions for the benefit of Congress is provided for in a bill unanimously agreed upon by the House committee on ways and means yesterday.

The recount of ballots cast in the Belleville mayoralty election was held Monday before Judge Deroche, a gain of one being made in favor of Mayor Ackerman. A few ballots were reserved for argument, but not enough, the judge stated, to affect the general result.

Frederick Brown, charged with having shot Robert Ford, at Montreal, arrived from Peterboro, Ont., Monday night, accompanied by Detective Riopel, and at the detectives' offices had an interview with Chief Carpenter, to whom he declared that he had fired the shot in self-defence.

Mrs. Joseph Martin, poverty-stricken and without fuel, crouched over an oil lamp in her home at Montreal just after midnight in an effort to get some warmth. The lamp exploded and the woman's screams brought the police, who, battering down the door, found her fearfully burned and dead on the floor.

George King, an employe of the Fitzgibbon Boiler Works, Ogdensburg, was nearly burned to death yesterday. He was working on one of the boilers of the steamer Ogdensburg when the contents exploded and spread over King's head and shoulders. He may never see again. One ear was burned to a crisp.

Longest Aerial Flight Over Sea.

Key West, Fla., Jan. 25.—The longest aeroplane flight over sea in the history of aviation will start from here to-day, if the weather is favorable, when Aviator J. A. D. McCurdy, the Canadian aviator, will commence his 110-mile trip from Key West to Havana, Cuba.

The final arrangements were completed by Mr. McCurdy and those assisting him yesterday. The torpedo destroyers and other vessels that will be anchored ten miles apart to guide the aviator, departed last night.

High Pressure Investigation.

Winnipeg, Jan. 25.—Developments in the civic fire investigation yesterday included a statement by Chief Buchanan of the fire brigade that the pressure of the high power water system in the business section was being maintained at only 50 instead of the regular insurance demand. The chief also said that the big fire that destroyed the warehouse of the Martin-Bole-Wynne Co., the high pressure mains had been emptied, because the signal arrangements with the pumping station fell down.

An Indian Deputation.

Ottawa, Jan. 25.—A body of Cree Indians from Saskatchewan saw the Government yesterday and made complaint regarding the disposal of money obtained through the sale of Indian treaty lands. They also made a complaint against the chief inspector of Saskatchewan. The picturesque deputation was told by the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs that their complaints would be immediately investigated and righted, if necessary.

Still at Large.

Montreal, Jan. 25.—The murderer of John Ollander is still at large and is likely to remain so. The detectives have been unable to get track of the Italian who shot Ollander, and there is no trace of him after he left the house. The crime was a sordid one, and all those implicated were more or less under police suspicion. While detectives are at work, the clue is so slight that little hope of an arrest and conviction are entertained.

POLICE NOT TO BLAME

Toronto Commissioners Charge Crown Attorney Corley.

Hon. J. J. Foy Is Also Criticized In Connection With the Farmers' Bank Case—Police Cannot Issue a Warrant Without Crown Prosecutor's Assent or Extradite a Fugitive Without Consulting Mr. Foy.

Toronto, Jan. 25.—If Magistrate Denison and Judge Winchester are right in their contention, the responsibility for the delay in the issue of warrants against Dr. Beattie Nesbitt, W. J. Lindsay and George Wishart, charging them with various crimes in connection with the Farmers' Bank collapse, must rest with Crown Attorney Corley and Attorney-General Foy.

These two gentlemen, sitting as the board of police commissioners yesterday afternoon, while Mayor Geary was attending the opening of the Legislature, passed a resolution declaring that no blame could rest upon any police officer either for this delay of the failure to lay charges of extraditable offences against any or all of them, if grounds for such charges exists.

Chief Grasett, secretary of the board, said after the meeting: "What the board says is that the police have no power to take out a warrant in important cases without the consent of the crown attorney, and that, such warrants being issued, under the Legislature's orders in council, transmitted to the police through the crown attorney, the police have no power to seek the extradition of any fugitive from a foreign country without the consent of the Attorney-General's Department."

This puts the whole matter and the responsibility for any action or absence of action in the matter, up to the city crown attorney and the Attorney-General's Department.

Speaking of this feature of the situation, Crown Attorney J. Seymour Corley says that he has never issued any order to the police court clerks that they must not issue warrants to the police without his consent.

When a doctor was arrested upon a second charge of performing a criminal operation a short time ago, Mr. Corley did object in the police court to the charge being laid when he had not been consulted, and shortly afterward one of the police court clerks did refuse to issue a warrant without the crown attorney's authorization.

Mr. Corley says that his position is that he should be consulted before any important charge is laid.

It is understood that information will be laid and a summons taken out charging a prominent and wealthy citizen with illegally obtaining money from the bank, and that this will be done within the next few days. The offence has to do with illegal dealings with the bank's currency. Charges against three others are also being considered.

Travers, who is awaiting his removal to Kingston at the Toronto jail, was taken from there by Inspector Duncan and Detective Guthrie on Saturday afternoon. He was taken to some place which is not known, and there gave the interview which was discussed by the police commissioners yesterday. In the evening he was taken to the Broadview Hotel, where he and the inspector and Detective Guthrie dined together.

Travers is looking well and took the opportunity to smoke a number of cigars, which are denied him at the jail. It is said that no drinks were served to the party.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

The dynamos in the human body are also intimately connected by conductors, so that, when an organ or part is called upon for excessive work part furnishes the excess of energy by robbing all of the other dynamos of their energy, or working power. Thus, all other parts of the body for the time being, must suffer from the lack of functioning power they are deprived of. So, in this way, an organ may be weak or deficient without it or its needed energy to supply some overtaxed function.

The occasional overtaxing of a function may not result in much observable injury to other parts; but through oft-repeated and continued experiences the excessive function becomes a habit, and more or less continuous in its excessive

RESPECTED CITIZEN GOING TO WINNIPEG

Mr. P. J. Smith Former Manager of the Rolling Mills Has Belleville's Best Wishes

Citizens generally will learn with regret that Mr. P. J. Smith, who has been connected with the local Rolling Mills for the past five years, has severed his connection with that firm and leaves on Feb. 1st to take over the management of the Manitoba Rolling Mills at Winnipeg.

Mr. Smith came to Belleville in 1906 and was associated with the Toronto & Belleville Rolling Mills Co. as superintendent of the horse shoe department. He was appointed manager of the entire plant in September, 1907, vice D. Appelsheimer, which position he has retained until the present time. The success of the Rolling Mills under Mr. Smith's management has been very gratifying and speaks well for that gentleman's business ability, especially in consideration of the fact that, prior to Mr. Smith's taking charge, the mill had not been operated with any degree of of success. The plant is now in a flourishing condition and must be considered as one of Belleville's largest industries.

During Mr. Smith's residence in the city he has taken a deep interest in municipal matters. He has been an enthusiastic member of the Board of Trade, and would have been a candidate for aldermanic honors in Samson Ward at the recent elections had it not been for the fact that he was leaving the city so soon after the election.

Mr. Smith also took a deep interest in the affairs of the Baptist Church and will, doubtless, be missed by the congregation.

While we regret very much the departure of Mr. Smith from our midst we must congratulate him upon the position he has obtained with the Winnipeg concern, which, we understand, has considerably better prospects than the office he has just vacated, and we wish him success in his new venture.

Mr. Thos. Moore, who was connected with the Toronto & Belleville Rolling Mills about four years ago, comes to take charge of the local plant. Mr Moore is a young and energetic business man and will, doubtless, make good in his new capacity.

MR. JAS WARHAM HAD A BAD FALL

On Monday Mr. James Warham who resides on Holloway street, met with a painful accident, and one that will lay him aside for a few days. He was walking in the yard in the rear of his house, when he slipped and fell in such a manner as to fracture two ribs on his right side.

AN AFTERNOON BLAZE

This afternoon a double rough cast house situated on West Front Street near No. Fire Hall was destroyed by fire. The building was occupied by Mr. David Glenn and Mr. Wilson who saved but a small portion of their effects. The building was owned by Col. Ponton. Loss sustained by owner and occupants partly covered by insurance.

PASTOR HONORED

To show the esteem in which they hold their Rector, the Anglicans of Rednerville and Albury on Friday last presented Rev. J. dePencier Wright with a beautiful set of harness, a rug and a driving whip. The harness, which is very handsome and beautifully trimmed, was made in the shop of the J. Cummings Co., Belleville, and reflects great credit on that firm.

RAILWAY MEN NOW HAVE OWN HOTEL

Built Jointly by the Companies for Benefit of Engineers and Those Working Excursion Trains

A novel hotel was opened in Blackpool, England, not long ago. It has been built by the joint railway companies for the benefit of their engine drivers and guards working excursion trains into the town, and who have to stay over night. Hitherto they have had to find lodgings where they could, and in the height of the summer season this has been no easy matter.

In future they will be able to go to their own luxurious "Railway Hotel," where they will be able to obtain a good meal, a refreshing bath, and a quiet rest. The imposing premises are situated on the side of the line just before entering Central Station. There are about fifty bed-rooms, with space for a score more, if needed. Shops occupy the ground floor. The first floor is given over to a large reading-room and dining-room, fitted with fifty lockers, in which the men may store victuals they may take with them.

There are also a kitchen, half a dozen bath-rooms, and room for drying wet clothes. The dormitories are on the second and third floors, divided into cubicles. The roof is flat, and here the guests may recline on seats and enjoy the sun and sea air.

SEVEN LATER WONDERS

The Last of Modern Wonders is the Ship Lusitania

Of the seven modern wonderworks of the world not one is American, says a writer in "Harper's Magazine." One of them, 400 years old, has its inspiration in religion—St. Peter's at Rome, the largest church ever built; the second, 100 years old, is the greatest triumphal arch ever erected, commemorating the victories of the great conqueror Napoleon I.; the other five are modern engineering works. Of the utilitarian works the Suez Canal easily comes first. The next great engineering work was also French, the Eiffel Tower, rising 1,000 feet into the air. The third great wonder is the Firth of Forth Bridge. The fourth modern wonder is the St. Gothard tunnel, 12 miles long, under the Alps. The seventh and last of the modern wonders are twin cousin ships, the Lusitania and Mauretania.

CAUSES OF SEA TIDES

Attraction of the Sun and Moon Upon the Water

A correspondent of "Science Siftings" asks how does science explain the law of gravitation. Why do all bodies attract or repel each other? Why moon has influence upon tides? Can that be explained by opposite electrification of these two planets (moon and earth). The answer is that no explanation for the fact of the gravitation of matter has ever been found. The attraction of the sun and the moon upon the waters of the earth produces the tide. There is no reason to suppose that electricity has any part in the production of tides. On the side of the earth towards the moon, the water is nearer the moon than the solid earth, and is attracted more than the earth. This lifts the water up in a tide.

THE SOLDIER ARCHBISHOP

Dr. Maclagan's Good Story Against Himself

Born on the anniversary of Waterloo in 1826, it was suggested to the father of Dr. Maclagan, the ex-Archbishop of York, that the boy should be a soldier. "But it is Sunday," said the nurse; "he ought to be a minister." As events turned out the infant pleased both, for after serving four years in the Army his thoughts turned to the Church, and he ultimately became an Archbishop. He was a wonderful church-worker and a noted raconteur. Furthermore, he was not above telling a story against himself. Staying at the house of a well-known peer he, as his custom was, rose early to take a before-breakfast stroll, during which he met his host, and together they paced the gravel in front of the windows. Suddenly a voice cried from one of these: "George! George! Don't forget that you haven't brushed your teeth and you haven't said your prayers." The Archbishop, to whom these homely admonitions had been addressed by his wife, left, looking guilty, to perform these forgotten rites.

BIRD CHORUS AT DAWN

The bird chorus at dawn is of daily occurrence, and nothing quite like it is to be heard for the rest of the day. It begins and ends suddenly. After about an hour comparative silence falls; the day's work has begun—the serious business of seeking food, building nests, and tending the young. And whether it is because they are so particularly busy I do not know but there is no better time than the very early morning in all the day for watching birds. They are never so approachable as then, and, paddling about in the dew-laden grass, with unstockinged feet thrust into an old pair of tennis shoes, I have found myself on such friendly terms with them as I knew that, later in the day, they would not tolerate.

A FATAL LOAN

A fatal loan was mentioned at an inquest held at Hackney on a two-year-old child who had been burned to death. The mother said she once had a fireguard, but some time ago she lent it to a neighbor who had omitted to return it.

When apples have to be cored, but served whole, it is advisable to core them before peeling them, as they are then less liable to break.

Your Old Enemy Rheumatism

CURE YOURSELF RIGHT NOW WITH "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

There is just one thing that causes Rheumatism—Uric Acid in the blood. Uric Acid is formed when either the bowels, kidneys or skin fail to rid the system of waste matter. This waste, or Urea, remains in the body and is changed into uric acid. It is this uric acid that poisons the blood, inflames the nerves, and causes Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago.

Liniments and ordinary rheumatic remedies won't cure Rheumatism, as none of such preparations go to the very root of the trouble—the blood, and the vital organs. "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest cure for rheumatism in the world. And we will tell you why.

"Fruit-a-tives", by its action on the bowels, kidneys and skin, prevents the formation of an excess of uric acid. "Fruit-a-tives" causes the bowels, kidneys and skin to throw off the waste of the body, and thus keeps the blood absolutely pure.

If you have suffered with Rheumatism, and dread a return with the coming of cold weather, start in at once to take "Fruit-a-tives" and thus defeat your old enemy. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c. At dealers or from Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

A Motorcycle Parade.

The Curbstone club members were discussing the speed of motorcycles when the ancient carpenter, who had just come in, joined in the conversation.

"Talking about motorcycles," he said. "I took a count of them in front of my house the other evening.

"I noticed that a continual string of them seemed to be coming by the place, so I started in counting.

"By the time I had reached 987 I made a peculiar discovery. I happened to notice by a mark of the tire of the wheel that it was the same motorcycle that I had been tallying.

"The rider went so fast round and round the block that I mistook him for strument.—Yonkers Statesman.

The Point of View.

Uncle George Snow, an old antebellum negro, was introduced for the state. The counsel asked Uncle George which side of Souchatouchee creek he lived on, to which he replied:

"Which side of the creek do I live on, boss?"

"Yes."

"Gwine up or down the creek, boss?"

What Has Dandruff Got To Do With Baldness?

You see the statement every day that the one cause of baldness is dandruff. But is it?

True, dandruff often precedes the departure of the hair.

It is equally true that you know men with a shock of hair you can hardly pull a comb through, who have carried around a dandruff laden collar as long as you have known them.

You have also seen men whose scalp was kept as clean as a baby's whose hair was surely departing.

That dandruff talk sounds well and convinces a good many of us, but let us not fool ourselves.

Of course dandruff isn't a good thing to carry around, but it is only an indication.

The same trouble that causes the hair to fall out usually causes dandruff, so if you get at the cause and arrest the loss of hair, you will stop dandruff too.

Those who use Nyal's Hirsutone find it the most satisfactory hair healer and hair dressing they have ever used.

It does stop the hair from falling out.

It will also stop dandruff.

Your Nyal Druggist cheerfully recommends it—$1.00 and 50c in sprinkle bottles.

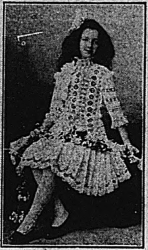
IN DANCE ATTIRE.

Charming Holiday Party Frock For the Small Girl.



OF LINGERIE AND LACE.

When the dancing class gives a cotillion the frock illustrated is just the thing for the small girl to wear. It's not too dressy, but is becoming and childish, and, what is more important to mothers, it will be equally serviceable as a best costume all next summer.

The model is long waisted, and the embroidered plaited ruffle is joined to the lace and lawn inserted bodice in a pretty pointed effect. There is no sash, but the rose pink chou on the shoulder matches the bow worn in the hair.

Homemade Turban.

The new box turbans are quite within the reach of the woman who does her own millinery work. The frame is so easily covered that the task requires only taste in selecting the trimmings. The turban frame may be covered with satin, lace or velvet and needs but little trimming. An aigret or some big roses made of the same material as the covering will do.

A Cleaning Precaution.

If you do not want to make rings on material cleaned with gasoline, naphtha or other cleansing fluids put blotting paper underneath or hold the fabric rather tightly over a thick Turkish towel or folded pads of cheesecloth or other soft material. If this is neglected the dirty fluid that soaks into the material fails to be absorbed and spreads badly.

Reversed.

Miss Bikely—So you have given up advocating woman's rights?

Miss Passee—Yes; I now go in for women's lefts.

"Women's lefts? What's that?"

"Widowers."—Tit-Bits.

The Art of Carpentry.

How many common figurative expressions in our language are borrowed from the art of carpentry may be seen from the following sentence: "The lawyer who filed the bill, shaved the note, cut an acquaintance, split a hair, made an entry, got up a case, framed an indictment, impaneled a jury, put them into a box, nailed a witness, hammered a judge and bored a whole court, all in one day, has since laid down law and turned carpenter."

Contrary Human Nature.

"I suppose it is our natural contrariness which makes us do such paradoxical things."

"Such as what?"

"As makes us long for things when we are short."—Baltimore American.

Practical.

"I am down to my last penny," said the street mendicant, addressing a man who looked as though he might have money and sympathy, "and I don't know what to do."

"Only have one penny left?"

"That is all."

"There is a box around the corner that you can drop it into and get a stick of gum."

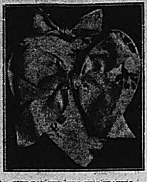
King's Glove Hand.

It is not generally known that King George's custom of appearing with his right hand gloved and the other bare has its origin in something more than a mere whim of fashion. The wearing of a glove on the right hand by a monarch is a distinct survival of the days when the sovereign's touch was held to be a certain cure for all kinds of disease, especially scrofula.

In the days when at certain dates it was customary for hundreds of sick men and mendicants of all kinds to be laid out in the courtyard of royal palaces awaiting the healing touch of the "anointed of the Lord," monarchs found it necessary to wear a glove in order to escape infection. Thus arose the habit which during modern times has passed into a mere fad of fashion, the significance of which has long been forgotten by the majority of people.—M.A.P.

MAKE A NOTE OF THEM.

Christmas Suggestions That Come In Handy.



GIFT FOR THE GIRL WHO TRAVELS.

A pillow top is one of the few embroidered articles of which there cannot be too many in the Christmas box. What woman has ever been at a loss to dispose of an extra couch pillow? For if a pillow is really enjoyed it gets hard wear and needs frequent replenishing.

Flower designs are especially attractive, though conventional scrolls hold high favor.

As for the material to be worked, pongee, china silk, satin, velvet or velveteen, especially the latter treated with gold thread, would be extremely good looking, though there is nothing for ordinary use quite so acceptable as the art linens and crashes. These may be secured in many charming shades.

In view of the popularity of stenciling, the work will be most effective if done in flat embroidery heavily outlined. The well known Kensington stitch is the one to use. Supposing the design to be one of roses or carnations, one shade of pink and one shade of green will effect a good result, and then the whole should be outlined in a darker shade of each color, or a very striking method would be to gold thread the entire design. Treating it in this manner, the effect is a compromise between a stenciled design and one for embroidery. The sewing case illustrated, although a sentimental looking heart shaped affair, will be found a great help in time of need, as it contains in its four hinged sections papers of needles in different sizes, a small pair of scissors, two bodkins and a buttonholed white flannel needle holder. The material used is a dainty French cretonne on the outside and satin for the inside. The heart shaped sections are cut from cardboard. Ribbon makes the casings for the sewing articles and the smart bow and hangers.

SANTA CLAUS TABLE.

It Will Delight the Children at the Christmas Feast.

The Santa Claus touch should be used in a table at which the children will be. For a centerpiece have a chimney with Santa and his full pack climbing from it. Arrange cardboards or wood to represent the slope of a roof and cover it with cotton batting and mica snow. At each corner of the table have a Christmas tree hung with tinsel and red balls. If you do not fear fire tiny candles may be lighted on these trees. It will be safer to supply them with sparklers lighted just as the guests reach the dining room.

Connect the trees by tinsel cord strung with small red stockings filled with favors. Have small Santa Clauses for place cards and a turkey at each plate filled with nuts and candy canes.

String cranberries and suspend from chandelier to corner of table if table is long, one at each side, then twist smilax around each string and put the same around centerpiece. For place cards use holly with berries to match cranberries.

A pretty bell may be made by wrapping a large sized hoop with holly or pine, connecting this with a smaller sized hoop above by four wires or stout cord. Hang strands of popcorn from upper hoop to lower one. Use a large red apple for a clapper.

Will Be Discussed by Conference.

London, Jan. 25.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—The London Mail says that the ratification of the declaration of London has been postponed, pending its discussion by the Imperial Conference.

CAPE HUNTING DOGS.

A Terror to African Game and the Despair of Sportsmen.

Hunting where and in whatever country he likes, without leave or license, the Cape hunting dog is not only a terror to many kinds of African game, but the despair of sportsmen generally. Once afoot with his game, says Baily's Magazine, a kill becomes almost an absolute certainty. He needs no help.

He stands twenty-five to twenty-seven inches high, with good galloping quarters, rather long but very muscular legs, with strong feet and toes. The ears are very large and erect, beautifully formed to catch the faintest sound when working in thick coverts. Added to this he has a very keen sense of smell.

The jaws are wonderfully strong, with beautiful white teeth. They can break bones which few animals except the hyena could crack, and the strength of the latter's jaws is proverbial.

Their mode of hunting is very clever. Having found and started a buck, some of the fleetest dogs gallop forward ahead of the main pack, keeping on either side to prevent the buck turning and doubling back. As these dogs tire they fall back, and others take up the running in their place. When the quarry tires the pack closes in, and all their energy is devoted to killing by tearing out the viscera.

Some writers say the pack takes the form of a crescent when running their prey, gradually closing in as the game tires. All agree that the short time taken in running down a buck is simply marvelous, a quarter of an hour being the estimated time in hunting, killing and consuming a buck under ordinary circumstances.

The wild dog is not at all fastidious as to what food he shall take, but he levies toll on any sort of buck or antelope he finds handy. Gnu, sable and waterbuck are said to be his favorites, but he has been known to pull down a buffalo when pressed for food. Needless to say, when attacking a powerful animal like this some of the dogs meet with a sudden death, and these are consumed by the surviving members. They always seem ravenous for food and their appetites nearly insatiable. There is no record of their having attacked a white man.

The Right Number.

A teacher in giving a lecture to the members of her junior hygiene class had cautioned them against eating anything hard, such as nuts, hard candy, etc. A small boy held up his hand.

"What is it, Sammie?" she inquired.

"Say, did you ever see any of these here candy jaw breakers?" he asked.

"Ye-s, I believe so," she hesitated wonderingly.

"Well, Willie, here," indicating another boy in the class, "stood right in front of Gregorie's store yesterday and et five of them right down."

"Ate," corrected the teacher.

"Aw, was it eight? I was thinkin' it was only five."

Her Inconvenient Wait.

"I had a most delightful time last summer," gushed Miss Noling, "but I was dreadfully inconvenienced at Leaflandville waiting for my trunk. I went there by the N. T. C. so as to take advantage of the scenery along the route, but I had to send my trunk on the slow B. C. and E."

"But why couldn't you have sent your trunk on the N. T. C. too?" murmured Miss Sterling.

"Because," explained Miss Noling, glad to show her superior knowledge, "I learned from a friend of mine that the N. T. C. is not a trunk line."—Brooklyn Life.

BISHOP HITS THE RICH

BOSTON, January 25.—The Right Rev. Charles D. Williams, Episcopal bishop of Michigan, declared at a in Ford Hall last evening that all of the vices to be found in the slums of a great city are to be discovered in the villas of Newport, and in the same variety with the only difference that more real humanity could be found in the slums.

THE ONLY HONEST RICHES.

Bishop Williams, a "Single Taxer" and well known as the disciple of Henry George, spoke on "Wealth, Productive, Predatory and Parasitic," asserting that the only honest riches were those resulting from productive activity. He pointed out that predatory wealth results from non-productive activity, citing for example the wild-cat schemes of our financial centers, and added that parasitic wealth is non-active and non-productive and the worst of all.

He heavily scored private privileges, the private rights of giant corporations, which he affirmed take the property of the community and use it to amass enormous private wealth. All tariff on any human product he named as an aid to private interests and the curse of the public, continuing with the statement that the tariff is the grandmother of the trusts and that private privileges were the origin of the "Standard Oil inquity."

NO LONGER BLINDED BY GREAT WEALTH.

In referring to John D. Rockefeller, whom he named as "a man you have all heard much of in connection with the Standard Oil but whose name I will not mention," he said that the reason for Mr. Rockefellers' great unpopularity with the masses was not so much the fault of the man himself, who has led such an exemplary life, but the fault of the system of the gigantic oil company.

"College presidents and professors, philanthropic institutions and benevolent societies," said Bishop Williams "have ceased to be blinded by great wealth. When the public of today is offered a shilling by a man who took two away from it yesterday, it asks, 'Where is the other shilling?' As to men who bestow libraries and great charitable bequests the recipents are fast learning to ask the question, 'Where did you get the money?'"

NEW YORK AMUSED BY GRAFT SCANDAL

NEW YORK, Jan. 25.—The Times says: One good joke deserves another and Canada is now doing its best to give us cause for merriment equal to that which it recently enjoyed at our expense over the housekeeping accounts at Washington.

It is with unfeigned admiration, albeit tinged with other sentiments as well that we remark a scheme of purchasing public supplies through a corporation whose stock was owned by the "right" people, who seem not to be altogether righteous.

The graft had been running for fourteen years, but was disclosed in the fifteenth. That makes it all right and condones indiscretions. This is interesting, but pales into dulness beside the sparkling liveliness of the purchase of 15,000 corkscrews for the Government printing bureau.

Down at Washington they do not need so many corkscrews, and are virtuous enough to drink their cold tea from cups. We are sympathetic regarding the graft, although it does betray a certain poverty of invention unworthy of the massive intellects which contrived the purchasing corporation idea, but we draw the line at condoning 15,000 corkscrews.

THE LESSEPS-MACKENIZE WEDDING IN LONDON

A London despatch says: Miss Grace Mackenzie, youngest daughter of Sir William Mackenzie, and Count Jacques de Lesseps, the French aviator, were married at St. James' church Spanish Palace, to-day. Canon Gildea solemnized the nuptials, which were witnessed by a fashionable gathering. Count de Mora was best man and the bride's attendants included her sister, Mrs. W. W. Beardsmore and Miss Ethel Mackenzie and Miss Mabel Meagher, a cousin. Following the ceremony Sir William and Lady Mackenzie gave a reception for the wedding party at Claridge's. The honeymoon will be spent in Egypt Count de Lesseps is a grandson of the noted engineer, Ferdinand de Lesseps. He is twenty-seven years of age. A year ago he took up aviation and made some notable flights, including the crossing of the English channel and the trip from Belmont Park around the Statue of Liberty and return in competition with the the late John B. Moisant and Claude Graham-White. Miss Mackenzie accompanied him in aerial thips at New York, but with the announcement of their engagement, both abandoned the perilous sport.

The wedding to-day caused a considerable crowd to collect in the neighborhood of the church. For some time before the actual commencement the choir stationed in the lofty triforium rendered appropriate music The chancel and parts adjacent were a triumph of the florist's art. Tall palms were arranged on either side and banks of lilies and other white flowers in profusion imparted fragrance to the air. Two o'clock was the time fixed for the ceremony, and for half an hour previously an interested congregation began to put in an appearance. The approach to the church was laid with red carpet, and constables guarded the entrance. The principal guests included Lord and Lady Strathcona, Sir Gilbert and Lady Parker, and Admiral and Lady Markham, Lady Campbell, Mr. and Mrs. Horne Payne, Mrs. Gilbert Griffin, Edward Harries, Countess Camilla Hoyos, Mrs. Plunkett Magann Mrs. Meagher; Miss Mabel Meagher Mrs. Grantham, Mrs. and Mrs. Beardmore, Mr. and Mrs. Scott Griffin, Mr J. M. Mackenzie, Comte and Comtesse Mathieu de Lesseps, Comte and Comtesse de la Demiramon, Comte and Comtesse de la Begasiere, Comte and Comtesse Paul de Lesseps, Baron and Baronne de la Grange, Comte and Comtesse de Mora, Comte Robert de Lesseps, Vicomte de Sanderval Comte Henri de la Rochefoucauld Lady Kirkpatrick.

The bride's wedding gown consisted of white charmeuse trimmed with lace and pearls, veiled under white crepe chiffon, embroidered with pearls in a design of fern leaves. The bodice also consisted of chiffon over charmeuse, with sprays of pearl embroidery across the corsage and on the sleeves; at the throat was cut in V shape and finished off with a dainty edging of Brussels lace and knot of orange blossoms. The train was of white charmeuse, trimmed with pearl embroidery worked on white chiffon over silver tissue lined with white crepe de chene, held to the shoulders with handsom pearl tassels. A lovely old lace veil was worn. The bridesmaids' gowns were composed of palest pink chiffon over a charmeuse dress of the same color, trimmed with strappings of satin and Russia braid to match, the skirt gathered into a band of charmeuse round the feet The waist was encircled with a sash of mauve, gold-embroidered chiffon finished with sash of gold fringe. The bride's attendants wore large hats composed of pink pleated chiffon, to match the dresses, trimmed with dainty bouquets of pink rose buds and for-get-me-nots. Each carried a bouquet of pale mauve orchids, tied with pale pink ribbon. The bride's going away suit was of Chinese blue charmeuse trimmed with skunk fur, cream lace blouse, and black straw hat with blue plumes.

HASTINGS COUNTY COUNCIL IS BUSY

Wednesday, Jan. 25.

MORNING SESSION.

Council resumed at 10 o'clock, Warden Dryden presiding.

Mr. D. A. McIntosh, of the Agricultural Department of the Stirling School, addressed the Council, speaking generally of fruit growing, stock raising, grain and fruit raising in Hastings County. His services were of avail to the yeomen of this country, who needed any assistance he could render. His work was for the interest of the county and he would in the future as in the past do all in his power to promote the welfare of Hastings County in all matters appertaining to agriculture. His endeavor would ever be to keep Hastings County to the front in all matters in this regard.

Warden Dryden, on behalf of the county, thanked Mr. McIntosh for his address.

A number of communications were read and referred to their various committees for further consideration.

A petition was presented from Lennox County Council asking Hastings Council to join in memorializing the Legislature to extend the summer vacation for rural schools.

A motion prevailed to take no action in the matter.

No action was taken in a communication from the Times Printing House, of Peterboro, in reference to the county purchasing maps of Hastings County being prepared by that office.

Mr. F. Thompson offered the country $300 for two lots owned by the county situated on Bridge Street West.—Referred to the Finance Committee to deal with.

REPORTS.

Mr. J. L. Newton, chairman, presented the report of the House of Refuge for 1910, which was a rather voluminous document. It showed that during the year there were 14 deaths. One absconded and three were discharged. Number of inmates in the home on Dec. 31st, 1910, were 64. There were served during the year 65,629 meals.

On motion, the report was adopted, after Mr. Newton had spoken to it. Mrs. Wilson, the matron, gets $300 per annum and she is asking for an increase of $100 per annum. A silo would be of great benefit to the farm and also make the producing of milk cheaper.

Mr. N. Vermilyea spoke in support of having a silo erected upon the farm as it was necessary to have a good supply of milk for the inmates at that institution.

Mr. Mather, in speaking of increase of salaries, stated that Dr. Clinton, physician of the House, was applying for an increase of wages and this could be considered by the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. A. Kirk suggested that a move in the right direction would be to grow some tobacco,, as it cost over $100 last year for this luxury.

Mr. Vermilyea—Let the men be kept busy and they will not want tobacco or even chewing gum.

The Road and Bridge Committee presented a report which showed that a new bridge was being constructed at Moira Lake at a cost of about $12,000. The report recommended the building of a number of steel bridges.

Mr. Cook was of the opinion that the county should procure the necessary machinery and do its own concrete work on bridges, as it could be done much cheaper than it is now done by tender.

Mr. N. Vermilyea was in hearty accord with the report presented. It was necessary that some new bridges be built in the near future.

The report was adopted.

Notices of five by-laws were given by various members of the Council, which by-laws will be introduced at the Thursday's session.

Moved by Mr. Ketcheson, seconded by Mr. White, that a special committee composed of Messrs, Kirk, Mather, Hanley, Vermilyea and Ketcheson, be appointed to draft the standing committees of the Council for the year.

Council adjourned until two o'clock.

Wednesday, Jan. 26th.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Council resumed at 2 o'clock.

Mr. Kirk gave notice of a by-law to amend clauses 2and 3 of by-law 392.

M. Vermilyea--What does that mean?

Mr. Kirk—To grant an increase of pay to members of the council.

Mr. Vermilyea—I hope this will not be done as I would have to oppose it strenuously.

The matter was then allowed to drop for the present.

Mr. P. P. Cdark referred to a proposed report on the matter of High County Constable. The Sheriff of the accept the position it the County Council so desired. He (the speaker) would favor the the Sheriff being appointed to the position.

Mr. Ketcheson was of the opinion

SPAIN IS NOW MORE LIBERAL

Mr. Theodore Fliedner, son of the well-known German preacher, long associated with the work of the Berlin Missionary Society in Spain, says in a recent number of the "Continent" (Chicago), that restrictions against Protestant missions are now being modified or relaxed.

The revival of the measure of toleration was accomplished last spring by revoking the law of 1876. The original measure has seemed to allow freedom of religious opnion and worship, merely barring the "public ceremonies" and "manifestations" of the Protestants. The law of 1876, however, interpreted the prohibition in pretty sweeping terms, so that crosses, bells, spires, gothic arches and windows, and indeed, everything that looked at all religious, had to go.

PUNISHED BY LAW.

"There are other articles and decrees which interfere unwarrantably with the rights of those who do not belong to the Romish Church. The thirteenth paragraph of the constitution secures the right of expressing their opinions to every one. The supreme tribunal even permits the exercise of scientific criticism of the doctrine of the Romish church and makes insult and mockery alone punishable. But in reality persons have been punished by the law because they did not uncover before the host on the open street and, when called to account, quietly replied that their convictions would not allow them to do so. At the same time it is customary for the Spaniards to call the host when carried by the priest to a dying person 'the little god,' and when carried round in solemn procession 'the great god,' and they have no idea how deeply such expressions offend truly religious feeling."

GAY YOUNG FOLKS DRINK HIGHBALLS

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 25.—Hundreds of Washington girls under sixteen years of age are every night drinking highballs, cocktails, absinthe, benedictine and other intoxicating liquors, and boys of the same age imbibe, and many of them are frequenting questionable resorts. This is the state of affairs that confronts the fathers and mothers of Washington, according to members of the Washington Curfew club, who are making a careful investigation of the matter.

When their parents believe them to be at the homes of their friends, at the moving picture theatre or engaged in other harmless diversions, school girls and department store girls of good families nightly it is asserted, succeed in obtaining intoxicating liquors if they have such desire.

These revelatons are declared to have been disclosed through exhaustive investigation of the Curfew club, which is inaugurating a movement against such conditions for the remedy of which the club suggests the passage of a curfew law which will prevent children remaining on the streets after an early hour at night.

OLD LADY DEAD

A very old lady named Mrs. Emsley, residing on Albert street died this afternoon. An extended notice will appear to-morrow.

Daily Intelligencer.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

The aldermanic contests are now the subject of general interest.

One good effect of yesterday's snow fall was to render the icy sidewalks negotiable once more.

Will the sittings of that investigating committee be public or private and when will they be commenced ?

The expropriation proceedings in connection with the proposed school site are evidently reaching away into the far distant future. The cost may not stagger humanity but it will be felt by the taxpayers.

A great deal is said of Caruso's achievement in singing a baby to sleep. There are a lot of men right here in Belleville who have done the same thing and they don't get a couple of thousand a night for doing it either.

Japanese explorers have started on on expedition to the South Pole and it is announced that those who fail will commit suicide, instead of returning home. The Japs are a pretty wise little people after all. Evidently they don't intend to have any Japanese Cook-Peary dispute sprung on them.

A British manufacturer has constructed a watering cart propelled by steam, with a water containing tank 13 feet in length by 4 1-2 feet in diameter, built of steel plates three-sixteenths of an inch in thickness strongly braced and riveted, containing 1,200 gallons. The tank is divided into two sections, one with a capacity of 1000 gallons for street watering purposes and the other with a capacity of 200 gallons for water for the boiler. It is calculated that with a medium spray the wagon can water two miles of road without refilling.

GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE.

A complete change of programme is billed for to-night at Griffin's Opera House, when Malone & Jacobs Happy Youngsters Co. will present an entirely new musical comedy playlet, "The Bogus Counts." This comedy is even more laughable than the "School Kids" act and the musical numbers are more tuneful. The action of the play takes place in Paris, France and shows the trials of two Hebrews who are mistaken for two counts. New specialties will be introduced by Mr. ames Malone, late of the George Primrose Minstrels, who is a very clever singer and dancer, and Mr. Bert Bertrand, a comedian who will keep you laughing all the time New pictures and an illustrated song will be shown to-night, making an entire change of programme, and a treat for all visiting the theatre.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are a lot of harmful tooth pastes and powders on the market full of grit and acid and other impurities. These preparations are not only worthless, but harmful, and injure the teeth and gums.

Rexall Antiseptic Tooth Powder is the one dental preparation that we can recommend to you. It is absolutely pure—nothing injurious in it—and what is just as important, it is entirely effective. It destroys all the germs of decay, keeps the mouth clean, the breath pure and sweet, and insures beautiful white teeth. Large decorated tins, 25c.

BIT ANOTHER WOMAN'S FINGER

Pearl Rushlow Convicted of Mutilating Mrs. Storms' Finger in a Fight

Yesterday afternoon a young woman named Pearl Rushlow was arrested on a charge of mayhem. It appears that the accused and some other woman were in a wordy dispute in a place on Pinnacle street, when it was alleged the accused bit Mrs. Alice Storms' finger. Mrs. Storms' finger was severely mutilated, requiring medical attendance. This morning the case was investigated by Police Magistrate Masson, and resulted in the accused being found guilty. The Rushlow girl was not sent to jail, but after a reprimand by the magistrate she was given a suspended sentence of six months in the Reformatory.

AN OLD RESIDENT DEAD IN THURLOW

Mr. Harry Mossman, gardener, who resided in the township of Thurlow north-west of the city limits, died at an early hour this morning. Deceased had been in failing health for some time. Mr. Mossman was an Englishman, having been born at Clophill Beds, England, 60 years ago. For the past 40 years the deceased had resided in this vicinity, where he was well and favorably known. Mr. Mossman was a member of Oxford Lodge, Sons of England, and in religion an Anglican. Surviving members of the family are a widow, two sons and three daughters. The sons are George and Fred, at home, and the daughters Mrs. H. Bowler, Toronto, Mrs. H. P Phoyer, Albany, N. Y., and Mrs. Wm Oliphant, of this city.

FOUGHT THE FIRE FOR THREE HOURS

Double Dwelling Destroyed—Losses Partly Covered By Insurance

The fire brigade were kept busy yesterday afternoon for about three hours in fighting the fire which virtually destroyed a large rough cast house on the west side of Front street The blaze originated in the south side of the building which was occupied by Mr. Frank Wilson and family. It is thought to have been caused from an over heated stove pipe. The building being of an inflammable nature was an easy prey to the devouring element. The north side of the premises was occupied by Mr. David Glenn Both families had an insurance of $200 on their effects which will about cover the loss. The building, which was owned by Col. Ponton, was partially insured.

GALA TIME ON "BURNS NIGHT"

Camp Rob Roy, Sons of Scotland last evening fittingly commemorated Burn's Nicht at their lodge rooms Alberta Hall. There was a large attendance and the gathering was presided over by Chief Stewart, of the camp. After supper had been partaken of, a programme consisting of songs, addressess and bag-pipe selections was given and then dancing was indulged in for some time. The affair was in every respect in keeping with the occasion.

FARM TO PARLIAMENT

"For ten years the Honourable Rodmond Palen Roblin has been Prime Minister of the Province of Manitoba, and there is every prospect that he will continue to fill the position for another five years, for his government was recently returned to power by practically the same majority as it possessed before the election." So reads an article in the current issue of the Canadian Century. "Hard things have been said by the Manitoba Liberals of Mr. Roblin and his colleagues, but few would be found to deny that the present government of Manitoba is composed of able men, or that it enjoys a large measure of popularity throughout the province.

"Himself a farmer for many years and even now the owner of a large Manitoba farm, Mr. Roblin has won the sympathies of the farmers of the large province, and this is probably his chief source of strength. It is doubtful if any of Mr. Roblin's colleagues could long carry on the Government without him.

"As a stump orator the present Prime Minister of Manitoba has few equals in Canada. Those who have seen and heard him berate the Laurier Government are not likely soon to forget the spectacle, nor will his remarkable tour in Ontario previous to the Dominion General election of 1908 easily be forgotten. He is a master of invective, and he uses it often not wisely but too well.

"Born in the township of Sophiasburg, Prince Edward County, Ontario, in 1853, Mr. Roblin comes of U. E. Loyalist stock on his father's side and of Dutch descent on his mother's side. His aged father, James Platt Roblin, is still hale and hearty at eighty-seven and recently put in a record day at husking corn. Mr. Roblin went west in the late seventies, first farming near Carman, Man., and then engageing in the grain business in the later town. In 1888 he was first elected to the provincial legislature running as a Libeal, and he has sat in the Manitoba Parliament ever since. The same year, however, he left his Liberal colleagues and in the following year he became leader of the opposition against the late Hon. Thomas Greenway, for many years Liberal Premier of Manitoba.

"When the Liberals went out of power in 1899 and the Conservatives, under Mr. Hugh John Macdonald, son of the founder of the National Policy, took office, Mr. Roblin declined to enter the ministry. A year later, however, on Mr. Macdonald resigning to run for the Dominion House, Mr. Roblin became Premier. In 1902 he was one of the provincial premiers to accept the invitation of the British Government to attend the Coronation. He represented the Province of Manitoba with much dignity, and among other things he gave a dinner in London to his fellow-Manitobans."

Ward Elections

From all appearances there is to be a municipal fight in Coleman and Foster Wards. This is gratifying, as it shows that at last the electors are taking some interest in municipal affairs.

Would Be Popular

A despatch from Ottawa to the Montreal Witness, dated January 23rd, says:

"It is said to be very probable that the successor to the late Judge McMahon, on the High Court Bench of Ontario, will be Judge C. D. Macaulay, of Dawson City, formerly of Belleville. Several Ontario men have been mentioned for the appointment, among them Messrs. Brady, Tees and O'Donoghue, of Toronto, and McEvoy, of London, and there has also been talk of a French-Canadian aspirant. It is stated, however, that there is not enough work for one judge, much less three, in Dawson, and that Judge Macaulay will be the man elevated. He is a member of the Ontario Bar."

The Intelligencer hopes that the report is true, as Judge Macauley is deservedly popular in this city, of which he was long a resident.

A Change Of Front

The letter which ex-Mayor Marsh addressed to the City Council which was read at the meeting of that body on Monday night, failed of its intended effect, namely the stifling of investigation into the sale of city lots by himself and City Treasurer Price to their relatives, of which so much has been heard, and of which much more remains to be heard.

Is it true, as urged by Mr. Marsh, that no formal charge against any person has been made in the matter? Are not the facts which have been laid before the people, particularly those stated in Mr. Burrell's letter, accusation enough to justify investigation.

Mr. Marsh has apparenty forgotten that "he who excuses accuses," or, in the homely but forcible language of Josh Billings, "when you see a snake's head sticking out of a hole, you may pretty well make up your mind that the snake is there."

Having failed in his frontal attack upon the Property Owners' Association by way of the allegation of political animus on the part of that body, Major Marsh, like the well-trained military man that he is, tried a cunningly-devised flank movement on that body, and in doing so effected a complete change of front on his part, in order to countercheck the attack upon himself by the P. O. A. by means of a judicial investigation into his conduct as trustee for the city in the sale of certain lots acquired at the tax sale. He attacks the P. O. A. as not being representative of property owners and taxpayers, and therefore not entitled to ask for a judicial investigation. In this attack, too, Major Marsh fails, for it is competent for the Council to grant a judicial investigation on petition by thirty ratepayers; and certainly there are more than thirty ratepayers included in the membership of the Property Owners' and Taxpayers' Association. True, that course has not as yet been taken, but if Major Marsh is sincere in his statement in his letter above referred to, that he would "personally welcome a proper investigation," why does not he evidence his sincerity by inducing twenty-nine of his friends to unite with him in signing and forwarding to the Council the necessary petition?

REFUSES TO WED WAS ARRESTED

GOLDFIELD, Nev., Jan. 24.—Grace Holland, a pretty Cincinnati girl, corresponded through the medium of a matrimonial agency with S. S. Lockett, of Beatty, Nev., representing himself to be a wealthy mining man. She is at a local hotel threatened with arrest for obtaining money under false pretences. She agreed to come to Nevada for meeting and better understanding if sent transportation and expense money.

At Rhyolite she was approached by Lockett, but not being impressed by his middle-age appearance and learning he was engaged in raising chickens in a small way, she denied her identity and came to Goldfield for further information, to be met at the station by deputy sheriffs with a warrant for her arrest.

She indignantly denies any intention of marrying Lockett, says she was under no contract to marry and was privileged to change her mind and is considering bringing an action for damage for false arrest.

NUN IN CONVENT FELL TO HER DEATH

Tumbled From Elevator and Dropped Five Storeys In the Shaft

MONTREAL, Jan. 24.—Sister St Euchere, of the Congregation of Notre Dame, met a frightful death Monday in the mother house, West Sherbrooke street, when she fell down the elevator shaft from the fifth floor to the basement, and was killed instantly.

The elevator had been out of order and Sister St. Euchere, who had studied mechanical engineering, and had charge of all the machinery and the electrical appartus in the building was testing and examining the elevator when she lost her life.

She had brought the elevator from the basement to the top floor, and without stopping the car, opened the door on the fifth floor. In doing so she last her balance, and when the elevator went up six or eight feet further to the top of the shaft, Sister St. Euchere fell out on the floor and tumbled back under the elevator into the shaft.

The distance from the basement to the fifth floor is about 70 feet and the unfortunate sister was crushed to death when she struck the bottom of the elevator shaft. When the alarm was given and some of the sisters who were in the basement rushed to her aid, it was found that life was extinct. Her skull was crushed, one of her arms was broken, and she had sustained internal injuries, sufficient to have caused instant death.

It took but a few minutes for the news of the sister's tragic death to spread through the great building and before the body was removed to the mortuary chapel the different houses of the order throughout the city were notified. The sisters of the odred assembled in the chapels of the convents and schools under their control, and offered up prayers for the dead.

Sister St. Euchere had been a member of the Congregation of Notre Dame for 28 years. She held certificates as a mechanical engineer, and devoted herself to the mechanical and electrical apparatus in the mother house. The building was erected only a few years ago, and the machinery installed there is the most modern type. Sister St. Euchere is said to have been most proficient in mechanical science, to which she had devoted most of her life.

Before taking her religious vows she was Miss E. Therriault. She was 44 years of age, and her family reside in the Magdalen Islands.

DELICATE CHILDREN

Made Strong and Healthy by Vinol.

"I wish I could induce every mother who has a delicate, sickly child, to try your delicious cod liver and iron tonic, Vinol."

"It restored our little daughter to health and strength after everything else had failed. It tastes so good she loved to take it—not a bit of cod liver oil taste."—Mrs. C. W. Stump, Canton, Ohio. (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

The reason Vinol is so successful in building up puny, delicate, ailing children is because it is a combination of the two most world famed tonics,—the medicinal body building elements of cod liver oil, aided by the blood-making and strength-creating properties of tonic iron. It contains no oil and children and children love to take it and it cannot harm the most delicate child.

If we can induce you to try a bottle of Vinol as a body-builder and strength creator for your child, and you do not find it all we claim, we will return your money on demand J. S. McKeown.

ONE HALLOWEEN.

Its Incidents Served a Very Happy Purpose.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

Frank Greenleaf, recently married and an old friend of mine, opened his country residence for a house party during the last week in October. There were about twenty of us in all, divided between married and single, the greater part being single. During our stay Halloween came around, and, singularly enough, not one of the party remembered it till the day before. Then there was considerable commotion, especially among the girls.

As for me, I have always taken an interest in those superstitions that have been handed down to us from a past age when every one believed in them. There is something touching in an innocent girl just coming to womanhood watching for a glimpse of the man she shall marry and really believing that such things are a part of nature's scheme. For a century or more people have been losing everything that is poetic, substituting all that is practical. But in nature nothing ends—it is simply transfigured. And now those things which were formerly called superstition are coming up again in a new form. There are societies for psychical research whose members are investigating phenomenal appearances, and people possessing keen scientific minds are active in the work.

"I AM YOUR FATE!"

After dinner on Halloween we all sat chatting by the firelight. I was able to give the party a talk on Halloween customs that I had gathered from folklore. I noticed that one of the party, Edith Damon, a fair haired, blue eyed girl of nineteen, listened to the stories I told with rapt attention. I fancied her one of the kind that in the olden time would hold up a mirror with perfect confidence of seeing in it the face of one who was to be her husband.

One person, I noticed, was observing her as I was, a Mrs. Crowell. During the evening this woman arose from her seat and sat down by the girl. It seemed to me from that time that Mrs. Crowell was exerting some influence over Miss Damon. I glanced at the others in the circle to see if they observed anything unusual, but they were all intent on the stories that were being told, not one of them paying attention to anything else.

Before retiring we tossed apple skins over our heads, looked into mirrors and did other things usual on Halloween. The girls all made a compact that in the morning if any of them during the night got a glimpse of the man she was to marry she should tell all about it. I think some of them had a dim fancy that something might happen, but only the youngest ones. I can myself remember when a youth going to sleep with a piece of wedding cake under my pillow, fancying that I would really dream of the girl I would one day marry. We parted with raillery and laughter and were some time quieting down after we got into our rooms.

The next morning as we were assembling for breakfast there were many questionings, some of the party using the Halloween that had just passed as a means to tease one another about some supposed fancy for a mate. At the table the host asked each one of his guests in turn if he or she had had a vision during the night. Perhaps it was what I had noticed in Ethel Damon that led me to fix my eyes upon her. She seemed stirred by some unusual emotion, which increased as her turn to reply to Greenleaf's question drew near. I glanced at Mrs. Crowell and noticed that she was intent upon Miss Damon.

Just as I was about to withdraw my glance from the former she looked at me. There was a singular expression in her eyes that I could not fathom. But I interpreted it to mean that she knew I suspected her of exercising an influence on Miss Damon.

Finally, when the host said, "Ethel, did you see the man you would marry last night?" the girl turned a rosy red and, covering her face with both hands, dropped her head on the table.

All the circle were on the tiptoe of expectation. Calls of "Tell us!" "Out with it!" "Confess!" "Don't be afraid!" were made to the poor girl, who, after enduring the fusillade for a few minutes, pushed back her chair and ran out of the room amid a babel of shouts and laughter.

I knew that something unusual had happened to the girl and sympathized with her in being obliged to suffer the raillery of her companions. Young people are not very thoughtful about such matters. Indeed, I suppressed some indignation at what had occurred. When the noise had somewhat subsided I ventured to suggest that whatever had induced Miss Daman to leave the table it was something sacred and should be respected. All the thanks I got for this suggestion was a volley of guys hurled at me, such as "You are the man!" "Hurry up the wedding!" "Let's have it over before we separate!" coming mostly from the younger people. Truly a lot of boys and girls are incorrigible.

While this was happening I noticed that Mrs. Crowell was looking at me with that same singular uninterpretable glance. Surely there was a mystery here in which the participants were Mrs. Crowell and Ethel Damon, while I was the only one cognizant of it. As we were leaving the table I said to Mrs. Crowell, "I wonder if anything could have occurred during the night that Miss Damon mistook for a sign?" But the lady simply gave me another of those strange looks and made no reply.

There are fine grounds about Greenleaf's house—I think he has some eighty acres—and during the morning, my mind being occupied with what had occurred at breakfast, I took a fancy to stroll out into a wood for meditation. It was one of those bright, crisp mornings we get only at the turning point between summer and winter. The season was late, and many variegated leaves still hung upon the trees. Presently I espied ahead of me a girl walking alone among the trees. In another moment I recognized the figure of Ethel Damon. I was delighted at the opportunity of meeting her. I was sure she was there to be alone, but I realized also that people who wish to be alone also desire a confidant if the right person is available. I caught up with her, called to her. She stopped and turned.

It is some years since I saw that expression on her face, but it is as clear in my memory as then. Indeed, it is a picture that never can fade. There were a slight blush, a smile and the words, "How glad I am that you are here!" Then when I reached her she laid her hand on my arm, seemingly with that sense of possession a girl feels on being just betrothed to the man of her choice.

What did it mean?

"I am glad," I said when I felt that I must speak, "that my presence does not disturb you. I thought it possible that after the scare at the breakfast table this morning you came here to get away from every one."

"Except you."

"You mean that I was more thoughtful than the rest in respecting your feelings?"

She did not reply to this. She stooped, picked up a crimson leaf that had fallen and pretended to admire its beauty.

"Would it be too much to ask your confidence as to why you did not reply to our host's question? I am sure that during the night you saw something that you interpreted as a sign."

She turned and looked at me with an expression of surprise. Then suddenly another look came upon her face, one of mingled disappointment and mortification.

"Can it be possible," she exclaimed, "that it was, after all, only a dream?"

"What dream?"

She turned away, muttering to herself: "Oh, heaven! What have I done?"

I caught her hands in mine, turned her toward me and begged for an explanation. I was some moments getting it, and when it came it came haltingly.

"Last night," she said, "I went to bed and to sleep, much affected, I admit, by the Halloween stories to which I had listened. During the night I awoke on hearing my name called softly. A window in my room opens on to a balcony. It was moonlight, and you stood with one hand on the casement. You said to me, 'Meet me tomorrow morning in the wood west of the house.' Then you went away. I took it for granted that your coming was a Halloween sign and that you were aware of your own presence. But now since you are not I suppose it was only a dream."

I made no reply for a few moments, but I still held her hands in mine. Then, saying, "Dream or no dream, it is a Halloween sign, and a Halloween sign you cannot resist; I am your fate, and you are mine," I drew her to me and kissed her.

Later I told her that during the previous evening I had noticed Mrs. Crowell go and sit beside her, and I asked her if she had felt any unusual sensation. She told me from that moment she had felt that during the night she would get a Halloween sign. She would not join in the agreement to tell in the morning if she had received one.

Before leaving the place where a sudden happiness had come to me I took Frank Greenleaf aside and asked him who was Mrs. Crowell.

"Why do you ask?" he said, with a quick exhibition of interest.

I told him the story as I have told it here, he opening his eyes wider every moment to the end.

"Mrs. Crowell," he said after I had finished, "possesses faculties that thus far no one has been able to explain. She is a clairvoyant, a medium, a mind reader or whatever you like to call her. I first met her at a meeting of the Society For Psychical Research, of which I am a member. Whatever she is, I know that she is not a fraud."

"At any rate," I replied, "she has done a neat bit of quick courting for me."

His Queer Way.

Little Girl—Mother, is Uncle John deaf?

Mother—No, dear. Why?

Little Girl—Every time he gives me five cents he says, "What do you say?" and I'm never saying a word.

Date of the Row.

The Bachelor—Yes; she has threatened to make things unpleasant for him. The Benedict—Is that so? When are they going to be married?

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

The communication to his uncle was equally brief. Mr. Traill read it to him. It ran:

"Dear Mr. Traill—I cannot marry you. Please forgive me. I did not realize, when you honored me with your proposal, that an insuperable obstacle existed. That is all—a lame explanation—but complete so far as it goes. A woman who has wrecked her life finds it hard to choose her words.

"Your sincere friend,

"E. Vansittart."

They discussed these curt notes during breakfast.

"I do not like their tone," said Mr. Traill, gravely. "They impress me as the hurried resolutions of a woman driven to extremities. Were it not for her request about the children, I should think what you thought last night, Charlie, when that policeman turned up."

"I must have telephoned my ideas to you mighty quick," was the retort.

"My dear boy, even at this moment we don't know what she intended to do. Why did she go out? What is the nature of her sudden illness? How comes it that she is at Brand's house?"

"I may be mistaken, but I think we will be given answers to all your questions in due time. Nothing really serious can be amiss, or we should have heard of it from Brand himself. Now, will you remain on guard here whilst I go out with Elsie and Mamie? The one thing that matters in their little lives this morning is that I shall hurry up and go doll-hunting with them."

"I will hold the fort until you return. You will not be long?"

"Perhaps half an hour. Whilst I am out I will make some inquiries as to the condition of our other friends of the Chinook."

"By the way, many of them must be destitute. It is my desire, Charlie, to pay the expenses of any such to their destination, and equip them properly for the journey."

"You are a first-rater, uncle, but it'll make your arm tired if you O.K. the bill all the time. Now here's a fair offer. Let me go halves."

"Be off, you rascal. You are keeping two ladies waiting."

With seeming anxiety to atone for the excesses of the week, the weather that morning justified the claim of Cornwall to be the summer land of England. The sun shone from a blue sky flecked with white clouds. The waters of Mount's Bay sparkled and danced in miniature wavelets. The air was so mild, the temperature so equable, that it was hard to credit sea and wind with the havoc of the preceding days.

The Gulf Rock disaster did not stand alone in the records of the hurricane. Even the day's papers contained belated accounts of casualties on the coasts of Normandy, Holland, and far-off Denmark. But nowhere else had there been such loss of life, whilst renewed interest was evoked by the final relief of all the survivors.

Pyne's appearance outside the sitting-room was hailed with a yell. Notwithstanding her own perplexities, Mrs. Vansittart had taken good care that the children were well provided for. They were beautifully dressed, and the smiling maid who freed them from control when the door opened said that they might go out without jackets, the day was so fine.

He descended the stairs, with a cigar in his mouth and a delighted youngster clinging to each hand.

In the hall he encountered a dozen journalists waiting to devour him. They had failed to penetrate the strategic screen interposed by the head waiter. Now the enemy was unmasked, and they advanced to the attack. Pyne was ready for them. He had already outlined his defence.

"Will one of you gentlemen, representing all, kindly give me a word in private?" he asked.

This was readily agreed to.

"Now this is the deal I will make," he said, when the two were isolated. "I will meet you all here in an hour's time. I will be interviewed, sketched, snap-shotted, give you locks of my hair, my autograph, my views on the Far East, the next Presidential election, and the fiscal question, if you bind yourself to one thing."

"And that is?"

"Among the passengers saved from the Chinnook is a Mrs. Vansittart. She is very ill, and is being cared for by Mr. Brand and his daughters. Make no reference to her in any way whatever beyond including her name in the published lists. Promise that and I'll talk a page."

"I am sure I can agree without consulting my colleagues," said the surprised reporter.

"Come along, kids," said Pyne. "I am delivered bound to the torture."

He passed out into the street, when Elsie's sharp eyes, searching for a shop, suddenly caught sight of Enid hurrying towards the hotel.

The child ran to meet her, and Enid, flushed with excitement, began to explain that Mrs. Vansittart was in bed, suffering from collapse and in a feverish state. The doctor's verdict was that she was in some danger, but would recover if carefully tended and kept in absolute quiet.

"Is Constance with her?" asked Pyne.

"Yes."

"And where is Mr. Brand?"

"He will be here soon. He asked me to call—and tell you—and Mr. Traill—what had happened."

Enid's speech was not prone to trip. Pyne's eyes gleamed into hers.

"Mr. Brand asked you to see my uncle?" he said cautiously.

"Yes," she faltered.

"Did he say anything else?"

"Yes—cousin."

"Let me take you right in. I guess it would make a sensation if I—here, Mamie, just hug Miss Enid good and hard for me, will you?"

Whilst the children waited in the hall, he accompanied the girl up the stairs and threw open the door of the sitting-room.

"Here is somebody you want to see, uncle?" he cried, and rejoined the little ones.

"Hoo-roosh!" he yelped. "Now let's buy a toy-store."

Enid and her father faced each other for some seconds in silent bewilderment. Then Mr. Traill rose and came near to her. She did not know what to do or say. This tall, stately man was one who should be dearer to her than anyone else in the world. She was his daughter, yet they were strangers one to the other.

"I—I—" How could she utter conventional words in such a moment? Her lips quivered and tears trembled in her eyes. Then he knew. The lace around her white neck was fastened with a little gold brooch bearing a four-leafed shamrock in emeralds. He looked at her with a profound reverence, and caught her by the shoulders.

"My dear," he murmured, "you are very like your mother."

"I am glad," she said, and kissed him.

CHAPTER XIX.

THE HOUSE THAT STOOD UPON A ROCK

A week passed. In the fickle memory of the outer world the story of the Gulf Rock lighthouse was becoming mellow with age. Men now talked of war in Africa, of the Yellow Peril, of some baccarat squabble in a West-end club. But its vitality lingered in Penzance. There were side issues which Pyne's device had kept from the public ken, but which the town's folk pondered. Lady Margaret Stanhope, obeying her son's behests, tantalized her friends by smiling serenely and telling them nothing when they pestered her with questions. That is to say, she spoke not one word about the lady who was being nursed back to health in the lighthouse-keeper's cottage, but filled their souls with bitterness when she hinted at marvels concerning Constance and Enid.

In such a small place, where every man's affairs are canvassed by his neighbors, it was impossible to prevent an atmosphere of mystery from clinging to Mrs. Vansittart. Again, the gossips were greatly concerned about Enid. For a young woman "in her position" to be engaged to an officer in the Royal Navy and admitted to the sacred ranks of the aristocracy was a wonderful thing in itself. But that she should be on open terms of the greatest intimacy not alone with the elderly Mr. Traill, but with his good-looking nephew, even calling the latter "Charlie" and treating him as a near relative, was an amazing circumstance only surpassed by the complacency with which Lady Margaret and her son regarded it.

The actors in this comedy seemed to be sublimely indifferent to public opinion. That was the worst of it. Enid was escorted about the town by each and all of the men at all hours. Now she was at the hospital, cheering Bates and Jackson or the injured people from the wreck, now arranging for the departure of some of the poorer survivors when they were able to travel, now flitting over to Marazion to see Jim Spence, and once actually visiting Mr. Jones, the inn-keeper.

At last a part of the secret eked out. Enid went with her father to ask how Mr. Emmett, the sick chief officer, was getting on. They found him smoking in the front garden of the house in which Brand had lodged him.

He started when he saw them approaching, and his weather-beaten face wore the puzzled look with which he regarded Enid one night on the lighthouse stairs.

Traill noticed the sailor's covert glances at Enid, so he said:

"By the way, Mr. Emmett, you were on the Britannia when my wife and I, her sister, and two children, came to England before the Esmeralda was lost?"

"Yes, sir." He paused.

During many an Atlantic crossing he and Mr. Traill had talked of that last joyous journey, when he, a boy who had just joined the service, sat at their table, as was the custom of junior officers in those years.

Mr. Traill smiled. He knew what was in the other man's mind

"Do you see a likeness in this young lady to anyone you have ever known?" he asked.

"Well, sir, I hope it will not hurt your feelings, and it's a good many years ago now, but I could have sworn—well, I must out with it. She is the living image of your wife."

"Indeed, that cannot hurt my feelings, as she is her daughter."

"Her daughter! Your daughter!" gasped Emmett.

A small serving-maid, with the ears of a rabbit, was listening spell-bound at the open window. Here, indeed, was a choice tit-bit for the milkman, and the postman, and the butcher's and grocer's boys. From this lower current the stream of talk flowed upwards until it reached the august drawing-room of Mrs. Taylor-Smith.

She drove in frantic haste to Lady Margaret's villa, and fired questions broadside.

"Oh, yes," said Jack's mother, suavely. "It is quite true. Of course I have known it from the first. According to present arrangements the marriage will take place in the spring. Enid's marriage settlement will be nearly a quarter of a million."

Like most women, she loved that word. A million, even in fractions, is so glib, yet so unattainable.

The only person who was slightly dissatisfied with the progress of events was Pyne. Constance never appeared. She shared with Mrs. Sheppard the care of her mother. Enid, blithe and guileless in the public eye, did the house-keeping and represented the household.

THE GREATEST RACING EVER SEEN HERE

That Was The Verdict of Experts Who Saw Yesterday's Races--Finishes in Nearly All Heats Were Sensational—Hal Direct and Edward the King Won in Straight Heats--Big Crowd Was Roused To Enthusiasm

Although the weather was far from favorable for the second day's races at the driving park, there was a much larger crowd present than on the opening day. A cold wind, driving before it a heavy fall of snow, was the most unpleasant condition which prevailed, but the races, although decided in straight heats, furnished finishes exciting enough to keep the blood of the spectators almost at fever heat. The first event was the free-for-all, in which there were four starters, which are named in the summary given below and the features of which were:

FREE-FOR-ALL.

1st heat.—Syka Direct got a bad send-off and never was able to get up. Cassie Pointer, who had the pole, went off in front, trailed by Hal Direct and Walter G. On the third quarter Hal Direct forged to the front and won easily. Walter G. and Cassie Pointer had a hot contest down the stretch and the former just nosed the latter out.

2nd heat—Hal Direct led from the start and was never headed, winning by a length. Walter G. was second by half a length, Cassie Pointer third and Syka Direct several lengths back. Time—2.24.

3rd heat—It was now apparent that Hawkins had been laying up the previous heats with Syka Direct, as although she started some four lengths behind the others, she held pace with them, and, on the third quarter, shot past all but Hal Direct and looked like taking the lead, but she was unable to do so, and Cassie Pointer took up the chase of the flying leader, but was unable to head him. Down the stretch they flew at a 2.20 gait, and Syka Direct made a final effort, passing Cassie Pointer, but being beaten half a length by Hal Direct, Cassie about the same distance back, and the audience cheered and shouted in their excitement.

The summary:—

Hal Direct, bl.s., owner Van B. Woodruff, Oshawa (McPhee)	1	1	1
Walter G., b.g., owner A. C. Dafoe, Foxboro, (Powell)	2	2	4
Syka Direct, ch.m., owner Oliver Hawkins	4	4	2
Cassie Pointer, b.m., owner and driver, James Hume, Toronto	3	3	3

Time—2.22; 2.24; 2.24.

2.35 CLASS.

1st heat—This was a horse race from start to finish. Edward the King drew the pole and was closely pressed all the way by Tom Tariff, who lay on his wheel, but could not quite get up, being beaten half a length. He had cast a shoe. Pickett Boy closed rapidly coming home, but finished third close up. Time—2.26 1-2.

2nd heat—This heat had a thrilling finish. Edward the King went off in the lead, closely pressed by Tom Tariff, but the latter broke, when Pickett Boy ranged up to Edward and tried hard to pass, but couldn't. On the third quarter Tariff made his effort and passed Pickett Boy, but Edward held his lead by a small margin. Turning into the stretch whips were plying, and Edward shot past the wire a head in front of Tariff. Pickett Boy was third and Rex W. away off. Time—2.28.

3rd heat—Edward the King, although closely pressed, won by a long neck, with Pickett Boy, who had come with a sensational rush, second, and Tom Tariff third. This ended the race and the meeting. The summary:

Edward the King, b.g., owner and driver, G. Powell, jr., Belleville	1	1	1
Tom Tariff, b.s., owner and driver, C. Fife, Keene	2	2	3
Pickett Boy, b.g., owner W. Simpson, Campbellford, (J. Ketcheson)	3	3	2
Rex W., b.g., owner Benson, Napanee (D. Lake)	4	4	4

Time—2.26 1-2; 2.25; 2.30.

NOTES.

A gentleman who has seen much of the sport of the track said that the racing of yesterday was the best he had ever seen in eastern Ontario.

George Powell, the veteran, has lost none of his skill. His driving of Edward the King was masterly.

The fastest horse in the races was Hal Direct, 2.11, by Direct Hal 2.04, by Direct 2.05—a great speed inheritance, but he is worthy of it. Mr. Woodruff, of Oshawa, his owner, is naturally proud of him.

Syka (why not Psyche) Direct, by DeVeras 2.11 1-4, by Direct, is capable of a better showing than she made yesterday. Her sudden waking up in the third heat was suggestive, to say the least.

Pickett Boy, by Hermit 2.16 1-2, is very speedy and will doubtless win races ere long.

Dennis Lake was behind an animal that was outclassed, and Dennis' skill was of no avail.

HORSE AND TRACK.

The Jap, a chestnut gelding owned by "Tommy" Stewart, of Deseronto, and which has several times raced here without showing any wonderful speed, has at last shown what he is capable of. At Montreal on Tuesday he won the 2.25 pace from seven competitors in the fast time of 2.21 1-4, 2.20 3-4 and 2.23.

CURLING.

The following two rinks of lady curlers left to-day for Kingston where they will play a friendly game with the ladies of the limestone city:

Miss Hurley	Miss W. Riggs
Mrs. helps	Mrs. Dr. Clarke
Mrs. W. C. Mikel	Mrs. A. P. Allen
Mrs. W. J. Cook —Skip.	Miss B. Gillum —Skip.

The two rinks of Belleville curlers who went to Kingston to compete in the District Cup compeition have returned home defeated, but by no means disgraced. The local players defeated Cobourg in the first round but in the second met defeat at the hands of the Colborne players. Seven clubs were represented in the match namely, Kingston, Napanee, Belleville Prescott, Brockville, Cobourg, and Colborne.

BILLIARDS.

The London Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News of the 14th inst., says of the famous young Australian who is now visiting England:

George Gray accomplished quite the most remarkable of his many extraordinary performances when playing Diggle, 8000 up, level, at Nottingham last week. The Manchester crack was the first player of the highest class that the youthful Australian has encountered over here, and the first to whom he did not concede a start. Many people imagined that Diggle's great experience would give him a decided advantage, and also that Gray would not be able to run up his customary gigantic breaks if he did not have matters all his own way. Just for a brief period it looked as if these views might prove correct, for Diggle cleverly managed to keep his opponent off his favorite stroke at the outset of the game, when the boy did not seem quite so self-possessed as usual. He very soon pulled himself together, however, and for the rest of the week there was only one in it. His two breaks of 1,318 and 1,200 are the highest he has ever made, and in addition to these remarkable efforts he credited himself with 900, 695, five breaks of between one and two hundred, six of between two and three hundred and two of between three and four hundred. When a player makes upwards of half of his requisite points in four breaks, it is quite certain that his opponent can have no possible chance with him, and though Diggle was beaten by no fewer than 4,177 points, he played really well when he had a chance given him. This was not very often, as may be imagined from the fact that in four consecutive sessions, he was only allowed to go six times to the table.

AVERS $5,000,000 DUTY SHORTAGE

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—A countrywide investigation which the treasury department has started, the Tribune says, has disclosed discrepancies in the wrapper and filler statistics of tobacco imports from Cuba which have deprived the government of between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000 annually for the past five years.

According to the Tribune, tobacco trade statistics show that cigarmakers who turn out pure Havana cigars must have 6 per cent. of their stock in "wrapper," while the statistics of the treasury department show a fraction under one-fifth of one per cent. of the Cuban importations classified as and paying duty as "wrapper."

CATTLE MARKETS.

Hogs at Lower Prices on American Yards—Trading Light.

Toronto Live Stock.

TORONTO, Jan. 25.—The railways reported 49 carloads of live stock at the City Market, consisting of 851 cattle, 1088 hogs, 98 sheep, 46 calves and 1 horse.

Butchers.

Butcher cows sold at from 30c to 40c per cwt. lower, but after all is said and done prices are still high, especially for the quality.

Drovers will have to get their cattle for less money, or be prepared to take a loss when they reach the market.

Milkers and Springers.

A liberal supply of milkers and springers sold at steady prices, ranging from $40 to $70 each.

Veal Calves.

Veal calves sold at about the same prices—$3 to $8 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs.

Wesley Dunn reported prices as follows: Sheep, ewes, $4.25 to $4.50; lambs, $5.80 to $6.00.

Hogs.

Ten hundred and eighty-eight hogs were reported by the railways. Prices unchanged, at $7.50 for selects, fed and watered, and $7.15 to drovers for hogs f.o.b. cars at country points, which means $7 to the farmer.

Montreal Live Stock.

MONTREAL, Jan. 25.—At the Canadian Pacific Live Stock Market, the offerings this morning were 600 cattle, 200 sheep and lambs, 1000 hogs and 150 calves. There was no important change in the condition of the market for cattle prices, being steady on account of smaller offerings and a fairly good demand for local consumption. Choice steers, sold at 6¼c to 6½c; good, at 5¾c to 6c; fairly good, at 5¼c to 5½c; fair, at 4¾c to 5c, and the lower grades, at 4c to 4½c per lb. There were no choice cows on the market, consequently the highest price realized was 5c for the best and the commoner ones brought from that down to 3½c per lb. A few good bulls sold at 5c to 5¼c, and the lower grades at 4c to 4¾c per lb.

The tone of the market for sheep was stronger and prices advanced ¼c per lb., owing to limited supply offered, for which the demand was good and sales were made at 4½c to 4¾c per lb. Lambs were steady and only met with fair sale, as butchers generally are well supplied with frozen stock, but as the supply was small a clearance was made at 6c to 6¼c per lb.

The market for hogs was without any new feature. Supplies were larger than on Monday, for which the demand was good and prices ruled steady at $8 per cwt., weighed off cars. A fairly active trade was done in calves at prices ranging from $2.50 to $11 each, as to size and quality.

At the Montreal Stock Yards, West End Market, there were offered 250 cattle, 175 sheep and lambs, 800 hogs and 100 calves. A fairly good trade was done in all lines and the prices realized were much the same as those quoted above, with the exception of hogs, which sold at $8.10 to $8.25 per cwt., weighed off cars, for selected lots.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

TERMINAL ELEVATORS

Western Farmers Discuss the Grain Problem.

Mr. Martin of Regina Urges That Immediate Action Be Taken to Stop the Admixture of Grain—Opinion on the Question of Public Ownership Is Very Much Divided In the House.

Ottawa, Jan. 26.—The time of the House of Commons yesterday was devoted to a discussion of a resolution proposed by W. M. Martin (Regina) that in view of the conditions existing in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, that such "measure be adopted by the Government as will more effectually prevent the improper admixture of grain" delivered to the terminal and transfer elevators through which the grain of the western provinces might pass.

A large number of the western members took part in the debate, and opinion divided as to the necessity of public ownership. Many declared that if public ownership was the only remedy they were ready to adopt it.

Dr. Schaffner (Souris), Conservative member, goes farther than his opponent, and has a resolution on the order paper calling for "Government operation" at once.

In support of his motion Mr. Martin said that this was undoubtedly an important question which affects every class of people in the west and Canada as a whole. During the present session a number of important delegations had waited upon the Government, but none of more importance than that composed of western farmers, with whose recommendations he was in accord. Despite action which had been taken to put a stop to the conditions in the terminal elevators, it was apparent that something more will have to be done.

Mr. Martin then quoted from the report of the royal commission on grain in 1906.

On the question of terminal elevators the commission reported in favor of Government control, rather than Government ownership. He pointed out that it had been shown that grain handled exclusively by the railway companies reached Great Britain in better condition as to grade than that handled by independent elevators, and the solution was to eliminate the element of private gain.

Thomas McNutt (Saltcoats) followed, speaking as a practical western farmer. He said there were a number of middlemen making a living out of the farmers' grain, and this condition it was proposed to alter. The farmers did not object to paying all fair transportation haulage and storage costs, but they did object to profit being made out of them by the manipulation of their grain while it was en route. He favored Government ownership in this case.

Dr. Schaffner (Souris) said that on the principle that half a loaf was better than no loaf at all, he would support Mr. Martin's resolution, but he believed an operation would have to be performed on it to make it produce even half a loaf.

Dr. Roche (Marquette, Man.) objected entirely to the resolution under which the discussion had been introduced. Government ownership of terminal elevators did not necessarily mean the purchase of elevators at an extravagant price. The elevators, he thought, could be leased. Thus a great initial expense would be avoided.

J. G. Turiff (Assiniboia) said it was the duty of the Government to point the way to such reforms as had been suggested as necessary. He was emphatically opposed to Government ownership or operation of public facilities so long as this could be avoided. The history of Government ownership in Canada, whether under present or past Governments, he was speaking generally, was not such as to encourage an addition to the burden. But if there were no other means whereby the reforms could be achieved, and of this he was not yet absolutely sure, he would advocate the purchase or leasing of these elevators, as had been asked by certain of the western wheat growers.

A return presented in the House yesterday afternoon by Hon. L. P. Brodeur giving the correspondence and regulations agreed upon at Washington two weeks ago in connection with the settlement of the North Atlantic fisheries dispute, contains the following paragraph in regard to the happy issue of this century-old difficulty; which formed the text of a despatch from Ambassador Bryce to Earl Grey: "I may add that the two Canadian Ministers (Aylesworth and Brodeur) seemed to me to show a happy union of firmness in all essentials with a reasonable spirit in non-essentials, and their attitude was appreciated by the United States representatives, whose conduct on their side of the case evinced a no less friendly disposition, and who recognized unequivocally the fairness which the Canadian laws and regulations had been administered."

"Both sides parted with cordial sentiments, and both the President and the Secretary of State expressed to me their great satisfaction that matters had been so adjusted as to leave pleasant recollections behind of the frame of mind in which the questions had been dealt with, which at one time seemed likely to give rise to discussion, and it was specially fortunate that any necessity for a further reference to arbitration, with all the expense and delay that this might have involved, had been avoided by direct negotiation between the parties."

He added that the protocol of the agreement would likely be brought down to-morrow.

Hon. Wm. Paterson was in the House yesterday, and Hon. W. S. Fielding will make his first appearance of the session to-morrow. He will make a report on the reciprocity negotiations.

STEEL OFFICES BURNED.

Dominion Corporation Loses Valuable Books and Records.

Halifax, Jan. 26.—The general offices of the Dominion Steel Corporation at Sydney were yesterday afternoon destroyed by fire which originated in the company's central telephone office. The telephone central endeavored to notify the other offices, but communication was cut off almost simultaneously with the discovery of the fire, and the young lady at the board had a narrow escape.

The entire building was in flames before the company's firemen arrived. The force of water was not sufficient to send a stream to the second storey, where the fire originated. The Sydney fire engine was almost wrecked by slipping over the embankment near the offices.

In the efforts to save the effects in the offices, volumes of important papers, prints and fyles were lost in being thrown from the windows. A great vault, where many valuable papers were fyled, broke through the floors and crashed into the basement. In the excitement anything that came to hand was thrown out of the windows at random, and the air was filled with papers flying from every office in the building, the value of which can only be conjectured. The company's documents of the most value were, however, all located in the three vaults at the south end of the building, which it is believed still stands. Among the valuables lost are a singularly complete record of the company's affairs for the past ten years.

The building itself was worth at least $60,000. The exact insurance figures are not obtainable, but it is understood that there is about $40,000 on it.

General Manager Butler was in Springhill when he received news of the fire. He left at once for Sydney by special train.

A Loss to Letters.

New York, Jan. 26.—The funeral of David Graham Phillips, the author, who died in Bellevue Hospital shortly before midnight from the effects of an assassin's bullets, will be held, according to an announcement yesterday, in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration, known as the "Little Church around the Corner." The arrangements for the burial, etc., are all in the hands of Senator Albert J. Beveridge, who was one of the writer's most intimate friends.

Mr. Phillips' death came so late in the night that many of his colleagues in literature and business did not hear of it until yesterday morning. As the news reached them their personal regret was increased by their feeling, expressed almost unanimous in the brief statements which they gave out that he had been killed at the beginning of a career that meant much for American letters.

Liked Big Fires.

New York, Jan. 26.—That the lives of 5,000 persons have been imperilled by a 17-year-old pyromaniac, was revealed yesterday when Fred. Burkhardt, a delivery boy, admitted that he had been responsible for a number of fires in Brooklyn. Burkhardt, the youngest fire fiend with whom the police have ever dealt, was arrested charged with arson, the specific charge against him being the setting on fire of the building at 517 Throop avenue, Brooklyn, early yesterday. Forty persons were driven panic-stricken into the street.

"I just wanted to see one real big fire," declared Burkhardt. "If the first fire I had started had been a big one I would have quit then. I certainly do like to see them engines go to a fire."

The youthful pyromaniac confessed to starting a dozen fires.

Eighteen Deaths From Plague.

Pekin, Jan. 26.—Despite the efforts at secrecy maintained by the authorities it was learned yesterday that there have been at least eighteen deaths from the bubonic plague in this city within the past seven days. There are more than a score of cases of real and suspected plague.

The districts where the infection was found have been isolated but the authorities were so lax in taking action that hundreds were exposed to it before the quarantine went into effect.

Families are fleeing from the city daily, many of them being residents of the foreign colony. So serious has the situation become at Tein Tsin and Pukow that all railway traffic has been suspended.

Manufacturing Concessions.

London, Jan. 26.—The Foreign Office has not received any details of the Canadian-American reciprocity agreement which is to be given out at Washington to-day. In reply to an enquiry from those interested here, the Ministry announced that it is able to state only that the general lines of the agreement are reciprocity in specified products and some concessions to manufacturers.

Cost of Graft Investigation.

Woodstock, Jan. 26.—According to a report submitted to the Oxford County Council yesterday, the cost of the graft investigation is nearly $5,000 to date, as follows: Noble Detective Agency, $2,508.90; V. O. Cameron, solicitor for committee, $450; witness fees $384; serving papers $906.86; E. F. B. Johnston's fees will be about $1,000.

Wants to Go Over Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 26.—William Hill, who some time ago navigated the lower rapids in Leach's barrel, yesterday declared that he had placed an order for the construction of a barrel of his own design for a trip over the falls next summer.

Is the Duke Coming?

London, Jan. 26.—There is reason to believe that the original arrangement for the Duke of Connaught to replace Lord Grey as Governor-General of Canada holds good.

It is expected that the duke will go to Ottawa in the autumn.

PUBLICITY IS NEEDED

O. C. Pratt Urges Teaching Ontario About Itself.

Member for South Norfolk In Moving Reply to Speech From the Throne In Legislature, Says a Ten Thousand Dollar Expert Is Needed at Once — Allan Studholme Favors Government Loans to Settlers.

Toronto, Jan. 26.—"Peace like a river" flowed through the proceedings of the Ontario Legislature yesterday afternoon. The Governmnt members were present in full force to hear the moving and seconding of the address in reply to the speech from the throne. Hon. A. G. McKay, Opposition leader, had a loyal little band of seven of his followers in attendance. Allan Studholme, the doughty Labor leader, was also present.

Sir James Whitney and Hon. J. J. Foy. gave notice of several bills for the purpose of consolidating various statutes.

G. H. Ferguson (Grenville) gave a notice from his seat on the second row on the Ministerial side, which, when discussed, will probably ripple the calm waters of legislative debate. The motion reads:

"That in the opinion of this House no language other than the English language, should be used as a medium of instruction in schools of this province."

O. C. Pratt (South Norfolk), in moving the adoption of a loyal address in reply to the speech from the throne, paid tribute to the statesmanship of the late King.

"What Ontario wants," said Mr. Pratt, "is a $10,000 publicity man, capable of teaching the people the possibilities that lie dormant in the resources of this province.

"Our farmers are conservative; they are slow," said Mr. Pratt, "to take to new ideas." Let the Government send out 1,000 bushels of alfalfa seed to the Ontario farmers, with instructions, and the effect would be magical. The Government was doing something for reforestation in at least one splendid plot in the province. They should be supported in such efforts.

J. Torrance (North Perth) said that he considered it a special honor to second the address yesterday, as it was the anniversary of the day six years ago when the Whitney Government gained a great victory at the polls and saved the Province of Ontario from rack and ruin.

A. Studholme (Hamilton East) advocated loans to settlers for the erection of homes and planting their homesteads. "I don't care if you spend millions," he said, "to do it. I would support the outlay. It was the best way to populate Northern Ontario. It worked well in New Zealand."

Mr. Studholme in conclusion moved the adjournment of the debate.

Sir James asked the member for Hamilton East if he desired to speak further to-day. When he replied in the negative, it was explained that his motion was not necessary. On Mr. Studholme resuming his seat, Hon. A. G. McKay, who will resume the discussion this afternoon, then moved the adjournment of the debate.

Dog Showed Where Men Drowned.

Halifax, Jan. 26.—Since Sunday nearly every able bodied man at Tangier, 50 miles east of Halifax, has been engaged in a search, night and day, for two brothers-in-law, Bain Mason and Freeman Beaver, fishermen of Tangier. They went out shooting for birds on Saturday morning.

Yesterday their boat was found on the shore, and the whole countryside was searched. At last attention was attracted to tracks made on the ice by Mason's dog, which seemed to circle round one spot. There was no break in the ice, but the searchers at last made a hole in the centre of the tracks and dragged the bottom. There they found the bodies of the two men. They had fallen through unobserved, a cold snap came and the ice froze over again, hiding all traces of the tragedy.

Charge of Incendiarism.

Alvinston, Ont., Jan. 26.—John B. Trolley was taken to Sarnia last night, where he will await trial at the spring Assizes on a charge of offering money to three parties to set fire to the barns of Neil A. McLean of Brooke Township.

A. J. Trolley was implicated in the evidence and he was arrested on a similar charge, but was bailed in the sum of $1,600. George Irving and George Parry of Alvinston and Charles Hanley of Brooke swore that J. B. Trolley had offered them each $25 to set fire to McLean's barns. Irving implicated A. J. Trolley by stating that he had offered him a certain sum to commit the same act.

The building was completely destroyed by fire on the night of Jan. 11th.

Not a Victim.

Cannington, Jan. 26.—"Ruddy" Lowes, thought to have been a victim of foul play, is in Kansas City on business and is quite well. This is the tenor of a message received from him by his father, Andrew Lowes, of Derryville. It is probable he sold his other ticket to the man found dead in the train in Minnesota.

Postmaster Burned Out.

Cornwall, Jan. 26.—During the absence in Ottawa of James Currie, postmaster at Crysler, and his wife, their residence took fire, in some unknown manner, and the interior was pretty well gutted. The loss is covered by $1,000 insurance.

On his return to Parliamentary duties, about the 14th of February, Col. Pryce-Jones will be accompanied to England by Mr. Charles, editor of the Druid Newspaper of Scranton, Pa.

Mr. Charles is going to England to urge Mr. Lloyd-George to accept an invitation to visit America, given on behalf of the Welsh citizens throughout the country, and Col. Pryce-Jones says he believes Mr. Lloyd-George will come.

The Eggs Must Go.

Montreal, Jan. 26.—At a special meeting of civic officials it was decided that the $100,000 worth of frozen eggs which have been condemned by the Provincial Board of Health must be taken outside the city's limits or destroyed by the authorities of Montreal within 36 hours.

G.T.R. Enquiry.

Stratford, Jan. 26.—Judge Barron's G.T.R. strikers' enquiry program for the next week or so is as follows: Thursday and Friday at Windsor, to hear cases of Windsor, Detroit and Durand men; Saturday, Sarnia; Monday and Tuesday at Palmerston, including Southampton line applications; Wednesday, Niagara Falls. His honor then goes to Ottawa and the Maritime Provinces for a week or ten days on Intercolonial business, before resuming the Grand Trunk Railway investigation.

Andy Would Fortify.

New York, Jan. 26.—Fortification of the Panama Canal would not be incompatible with the movement for world-wide peace agreements, in the opinion of Andrew Carnegie. The ironmaster, in an interview yesterday, said that while the non-fortification of the canal would have been a strong argument in favor of a universal peace treaty, still sound reasons exist for President Taft's decision to have fortifications constructed.

FLOATING A NEW BANK

Rodolphe Forget Is at Head of Big Venture.

General Bank of Canada With a Capital of Ten Million Dollars Is Being Incorporated and Will Have Many French Depositors—Best Financiers Are In It—Stock Is All Underwritten.

Montreal, Jan. 26.—Canada will soon have a very large addition to her present banking capital, and this will no doubt lessen the stringency existing at times during certain seasons of the year. The bill of incorporation introduced in the Commons yesterday by Robert Bickerdike, M.P. for St. Lawrence, is one of the most important measures ever introduced into Parliament, and the General Bank of Canada will undoubtedly be an accomplished fact before many months have passed away. The capital will reach ten millions of dollars, and the project is the outcome of Rodolphe Forget's visit to France a few months ago.

It may be said that he has been assured the underwriting of the full amount of the capital mentioned above, as well as the further assurance that as soon as the bank is started properly deposits from old France will be forthcoming to an amount of many times the capital of the institution. As the Banking Act demands the majority to be British subjects, there will be seven directors appointed here and four from amongst the French shareholders. The French investors have, in fact, such an appetite for Canadian securities, that anything backed by reliable people here, is readily accepted by the Parisian money lenders.

It is also known that very large interests here have offered to co-operate with Rodolphe Forget in his great enterprise. The member for Charlevoix stated yesterday that he would not be a director. "But never fear," he said, "they will be selected from the very best financiers of the Dominion, and this means a great forward movement in the way of financial and commercial progress."

Branches will be established in Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Halifax, St. John, and in fact in all the large centres of the Dominion.

It is said that one institution alone in the city of Montreal has expressed its willingness to subscribe $300,000 to the new concern, although as previously intimated the entire ten millions have been underwritten.

Col. Munro Gets Summons.

Toronto, Jan. 26.—One more summons was issued yesterday in the Farmers' Bank case, and another will be issued to-day. Col. Munro, the bank's last president, has been charged with signing false returns to the Government at Ottawa, and a summons charging a prominent Toronto citizen with a violation of sub-section B of section 139 of the Bank Act, by accepting the notes of the bank as a pledge.

This summons is returnable in the Police Court on Monday morning, and Col. Munro, at Embro, Ont., last night refused to discuss the matter further than to say that he will be in court on Monday.

Nothing new has been learned of any change in the warrants issued for the arrest of Lindsay or Nesbitt by way of making the offences extraditable, nor of the laying of new charges.

Clung to Sinking Ship.

Boston, Jan. 26.—Their gaunt faces and emaciated bodies testifying to the horrors through which they had passed while clinging to their sinking ship for four days, and subsisting only on raw meat and condensed milk, the six men of the Canadian schooner Helen Shafner, were brought into port last night aboard the fishing schooner Josie. Capt. Larry Norris of the fishing schooner picked up the men about 40 miles west of Seal Island off the Nova Scotia coast on Friday.

The rescued men were Capt. I. A. Hopkins of Halifax; Mate W. Green, Cook Geo. Harpell, Seamen Stephen Verge, W. McGrath and Bruce Austin.

A HOST OF LADIES INVADED BRIDGE STREET PARSONAGE

Invasion Took Place Tuesday and Ladies Were Well Armed—They Carried Cakes, Coffee, Sandwiches and Hymn Books—Surprise Was Complete—Captors and Captured Enjoyed Themselves Together--A Delightful Evening

Laden with cakes, sandwiches, coffee, dishes and hymn books some thirtyeight of the members of the Bridge St. Epworth League marched into the Bridge St. Church Parsonage Tuesday evening, pastor, Dr. Bishop and his wife. It was truly a "Surprise Party," and an exceedingly happy three hours or more were enjoyed by all. That Dr. Bishop is well liked by the young people of his congregation was well shown by the large attendance, and also by the spirit of comradship or good-fellowship which pervaded the assembly.

During the course of the evening an address of appreciation was read the pastor and his wife by the president of the league, and Miss Annie Martin presented a bouquet of roses and carnations. The sentiments of the address were endorsed in brief, impromptu addresses by the Honorary President, George F. Stewart, Rev. E. R. Doxee, Mr. John T. Burns, and Miss Annie Morton, after which all the members joined in the endorsation by a standing vote, and by singing "He's a Jolly Good Fellow. Both Dr. Bishop and his wife made reply, thanking the leaguers for their loyalty and good wishes. The address read as follows:

Dr. and Mrs. Bishop, we are met here this evening to tell you that we appreciate you and the work you are doing as pastor of Bridge St. Church. We know that your work is difficult, and that the support you receive from the membership is not always what you might desire, and that you may in consequence have frequent cause for discouragement, but we want to assure you that we, the members of the Epworth League, representing the younger members of the church, are in accord with your aims and methods, and are grateful to you for the high spiritual standard you have always held up before your congregation. The results of your work will surely be seen and felt in Bridge St. Church for many years.

We thank you for the assistance you have given us so willingly in our Epworth League and to all of our young people. At much inconvenience to herself she has opened her house to our committee meetings, has led our Mission Study Class, has assisted us in our social gatherings, and in many other ways has given us of her time and her talents.

We appreciate all these things, and deire to tell you so while you are still with us, and while the telling may cheer you both in your work, and perhaps make your remaining years with us brighter and easier.

We bring you our appreciation and our good will, and also our sincere thanks to you both for all that you have done for us as a league, and also fo rus as individuals.

In token of our good will, and also of the loyalty which we purpose giving you during your remaining years with us, we ask you to accept this bouquet of flowers, and though the flowers will soon fade and perish, our good will and loyalty to you two will not fade, but will, we are sure, increase as long as the Master permits you to stay with us.

Signed on behalf of the league by 33 of the members.

Hastings County Council

that the High County Constable should be a resident of the more central part of the county than one in the city.

Messrs. Vermilyea, Mather and Kells spoke upon the matter referring to the County Constabulary, which was by no means as satisfactory as it might be.

Mr. Clark moved, seconded by Mr Ketcheson, that Sheriff Morrison be appointed High County Constable at a salary of $100 per annum.

Mr. Clarke spoke in support of the motion which he considered would be a move in the right direction. The Sheriff, if appointed, would no doubt re-organize the constabulary of the county.

Mr. Kirk thought the first thing to do was to dismiss Mr. Duffin before another person was appointed to his position.

Mr. Vermilyea said that the by-law appointing Mr. Duffin would have to be repealed, and this would no doubt dismiss Mr. Duffin.

Mr. Clarke gave notice that he would introduce a by-law to repeal by-law No. 557 appointing High County constable and to define his duties.

The motion of Mr. Clarke appointing the Sheriff as High County Constable was withdrawn for the present.

Mr. Allen, County Engineer, addressed the council in reference to the county bridges which are proposed to be rebuilt in the county. He would advise the county to procure necessary machinery for making concrete

Council adjourned.

Thursday, Jan. 26.
MORNING SESSION.

Council resumed at 10 o'clock, Warden Dryden presiding.

A communication was read from Mrs. T. E. Wilson, matron of the House of Refuge, asking for an increase in salary of $100 per annum. —Referred to Ways and Means Committee.

A report was presented from Dr. Clinton, physician of the House of Refuge, as to the number of inmates, namely 63, some of whom were blind and others were imbeciles. He requested an increase of salary.—Referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Eight by-laws were introduced, and after being read a first time, were referred to the Committee of the Whole on By-Laws.

MOTIONS.

Mr. Hanley moved, seconded by Mr. Ketcheson, that the usual annual grant of $25 be made to the Farmers' Institute of East, West and Nort Hastings, and $10 to the Women's Institutes.—Referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Moved by Mr. Netterville, seconded by Mr. Ketcheson, that a bridge on the Hastings road, one-half mile from Maynooth be assumed as a county bridge.

Mr. Netterville said the bridge in question was 130 feet long and was on the boundary between the Townships of Bangor, McClure and Wicklow. The bridge was in a rather dangerous condition and should be assumed as a county bridge.

Mr. Vermilyea said we must deal with the northern townships in a different manner than the southern municipalities of the county, owing to many difficulties they have to encounter.

Mr. Mather concurred with Mr. Vermilyea's remarks. The northern part of the county was heavily burdened by taxation. We should at present deal generously with the northern municipalities, and the time will come when the northern part of the county will be more self sustaining than at present.

The motion of Mr. Netterville was allowed to stand as a notice of motion.

On motion Dr. Clinton was heard and spoke in regard to the report he had presented. He contended that he made regular visits to the House of Refuge, and rendered medical service. Last year he made over 200 visits to the institution. He requested the Council to grant his request for an increase of salary.

Mr. Clarke moved, seconded by Mr. Nugent, that a grant of $200 be made towards repairing and rebuilding a bridge on the boundary between the Townships of Limerick and Dungannon.

The mover of the motion spoke strongly in support of the measure.

Mr. Nugent said he had assurance that the Department of Public Works of Ontario would assist in the erection of this bridge if the county would give some assistance. The Township of Dungannon, a rather poor municipality, had to build two new bridges.

Mr. Vermilyea suggested that the members of the northern municipalities get together and draft a report as to what their necessities are, and the Council could then consider it. After the Council had made a grant which was considered right and just the treasury lid should be hermetically sealed.

The motion of Mr. Clarke was referred to the Ways and Means Committee for an appropriation.

Moved by Mr. Clarke, seconded by Mr. Cook, that the sum of $100 be paid extra per annum to the Superintendent of Roads and Bridges for extra work in connection with road work and providing reports, etc.

Mr. Clarke stated the Superintendent last year paid out $50 for certain reports he had to make and also had to go to Toronto in connection with county road matters. We would get back from the Government some portion of this grant

Mr. Vermilyea said that the county would get back a portion of the extra grant, namely one-third from the Government, which had imposed additional duties upon the Superintendent. The Ontario Government, he was frank to say, was dealing in a generous manner with the county in the way of grants on roads and bridges.

Mr. Cook said that previous to 1904 the county had to pay all expenses of the Superintendent, the expenses on roads and bridges, whereas now the county receives substantial aid from the Ontario Government.

The motion was referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. Kells moved, seconded by Mr. Gunter, that a grant of $90 be made to poor school sections Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7 of Elzevir Township.—Referred to the Ways and Means Committee.

Council adjourned until 2 o'clock.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

The dynamos in the human body are also intimately connected by conductors, so that, when an organ or part is called upon for excessive work part furnishes the excess of energy by robbing all of the other dynamos of their energy, or working power.

Thus, all other parts of the body for the time being, must suffer from the lack of functioning power they are deprived of. So, in this way, an organ may be weak or deficient without it or its needed energy to supply some overtaxed function.

The occasional overtaxing of a function may not result in much observable injury to other parts; but through oft-repeated and continued experienges the excessive function becomes a habit, and more or less continuous in its excessive

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lindsay, Ont.—"I think it is no more than right for me to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. When I wrote to her some time ago I was a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor said I would have to go through an operation, but this I refused to do. A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and now, after using three bottles of it, I feel like a new woman. I most heartily recommend this medicine to all women who suffer with female troubles. I have also taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and think they are fine."—Mrs. Frank Emsley, Lindsay, Ontario.

We cannot understand why women will take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, without first trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration.

FOR SKIN DISEASE

A Treatment That Costs Nothing Unless It Provides Satisfactory Relief.

We have a grayish-white ointment with a pleasant odor that is clean to use, which we believe is the best known remedy for the relief of skin diseases. It is especially efficacious for overcoming eczema in all its various forms, ring worm, acne, pimples blotches, insect bites, tetter, certain forms of ulcers sores and wounds. It is strongly antiseptic, cleansing soothing, and healing. It stops all itching and burning caused by skin eruptions.

We are so positive this ointment is unequaled that we offer it with the distinct understanding that if after having given it a reasonable trial, you are not satisfied with the results, you have only got to tell us and we will, without quibbling, return every cent paid us for it. We exact no promises or obligations whatever

We want you to try Rexall Eczema Ointment. The first application gives a refreshing sense of relief, and because of its germ-destroying power it eradicates the germ or parasite which causes eczema and many other eruptions. It quickly allays the inflammation, gives protection to the inflamed surfaces, and helps restore healthy tissue. It is particularly active in relieving skin ailments peculiar to children. You certainly cannot lose anything by trying it. We would not dare make this offer except we are positive Rexall Eczema Ointment will satisfactorily benefit you. Two sizes, 50c. and $1.00. Remember you can obtain it only at our store—The Rexall Store. J. S McKeown.

FROM A SOUTH WINDOW

"Love, Laughter and Life"

IS LOVE BLIND TO DISCOMFORTS?

I am frequently asked, by young girls especially, Should a girl marry for love only, or should she marry for money only?

My advice is: Marry for both if you can!

Of course this is not always possible, but, on the contrary, is very often impossible.

Generally speaking, the safest plan is to marry for love rather than for money, but even to this there are certain limitations.

The good, commonsense, Canadian girl will put love first, but she will be wise enough to be assured that the man she weds can provide for her.

And, as I have said, there are limitations even to this.

For instance, a girl might be willing to throw in her lot with a young man who can provide to a limited extent, yet she might have to sacrifice so much that she would early regret the giving up of single blessedness.

Again, the young man might be able to provide so well that she could have all the money she might reasonably desire, yet he might impose conditions that would make even a true love match a sorry undertaking.

I think, for example, that a girl makes a mistake who for her love of a man, goes with him to a new country where she knows no one, and where she will, of necessity, meet hardships hitherto unfelt.

Some girls' temperament is such that it would not worry them to go into the solitudes of Canada's wonderful West and help an ambitious husband in the pioneer work of building a home for the future.

But there are others to whom life on the prairie would be a sacrifice of too great consequence. Their natures would not permit of such a life without the birth of regrets. And regret is the first step to marital unhappiness.

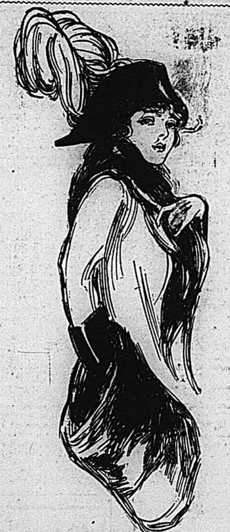
Some will answer the question, "Will I marry for love or for money?" by saying: "It all depends upon the man."

My own impression, as a Canadian woman, is that it all depends upon the girl.

So if you are one of the correspondents who seek advice "From a South Window," stop studying the man and start studying yourself.

A little introspection will help wonderfully, for love may be blind to the faults of the loved, but it is never blind to the shortcomings of those who love nor to their own capacity for sacrifice.

And the Canadian girl who knows herself may be relied upon to use good judgment.



HANDSOME LYNX FUR SET

Lynx is one of the best liked skins for muff and scarf sets, and the above sketch shows a fashionable model in black lynx. The shape of the scarf is most attractive, and the muff, though large, is not of exaggerated style.

The hat worn with this fur set is of decided Parisian tone in shape. It is black velvet and the crown is encircled with a band of lynx. A white willow pume stands upright at back.

COVERS FOR PINCUSHIONS

These That Can be Taken Off and Washed Easily

Housekeepers are always in need of pretty covers for pincushions. The most serviceable cover is one which can be taken off and washed easily. The best material from which to make these is fine lawn finished with a dainty frill of the same. Baby ribbon can be used, if desired, run through eyelet-holes, which should be made of a size corresponding to the width of the ribbon; a half-inch or inch ribbon takes a long oblong eyelet, and baby ribbon can also be used in a large circular one. Bunch bows of the ribbon which should match in color the silk of the cushion beneath the lawn, unless lawn is preferred, gives a pretty finish at the corners.

Pincushions about five inches square, covered with a fine pique cover, scalloped at the edges with a large monogram in satin, stitched in the centre of the top, are hard-wearing and distinctly smart.

WHAT MAKES A GOOD HOSTESS

The good hostess is she who likes entertaining—people generally do the things they like well. She likes having people—that is the great secret. She makes everyone feel that they have given her pleasure by coming to her home, therefore she possesses the first great essential—geniality. There is no don't-care-whether-you-come-or-not sort of style.

The good hostess never fusses, although she has a quick eye to see when people have had enough of one another. She monopolizes no one, but she finds an opportunity of giving a little of her own time to each guest.

She makes it her business to see that her guests have a good time, and she leaves nothing to chance.

Finally she feeds her guests; no one comes home "just starving." The procedure is quite simple really. The good hostess just remembers that the party is for the guests. She takes no pains to amuse herself, and, consequently, can give all her time and attention to them.

BUILDING A GREAT $20,000,000 DAM

KEOKUK, Iowa, Jan. 25.—A date has been set for the completion of the mile wide $20,000,000 dam in the Mississippi River, which is now in construction at this point. It is July 1, 1913.

Hugh L. Cooper, the engineer in charge, entertained delegations from the leading river towns in the vicinity and and stated that thirty months of work carried on as actively as it is now will see the Des Moines Rapids harnessed and 100,000 horse power developed. The total development is to be between 200,000 and 250,000 horse power, of which 60,000 has already been contracted for delivery to St. Louis, 200 miles distant. Mr. Cooper states that Keokuk and vicinity are to have the first call on the balance of the power, he turning down a contract this week for 25,000 additional horse power to be delivered to St. Louis.

The books of the Keokuk and Hamilton Water Power Company show that 750 men are now employed in building the big dam, the first to extend entirely across the Mississippi River, and for which it was necessary to secure a franchise from Congress before work could be started. By July 1, two thousand men will be at work. Throughout the entire winter gangs of men will be at work both on the Illinois shore and on the Iowa shore.

Concrete for the abutments of the dam is already being laid. The stone quarry on the Illinois shore was opened up last summer, and rock is being taken out rapidly for the commencement of the dam near the town of Hamilton. Not until last week were any great number of men put to work on the Iowa side, where the power house is to be located.

Five hundred are now at work on this side, however, the first task consisting in building three miles of side track on which to transport the innumerable tons of building material required, and constructing a temporary bridge across the canal, which was built by the United States forty years ago at a total cost of $8,000,000, and which is to be completely drowned out when the dam impounds the waters of the river.

The river from Keokuk north will be changed from a mile wide meandering stream into a lake from three to five miles in width and about forty or fifty miles in length. Thousands upon thousands of acres of lowlands along both the Iowa and Illinois shores will be submerged, but the water power company has been securing options on this property and buyng tracts quietly for the last two or three years, until today it is stated that it has provided (either by outright purchase or by option) for 99 per cent. of the property which will be inundated.

PRIEST GOT A THIEF BY RUSE

PEORIA, Ill., Jan. 24.—A burglar alarm recently installed in the contribution box of St. Joseph's church, by Father Herman Grove, caused the arrest of Roy Burns, who had successfully opened the box and taken $8.85.

When the automatic attachment told the police headquarters of an attempted robbery, Policeman Archdale responded, pressing a horse into service to save time. He caught Burns with the money. A broken knife was in the man's pocket and the remainder of the blade was found in the contribution box.

ACT OF COURTESY PAID HIM WELL

Hammond, Ind., Jan. 25.—Four years ago Frank L. Bunnell, a passenger conductor on the New York, Chicago and St. Louis railway, bowed politely as he handed Mrs. Jennie L. Schofield, a rich widow, her ticket after punching it. Later they became warm friends.

Mrs. Schofield died in 1908 and bequeathed Bunnell her entire estate of $100,000, ignoring Edward Howard, her brother, of Indianapolis, and William Howard, her nephew, of Kenosha, Wis.

The Howards sought to break the will in the court of common pleas at Norwalk, O., Mrs. Schofield's home. Bunnell, who lives here, won the case. The Howards then appealed to a higher court, alleging that Mrs. Schofield was of unsound mind. Today the decision of the lower court was affirmed.

The winter of a man's discontent arrives when he bebgins to realize that it is more blessed to give than to receive the resulting bills.

ICE CLOSED OVER BODIES OF VICTIMS

HALIFAX, Jan. 25.—Since Sunday nearly every able-bodied man at Tangier, fifty miles east of Halifax, has been engaged in a search, night and day, for two brothers-in-law, Bain Mason and Freeman Beaver, fishermen of Tangier. They went out shooting for birds on Saturday morning, intending to return at noon. No trace could be found of them till to-day Their boat was found on the shore and the whole countryside was searched. The idea was they were lost in the woods. At last attention was attracted to the tracks made by Mason's do on the ice, which seemed to circle around one spot. There was no break in the ice, but the searchers at last made a hole in the centre of the tracks and dragged the bottom. There, they found at the bottom of the water the bodies of the two men. They had fallen through unobserved, a cold snap came, and ice formed again, hiding all traces of the tragedy. Mason was twenty-three years old and married to Beaver's sister. He had two children. Beaver was sixteen years old.

HALIFAX, Jan. 25.—The two sons of Captain Lambert Jones Middle Lahave, were drowned while skating on the Lahave River last evening. The boys were twelve and sixteen years of age.

WRONG LINIMENT COST DRUGGIST $150

Montreal, Jan. 25.—Substitution of a patent medicine in a drug store resulted in damages granted by the Superior Court to the amount of $150 Mr. L. Guay was suffering from rheumatism and sent his young son to a neighboring drug store to buy a bottle of a certain oil. The clerk, instead of giving the article that was demanded, thought it was a good occasion for pushing a brand of liniment manufactured by his employer, which the child took, and which the sick man used. As a consequence his arm swelled to an alarming extent. Expert medical evidence proved that the great percentage ammonia in the liniment was responsible for the swelling, and judgment was rendered accordingly, for $150 and costs.

KISS COST $200 IF FORCIBLY TAKEN

MONTREAL, Jan. 25.—Two hundred dollars for a kiss was the claim upheld by Mr. Justice Archer, in the Superior Court, this morning, in the case of Pilon vs. Bourdon.

The judge did not establish the real value of a kiss, but after the evidence concluded that the man who uses force to steal a kiss from a woman and then boasts publicly that the woman kissed him, is injuring the reputation of the woman and the felings of her husband.

The complaint of Mr. O. Pilon against Mr. R. Bourdon was that on three different instances, Mr. Bourdon kissed Mrs. Pilon in spite of her resistance and then told that Mrs. Polon was always looking for kisses.

BELLEVILLE CLUB OF CHICAGO'S BANQUET

Splendid Success Attends First Annual Dinner—Fair Daughters and Loyal Sons of Belleville Gather Around the Festal Board

Tuesday, Jan. 24, 1911, was a big night for the Belleville Club of Chicago. The first annual dinner of the Club was held at the Great Northern Hotel in that city and from every point of view was the most successful affair yet held by the Club. About sixty club members, their ladies, and invited guests sat down to a very sumptuous dinner at the hotel, where the Club makes its headquarters, one of the largest houses of the city, and after doing ample justice to the good things set before them, listened to a programme or songs, music and speeches that would be a credit to any organization, of any size, anywhere.

The invited guests and principal speakers were Dr. Thos. O'Hagan, editor of the New World of Chicago, a man whose friends in Belleville are numbered by the hundreds; Hon. Thos. J. Douglass, president International Stratford Old Boys' Association and Hon. K. W. Pattison, president of the British Empire Association of Illinois. In addition to these gentlemen there were present Mr. George Murphy, of Montreal; Mr. John McKien, editor Insurance Record, and Mr. F. W. A. Hanson, of Chicago.

Just as the dinner commenced, a messenger brought to Mr. Robertson, President of the Club, a telegram from Messrs. D. V. Sinclair and Col. W. N. Ponton, President and Secretary, respectively, of the Old Boys' Reunion Committee. The telegram contained a regular Bay of Quinte good fellowship vibration, and upon it being read, shouts went up from the throat of every one present. It was the little touch of Salada that gave the necessary flavor to the evening's feast.

After the dinner came a fine programme. Mr. Walter Snyder, one of Chicago's great baritones, sang in splendid manner "The Deathless Army," a song illustrative of the continuity even in death of the glorious men of war of the mother land.

The toast, "The President and the King" was drunk, followed by the singing of the new International Anthem. After some congregational singing, by the entire company, the toast list was continued as follows:

"Belleville, Beautiful City of the Bay."—Mr. A. D. Elton Peterson, stepping into a breach left by the unavoidable absence of the gentleman billed to respond, took up the task loyally and nobly, and acquitted himself in a manner pleasing to the audience and redounding to the glory of his subject.

"Our Sister Cities of Ontario."—Mr. Thos. J. Douglass, of Stratford, and Mr. Wm. K. Pattison, of St. Catharines, both spoke in glowing terms of the cities of their birth and the Province of Ontario, painting in pleasing colors beautiful pictures of their home towns and the influences each have had on their citizens, and the benefits their citizens have bestowed on each of them. They were two fine speeches, particularly that of Mr. Pattison.

"The Land We Left—Fair Canada," brought Dr. O'Hagan to his feet, and, after the applause had subsided, the company was treated to an address which will live long in the memory of each one present. Every art of the orator, every grace of the scholar, every note of the songster was displayed during the Doctor's elegant and eloquent oration. The Canadian who could sit through Dr. O'Hagan's address without feeling his pulse quicken, his breath come faster, his chest swell with commendable pride as the speaker recounted the beauties of our native land, the glories of our nation, and the magnificent achievements of fellow Canadians throughout the world, would be a poor "Canuck" indeed. There were none such present. At each period in this really fine effort the audience punctured the air with resounding applause, and when after carrying his hearers to the dizzy heights of enthusiasm by his eulogies of the citizens of Canada, present and former, he closed with a graceful reference to the broad prairies and the snow-capped mountains of the west, the fertile and overflowing gardens of the centre and the east, the strength and loyalty of the men, the beauty, the grace, sweetness and purity of the women, the unceasing and incessant devotion of the mothers and the beautiful camaraderie of the homes of Canada; the audience broke out into an ovation which lasted for a considerable time. It was a grand occasion for the doctor, and right proudly did he rise to it.

"Chicago, Our Adopted Home."—This toast brought forward Treasurer James and A. D. Diamond, of the Club; both of whom responded in an able manner to this expansive subject. They told of the way in which Belleville boys, coming to Chicago, had taken hold and made good, and of the opportunities the city afforded, and in closing each paid stirring tribute to the loyalty of the Bay of Quinte boys, one for the other and all for each.

"The Belleville Club of Chicago." President Robertson told of the formation of the Club and of its work and achievements during the past year. He had paid many compliments to the men through whose efforts the club had been founded, and to the ones whose constant loyalty, during the life of the organization, had made it possible to reach its present state of solidity. In his closing, he again reminded the members that the Club has in view the 'Great Object," namely: A downtown home of its own, and urged his hearers to work to that end. Mr. M. D. Lynch carried out to a further conclusion the idea involved in the formation of the Club. He suggested the beneficial results to be derived from a chain of Belleville Clubs throughout the country, pointing out how co-operation between such an auxiliary, and the Board of Trade and the Chamber of Commerce of Belleville, would be of infinite value to the home town. He urged the kindly and friendly offices of the ladies of the Club, to the end that the men might be made attend the meetings promptly and closed with a word painting of the status of the Club a few years hence, when all these idea had been worked out and the things predicted had come to pass.

"The Ladies" was graciously responded to by Mr. Miles Wilkinson, Vice President of the Club. He referred to the youth and charm of the women of the Belleville Club, telling how he had met here, many of the ladies he had known as girls at home and how he could not, for the life of him, see, that they had changed a particle from the way they looked when they were going to school back in Belleville. He blushingly, but manfully, attributed his own success to the gentle lady who makes his home a palace, and his life one long, sweet happy song, and sat down amidst a flutter of handkerchiefs from the ladies and a burst of huzzas from the men, both married, and bachelors present. After cheers for the Club, the Ladies, the Guests, Themselves, Belleville, Canada, the Bay of Quinte the River Moira, Massassaga Point, Mill Island, the Buttermilk Flats, the Buttermilk Falls, the Lower Bridge, the Upper Bridge, the Grand Junction Dock, the Light House, and Zwick's Island, the entire assemblage arose and joined in singing "Auld Lang Syne," and so passed into history a night that will live forever in the minds of all present. It was sure a great night for Belleville and for the Belleville Club of Chicago.

NOTES.

The congregational singing put lots of ginger into the assemblage and set enthusiasm at a high pitch.

Mr. Walter Snyder, the soloist and choir master did first-class work with the material at hand. One guest said he did not see where Grand Opera had anything on that bunch when it came to chorus work.

"Has Anybody Here Seen Muskie" "Rings on My Fingers," "It Looks Like a Big Night To-night," and "Meet Me To-night in Dreamland," were the favorites with the guests. They encored themselves in each of these selections and graciously responded.

Every newspaper in Chicago published advance notices of the dinner, and nearly all the morning papers as well as the Chicago Press Association, sent representatives to the Banquet Hall. Good advertising for Belleville

It is certainly a caution the way those Belleville Club Boys are coming to the front as speechers. We will soon be in shape to spring a "Mock Parliament."

The secretary, Thos. F. Lynch, was toastmaster, and performed his duties in an able and pleasing manner, although the choir leader did accuse him of getting off the key while trying to lead the singing of "The Maple Leaf."

The Dinner itself as a gustatory item would delight a company of epicures. It was well prepared, well served, and well taken care of—what more could be asked

CURRENT COMMENTS.

The general manager of the Dominion Bank is swimming with the tide in advocating Government inspection of Canada's banking institutions.

What a capacity thirst those Printing Bureau fellows at Ottawa, for whom 15000 corkscrews were purchased, must have.

In nothing is this world progressing more steadily than in increasing the rapidity of transportation. Thirty years ago the journey could only be made in eighty days under the most favorable circumstances. Now it can be made in less than half that time, namely thirty-seven days.

According to a report of the Post Office Department to-day, Canadians during the past year sent to Great Britain and its possessions and other European countries 750,000 money orders, representing upwards of $13 000,000, or an increase of 35 per cent over the previous year. All this money passes through the department at Ottawa. Money to the United States and South America goes direct from the sender to the receiver, so no official record of the amount is kept at Ottawa. The money sent across the ocean is principally to relatives of immigrants.

The Province of Ontario is making progress in the right direction in dealing with criminals, remarks the Montreal Witness. Their headquarters are not to be in a bastile or a bridewell, but, upon a farm in the midst of nature, affording scope for useful work, and the men are to be employed largely at quarrying and public works. These can be so managed that there will be little incentive to run away and there will be every chance to recover bodily and moral health and manhood. We are only at the beginning of the change for the better that must follow the adoption of the new principle, that the object of public discipline is not to make offenders suffer, but to make them good citizens.

DIED AT TORONTO

Mrs. Susan Gordon Hamilton Willson, relict of the late Dr. Benjamin Willson, died yesterday at Toronto. The deceased lady who was for many years a resident of this city was highly esteemed by a wide circle of friends who will regret to learn of her demise. Interment will take place here as per announcement in another column.

GRIFFINS OPERA HOUSE.

Malone and Jacobs' Happy Youngsters Co. presented a new musical comedy act last night at Griffin's Opera House, the theatre was packed to the doors, in fact standing room was at a premium. The new act, "The Bogus Counts" was a distinct success judging from the laughter and applause.

That the Happy Youngsters are a versitile company of artists is proven by the manner in which they handled their respective roles.

New specialties were introduced by James Malone and Bert Bertrand which were well received. All new pictures and illustrated songs are also being shown, making a show worth five times the admission charged.

FIREMEN HAD A STUBBORN FIGHT

Fire in Graham's Cold Storage Occupied Them for Five Hours—Flames Confined to the Building In Which They Originated—Difficulties Were Very Great—Front St. Building Saved—Much Stock Destroyed—Estimated Loss and Insurance

The fire brigade last night had a stubborn fight, but were finally masters of the situation. At a few minutes before 8 o'clock a blaze broke out in Mr. R. J. Graham's cold storage building, which is in the rear of and adjoining his fine stone and brick block on Front street. Although the brigade were on duty for over 5 hours, by judicious work they were able to confine the flames to that portion of the extensive premises where they broke out. The building is rather peculiarly constructed as between the tin roof and rafters it is filled in with sawdust and shavings and the sides of the building are similarly filled. The fire worked its way very readily amongst this inflammable material and would appear to be in different parts of the building. The brigade, however, soon had several streams at work, both in the front and rear of the premises, and were adequately prepared for any emergency which might arise. At about 1.30 this morning the fire was out.

Whilst an inspection of the building did not reveal any great harm actually done by fire, the damage done was of considerable amount. The greater portion of the large metal roof had to be torn up, which was by no means an easy task and tons of water were poured into the premises.

At one time the Front St. office was virtually flooded with water, the damage done by water to dried apples, potatoes, etc. of which there was a large stock stored in the cold storage building will be considerable, and much damage by water was also done to other parts of the premises. In rear of the cold storage building is situated the evaporator belonging to Mr. Graham. Fire fortunately did not reach this building, nor did it extend to the Front St. block.

Mr. M. Sprague, cheese exporter, had an office in the Front St. premises. His loss was of a trifling nature.

A representative of the Intelligencer this morning viewed the premises and had a conversation with Mayor Ackerman, who is manager of the concern. In answer to a question as to the loss sustained, he was unable to make an estimate, but stated that it would be heavy. The loss by fire and water and damage to building will probably amount to upwards of $5,000. This is covered by insurance.

The fire is thought to have originated from a small stove which was used in a compartment of the cold storage.

The fire was one of the most stubborn the brigade have had to contend with for some time and they certainly desire credit for the manner in which it was handled, thus preventing it from spreading to buildings adjoining.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF FORESTERS HAD A PUBLIC INSTALLATION

Several of the Dignitaries of the Order Took Part—Names of the Officers Who Were Installed—Grand Concert Followed the Installation—A Pleasing Programme and Able Speeches

Court Moira, No. 33, of the Independent Order of Foresters, gave a grand concert to the members and their friends last evening in Alberta Hall. Prior to the concert the members assembled in their hall, where Bro. Geo. L. Dickinson, of Manotick, High Secretary of eastern Ontario, assisted by Bro. G. M. Farrington, of Picton, High Vice Chief Ranger, and Bro. R. Mathison, Secretary, and Dr. C. Day Clarke, of Toronto, installed the following officers for the ensuing year:

Chief Ranger—Bro. C. L. Walters.
P. C. R.—Bro. B. Mallory.
V. C. R.—Bro. M. W. Mott.
Physicians—Bros. Drs. Farley, McColl and Mather.
Rec. Sec.—Bro. A. R. Walker.
Fin. Sec.—Bro. J. W. London
Treas.—Bro. Col. Lazier.
Orator—Bro. J. Birse.
S. W.—Bro. R. S. Beckett.
J. W.—Bro. F. S. Anderson
S. B.—Bro. Thos. Hill.
J. B.—Bro. F. Y. Brenton.
Finance Com—Bros. W. J. Campbell, F. W. Brenton.
Trustees—Bros. Wm. Johnson, Arthur McGinnis.

After the installation the brethren adjourned to the concert hall, where a large audience had assembled, and the programme was proceeded with under the direction of Bro. A. R. Walker, the chairman of the evening, who called to the platform Bros Mathison, Clarke, Dickinson and Farrington.

The entertainers of the evening were Miss Frances Wright and Will J. White, of Toronto, both of whom more than upheld their deservedly high reputation as entertainers.

Bro. Dickinson, in his remarks, congratulated the court on the success which was attending their labors and thanked them for inviting him to instal their officers.

Bro. C. Day Clarke, of Toronto, in a forceful eloquent address, told the audience what the Order was and what it was doing, not only as an insurance society, but as a fraternal organization, telling them that the Orphans' Home fund was already caring for 150 children of deceased Foresters. He also, in a most affecting manner, described the work being done in fighting the white plague at the Consumption Sanitarium in the Adirondacks, which is absolutely free to Foresters.

A very welcome visitor was our old friend, Bro. R. Mathison, now Supreme Secretary of the Order, who told of the financial work and resources of the Order and then proceeded to give a practical illustration of the old age benefit of the Order by presenting Bro. J. W. London, who was 70 years old last Saturday, with the first of his annual old age benefit cheques, $200, being 10 per cent. of his policy.

Bro. G. M. Farrington, of Picton High Vice Chief Ranger, congratulated the court on the success of their entertainment and told of the work being done in Prince Edward.

The singing of the National Anthem brought a most successful meeting to its close.

THE BELLEVILLE BAR COMMENDED

(From Canadian Law Times, January, 1911.)

After giving the detailed account of the banquet which appeared in the Intelligencer, the Canadian Law Times adds:

"The Law Association of the County of Hastings is one of the most energetic in Ontario. At the assizes and non-jury sittings of the High Court it entertains the Judges and outside members of the Bar at informal banquets, when delightful social evenings are spent. The other county law associations will do excellent work in adopting what has been so splendidly carried out at Belleville. Reunions of the members of local Bars are worthy of every encouragement. If a few enterprising members will take hold of the work in each of the county towns, similar gatherings can easily be carried through to a successful conclusion, thereby promoting and encouraging that cordiality and good comradeship which should ever exist between Bench and Bar, and among lawyers."

A Word of Warning!

You've seen the imitation fires on the theatre stage, made of red paper and an electric bulb? What good would they be to warm your house? Take a lesson for the hour of sickness. Imitations of Zam-Buk and substitutes may give the dealer a little more profit, but they won't cure your skin disease, or stop the pain of your burn, or ease the agony of piles, or cure the rash on your baby. Don't be misled by the plausible "This preparation is just as good as Zam-Buk and is cheaper." It isn't "just as good." Get the real Zam-Buk. See the legally protected name on the package.

A Friend Disapproves

The Toronto Globe's leading editorial in its issue of the 24th inst. gives evidence of its dissatisfaction with the position which the Government is taking in reference to canal extensions and canal improvements. Under the heading of "The Welland must come first," The Globe says:

"A despatch from Ottawa, which, however, has not been officially confirmed, indicates that work is to be begun on a small scale during the present year on the Georgian Bay Canal. The people of Ontario will be KEENLY DISAPPOINTED if THIS MEANS THE SIDE-TRACKING OF THE ENLARGEMENT OF THE WELLAND CANAL. There is no hostility among the population on the shores of Lakes Ontario, Erie and Huron—constituting probably half the total population of the Province—to the building of the Georgian Bay Canal for through traffic from the West to the seaboard. But there will be the strongest possible OBJECTION to any action that may have the effect of STRANGLING the existing route for the benefit of a new canal that at the best cannot be completed for ten or fifteen years. There MUST be a waterway of from TWENTY-TWO to TWENTY-FIVE feet in depth from the harbor of Montreal to Fort William by way of the great lakes as well as by way of the Ottawa and French Rivers. Apart altogether from the question of export grain, the internal water-borne commerce of the country is increasing so rapidly as to warrant the Government, which freely spends tens of millions in improving railway facilities, to spend also the money required for a deep waterway to connect the fresh-water seas of the continent with the ocean."

There are few people in Ontario or Quebec who will not approve of the position taken by The Globe upon this question. The enlargement of the Welland Canal should be of such a character as to admit of the passing of vessels that can take on a cargo at Fort William and discharge at Liverpool or at any other port in Great Britain. Let us have no half and half job in this connection.

The Toronto News

The News, now one of the best and most influential dailies in the Dominion, will permit The Intelligencer to congratulate it upon its success, as an evidence of which it has found it necessary to remove into larger and more commodious premises in order to find room for its new machinery.

Here is a description of its new Hoe double, quadruple, octuple press, which has a total length of 60 feet over all, and is fitted with all the latest improvements known in the printing world, including the new lightning folder device. It has a guaranteed capacity of printing per hour 144,000—4, 6 or 8 pages; 72,000—10, 12, 14 or 16 pages; 36,000—20, 24, 28 or 32 pages; and will be driven by two 50-horse-power motors. The electrical control is so designed that the machine can be stopped or started by merely pushing a button.

Go on and prosper. The News has The Intelligencer's best wishes for its further success.

Bank Deposits

In the third annual statistical review and outlook number of The Monetary Times, Canadian and English bank deposits are compared. "In connection with deposits," says a special article, "a London authority has made an interesting comparison. Taking the total deposits in the Canadian banks at the end of June, 1910, which were $797,849,593, or roughly £156,200,000, he compares that sum with the published results in the home country. On December 31st last the aggregate deposits of the English banks, including £50,000,000 private deposits of the Bank of England, amounted to £735,250,000. That is, the English banks show deposits only 4.7 times as much as the Canadian. Taking the English population, on the census of 1901, at 32,500,000, and the Canadian population, on the census made the same year, at 5,400,000, the deposits at the English banks ought to be six times as much as at the Canadian in order to indicate an equal level of prosperity. Since 1901 the Canadian population has, presumably, increased at a much more rapid rate than the English; current estimates that have appeared lately in the press of this country point to a population of seven millions or more for the next census in 1911.

"But, even taking the Canadian population at that figure, and assuming the population of England and Wales to have advanced to no more than 33,000,000, it will be found, on examination, the latter figure is exactly 4.7 times 7,000,000, which, again, corresponds exactly with the fact that the English bank deposits half a year ago were just 4.7 times as large as the Canadian bank deposits are at the present moment. That is to say, Canada is now—we may well abstract from the six month's difference in point of time—exactly on the same level of prosperity, applying the test of bank deposits, as the most wealthy nation of the world."

Five thousand orange farmers in California do their own packing, shipping and selling. They grade and select their crop into "firsts," "seconds," etc. The firsts are fancy, tree-ripened, hand-picked, seedless, fibreless, thin-skinned oranges—every individual orange a perfect specimen of the finest variety of oranges. They are not only more healthful and more palatable than other oranges, but they are actually cheaper, for they are nearly all meat and nourishment.

WILSONS INVALIDS' PORT

Most tonic wines are wholly dependent on the alcohol they contain for their stimulating qualities.

Not so with Wilson's Invalids' Port, which contains only the natural juice of the grape—Its tonic action is cumulative, that is, it continues to exert its effect in a gradually increasing degree until the whole system is strengthened and invigorated.

The appetite improves, the digestive functions acquire a healthy activity and both mental and physical exertion can be borne without abnormal fatigue or exhaustion.

Dr. WALTER H. MOORHOUSE, says:
Dean, Medical Faculty, Western University, London: "It is a most important thing that the physician can confidently recommend a certain brand as one in which he has confidence, and which possesses in so eminent a degree, as your "Wilson's Invalids' Port" does, all the bracing tonic effects of good sound wine, along with the extract of Cinchona Bark, which is one of our very best tonics."

COUNTY COUNCIL HAD A VERY BUSY SESSION

Standing Committees Appointed—Grants Made to Roads, Bridges and Schools—Accounts Passed and Other Financial Business Transacted—Road Superintendent's Salary Increased—Interesting Discussion

Thursday, Jan. 26.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Council resumed at 2 o'clock, Warden Dryden in the chair.

REPORTS.

A report was presented from the special committee appointed to draft the standing commttees of the council for the ensuing year, the committee recommeded that the personnel of the committees be as follows:

House of Refuge—H. Kells, P. McLaren and J. Dryden.

Finance and Public Property—T. Thompson, Wm. H. Hubble, A. S. White, T. Montgomery and James Dryden.

Special Bridge Committee—J. R. Cook, N. Vermilyea, C. Ketcheson, A. Kirk and D. Hnnley.

WAYS AND MEANS.

On motion the council went into committee as the whole on Ways and Means. Mr. Tummon in the chair.

A motion prevailed that a grant of $90 be given for the poor school sections of Elzevir Township.

An account of $15 presented by Miss Palen for services rendered in connection with removal of papers from Mr. J. Williams old office to his new office in the new addition to the court house was discussed.

A motion prevailed that $9 be paid in full of the account.

The motion of Mr. Clarke that $100 be given annually to the Road Superintendent for extra services he has to perform, namely: making out reports for the government, and going to Toronto in the county interest was discussed at some length.

It was explained by Messrs. Mather, Vermilyea, Ketcheson and Clarke that this was not in one sense an addition of $100 to the superintendent's salary. Last year the superintendent had to pay out $50 to the county treasurer for making out certain reports and also visiting Toronto.

A grant of $25 was made to the Farmers' Institutes of West, East and North Hastings and $10 to each of the Women's Institutes.

Dr. Clinton's request for an increase of salary as physician of the House of Refuge was brought up.

Mr. Vermilyea moved, second by Mr. Sills, that no action be taken in this matter.

Mr. Ketcheson moved, seconded by Mr. Mather, in amendment that the salary be increased from $250 per annum to $300 per annum.

Mr. Mather spoke strongly in support of the amendment, contending that the doctor had rendered valuable services for the county. The doctor had been most faithful in the discharge of his duties towards the indigents of the county. The salary of $300 was by no means too much for Dr. Clinton per annum for his services rendered.

Messrs. Newton and Ketcheson spoke in support of the motion, upon a vote being taken the amendment was defeated.

A communication was read from Mrs. T. E. Wilson, matron of the House of Refuge for an increase of salary.

Mr. Vermilyea said that Mrs. Wilson and it should not be increased now, and it should not be increased this year. He had nothing but admiration for the services rendered to the inmates of the House of Refuge by Mrs. Wilson. He moved that no action be taken in this matter, which was carried after a brief discussion.

Mr. Douglas moved, seconded by Mr. Moore that a grant of $800 be made to the school sections of Elzevir and Madoc Townships and a special grant of $20 to ten poor school sections in the northern part of the county—carried.

Mr. Mackintosh, School Inspector for Centre Hastings, presented a report which showed that in 1910 he expended $14 more for travelling and office supplies than was allowed by the county.

A motion prevailed that $14 be refunded to Mr. Mackintosh.

Mr. J. Ross Robertson wrote the council for a grant to the Sick Childrens' Hospital.

A motion was carried that that no grant be given to this institution or to the Salvation Army Territorial Association, which also asked for a grant.

A communication was read from the Ontario Municipal Association asking the council for a membership fee of $10 and also send delegates to the annual meeting in September next.

Messrs. Ketcheson, Vermilyea, Mather and Hanley spoke of the good of the Association, but could not see their way clear to send a delegate. No action was taken in reference to a grant or sending a delegate.

HOYLE BRIDGE BILL.

A communication was read from the Good Roads Association asking for a grant of $10 and also that the county send delegates.

Mr. R. Cook gave a brief, verbal report of his anttendance at the Good Roads Association Convention held in Toronto last year. The speaker referred to the Hoyle Bridge Bill, which would be introduced in the legislature now in session. That bill proposes that all bridges of 50 feet in length, including the approaches, be made county bridges. This bill, if passed, would mean much more expenditure for the county of Hastings. He (the speaker) would favor a strong resolution being passed by the council against this bill, being placed in the hands of the members of legislature in this county.

Mr. Mather said it would be detrimental to the best interests of this county if the Hoyle Bill became law.

CITY AND COUNTY.

Mr. Vermilyea said that in some counties the Hoyle Bill would not be objectionable, but in counties like Hastings, Lennox, Addington and Renfrew it would prove burdensome. It was to his mind an abominable bill and should be defeated. In speaking of the committee which might be appointed, he asked that the committee might also fight for the county's interest against the city of Belleville, endeavoring to annex to the city that portion of land purchased by the G. T. R. and upon which a round house and shops have been erected. As a result of these buildings being erected the assessment of Thurlow Township would next year be increased from $1,500.00 to $2,000.00.

Mr. Mather spoke strongly in support of the county doing all in its power to retain what it had.

A grant of $10 was made to the Good Roads Association.

Mr. Sandy Grant moved, seconded by Mr. Kells, that a special grant of $400 be made to the Tweed Public School, owing to the fact that continuation work is carried on in the school.

After some discussion the motion was laid over for further consideration.

The committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again—granted.

OTHER BUSINESS.

Mr. Mather moved, seconded by Mr. Moore, that the chairman of the House of Refuge ascertain what salaries are paid to physicians in the various Houses of refuge in the county and report to the special meeting of the council to be held in April—carried.

Mr. C. W. Thompson, one of the County Auditors presented the auditors' report for 1910 which was laid upon the table. The auditors also asked for an increase in salary.

Council adjournel until 10 o'clock Friday morning.

BOXING.

London, Jan. 25.—Harry Lewis, the American, who won the welterweight championship of England a year ago from Young Joseph, to-night knocked out Johnny Summers, the English aspirant for the title in four rounds.

A big crowd witnessed the go, filling every seat in the Olympia. It was a savage fight, while it lasted and honors were about even for the first two rounds. The men insisted upon clinching at every possible chance, and the referee was frequently compelled to step in and separate them by main strength.

The third round was the hottest of the fight, both men trying desperately for a knockout. It ended in a clinch. In the fourth Lewis rushed Summers to the ropes and knocked him out with a straight right. After Summers had taken the count Lewis picked him up and carried him to his corner amid great cheering.

The men were matched at 144 pounds, but when they weighed in at 3 o'clock it was found that the American tipped the scale at 148 1-2 and Summers weighed 140 3-4. As a result of this overweight Lewis paid a forfeit of $500.

A FIGHT THROWN IN.

PICTON, Jan. 25.—Despite the fact that Picton pros. trimmed Belleville in the Eastern Pro. League series to-night to the tune of 7 to 1. The game was not the one sweet harmony the score would indicate. The play was exceedingly fast. It was inclined to be rough, with a free-for-all sandwiched in in the last period. However, Kyle as referee, was strict and kept down the dirty play. In the first period the two teams kept pretty evenly matched and ended 1 to 0 in Picton's favor. The second twenty minutes was decidedly faster. Picton came back with greater force and scored two more goals. The four goals in the third period were a little easier, but were not won without a stiff fight. Belleville scored the second goal in the third period. There was a good attendance. The line-up:

Referee—Andy Kyle.

The Children's Hair

A Little Extra Care Now May Save After Years of Regret

Children play so hard that the head perspires and the hair has a tendency to mat and get sticky on the scalp. Soap and water doesn't seem to remove it, but the hair must breathe to be healthy. Just try Nyal's Hirsutone. Rub it into the roots of the hair with the balls of the fingers. The children like it and will ask you to use it. Hirsutone loosens up the accumulated dust and perspiration and the hair and scalp can then be easily and thoroughly cleaned. After it is dried give another application of Hirsutone. After you have used it for a while you will admit it is the best you have ever used. Your Nyal Drug Store will cheerfully guarantee Hirsutone to do all that is claimed for it.

G. T. R. TO PAY STRIKE TROOPS

CORUNNA, Mich., Jan. 24.—The board of supervisors of Shiawassee county has decided, on the recommendation of the committee which has been in charge of the matter, to present a bill for $5,700 to the Grand Trunk railroad in payment to the state for the expense of calling out several companies of the stae militia during the Grand Trunk strike at Durand last fall.

The announcement coming on top of the fact that State Senator Rosenkrans is preparing a bill to introduce in the legislature calling on the state to pay the expenses of the troops has caused considerable surprise in this county, but it is said that this procedure was agreed on after an official of the Grand Trunk, in conference with the committee, had promised that the bill would be paid by the railroad company.

The grounds on which it will be paid are that the troops were called out for the purpose of protecting the property of the railroad rather than the life or property of Shiawassee county citizens, and that the expense of their maintenance while the strike was in progress was an unjust one for the county to bear.

The protests of the county were so vigorous and the possibility of the legislaure passing the bill of Senator Rosenkrans so slight, in view of Atty. Gen. Kuhn's recent decision that the county should pay the bill, that the railroad officials, it is said, decided on paying the bill themselves as the best method of settling the matter.

MR. FIELDING REPORTS

Tariff Resolutions of a Sweeping Character.

Free Trade Between United States and Canada Will Obtain on Natural Products and Foodstuffs—Printing Machinery Is Free and Reductions on Many Other Articles—A Bad Step, Says Borden.

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—Not since 1896 has the Parliament of Canada been confronted with such a situation as that presented by Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance yesterday, when on a motion to go into committee on ways and means for raising supply, communicated the result of the recent conferences at Ottawa and Washington on the question of reciprocal trade with the United States. The statement of the Minister of Finance was to the effect that an understanding had been reached with the representatives of the United States, and provided that an arrangement had been reached with the republic covering articles to be granted free entry into both countries and those subject to a common duty.

It was a historical episode. It was the first appearance of the Minister of Finance in the House of Commons this session, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself took occasion to leave the House and escort his chief lieutenant into the chamber. The galleries were crowded with eager, impatient listeners. Mr. Fielding spoke for nearly two hours with remarkable vivacity and power.

Mr. Fielding presented to Parliament the basis of an agreement with the United States not a treaty, but simply an exchange of letters, whereby both countries agree to adopt reciprocal and mutual legislation with respect to certain articles of exchange which are enumerated in schedules. Some are free, some are dutiable. Under the arrangement the legislative tribunals in each are free to deal with this and extraneous questions as are then deemed advisable. The agreement is neither binding or permanent, but founded, as the Minister of Finance said, "on mutual faith, mutual good will, mutual conviction that the thing is best for the benefit of both countries."

The fact is obvious that it is a singular departure from the accepted policy of Canada, if not a reversal to the condition faced twenty years ago, when the Dominion embarked on an independent policy in fiscal matters with a view of building up home industries.

The remark of the leader of the Opposition pointed out the instability of arrangement, and seemed to be inclined to the view that in the final analysis it was a matter of directing Canadian trade east and west, instead of north and south. The debate was adjourned after Mr. Borden spoke, and in the meanwhile an opportunity will be given to inquire into the advantages or otherwise of the proposed measure of reciprocal trade.

Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, in moving the House into committee on ways and means, said:

"The action of this Government in consenting to reopen negotiations with a view to bringing about if possible a satisfactory reciprocal trade arrangement, has been very severely criticied in many quarters. From that fact we may properly infer that there must be some people in this Dominion of Canada who hold the opinion that the commercial policy of the ninety-two million people who live south of us is of no concern to the inhabitants of this Dominion.

"The ninety-two million people to the south are willing to acknowledge that they are interested in the commercial policy of Canada, and we, representing eight million people, are not ashamed to confess that we have the deepest concern in the policy which these people may adopt in relation to their commerce with the world at large. It is because we have that feeling that there is a mutual interest, that we have entered upon the negotiations as to which it is my privilege now to address you."

Mr. Fielding paid a tribute to the services of Mr. Bryce, British ambassador at Washington, who assisted the negotiations directly between representatives of Canada and the United States. He said Mr. Bryce had given his cordial sympathy and cooperation at every step. Mr. Fielding then reviewed the tariff "war scare" of last spring, saying that while some persons believed President Taft never would have applied the maximum tariff to Canada, the President was helpless and Canada merely gave him a decent excuse for avoiding it by making concessions which were of no earthly importance."

Mr. Fielding, proceeding, said that early in the proceedings at Ottawa it was decided if anything was done it should be in the nature of mutual legislation, and not in the binding form of a treaty.

"It will, therefore, be found in the document which I shall read presently to the House. If this arrangement commends itself to your judgement and is found to be advantageous, it will continue, but if on reasonable trial it is found in any way to be unfavorable to Canada, the Government and the Parliament of to-day are absolutely free at any time to change the arrangement, and nobody will have any right to complain."

"The next point is that we have arranged that there shall be a large free list. We have agreed upon a schedule containing a large number of articles which are to be reciprocally free. These are chiefly what are called natural products, though there are some things in them which would be hardly classified in that way.

"In another schedule we have provided a rather numerous list of items on which there shall be a common rate of duty in both countries."

R. L. Borden: "If it is not in the nature of a treaty, how is this arrangement to be carried out?"

Mr. Fielding: "My hon. friend will see as I proposed it it is not a binding treaty in any shape or form. The arrangements rests on mutual faith, mutual conviction that the thing is for the benefit of the two countries. Before dealing with the schedules in detail, I want to give an illustration how we have been able to reach common ground.

Mr. Fielding then moved, in part: That it is expedient to amend the customs tariff of 1907, and to provide as follows:

(1) That the articles, the growth, product or manufacture of the United States, specified in schedule A, shall be admitted into Canada free of duty, when imported from the United States.

(2) That the articles, the growth, product or manufacture of the United States, specified in schedules B. and D. shall be admitted into Canada upon payment of the rates of duty specified in the said schedules, when imported from the United States.

That the advantages hereby granted to the United States shall extend to any and every other foreign power which may be entitled thereto, under the provisions of any treaty or convention with his majesty.

That the advantages hereby granted to the United States shall extend to the United Kingdom and the several British colonies and possessions with respect to their commerce with Canada.

The elaborate schedules of which the following is a summary were then presented:

The chief feature of the proposed tariff agreement with the United States is the removal of all duties on both sides of the border on the bulk of what is known as natural products. Among the items on which the tariff duties are to be swept away entirely are cattle, horses and mules, swine, sheep and lambs, poultry dead and alive, wheat, rice, oats, barley, buckwheat, beans, dried peas, potatoes, butter, cheese, milk, cream, eggs, honey, fresh and salted fish, vegetables, fresh fruit and several varieties of dried fruits. This means in effect, if Congress accepts the view of President Taft and his advisers, that the United States definitely abandons the policy of protecting the food producers of that country, leaving the doors open to Canada, the only country from which foods of the sort mentioned can be obtained to supplement the home supply. In meats of various sorts, although the duties are not entirely removed, there are very material reductions, while flour will bear a duty of 50 cents per barrel on both sides of the line, and oatmeal 50 cents per 100 pounds.

Among the miscellaneous articles of importance other than foodstuffs on which duties are entirely removed by both countries are hay, lumber, coke, certain classes of steel rods, typesetting and typecasting machines, cottonseed oil, ties, telegraph poles, wooden staves, pickets and palings.

Considerable reductions are made in the agricultural implement schedule, a uniform scale of duties on both side having been arranged. Among the more important reductions in the Canadian duties are farm wagons, harvesters and mowers, 22 per cent.; plows, harrows, drills, horse rakes, cultivators, thrashing machines, hay-loaders, patent augers, feed-cutters, grain-crushers, fanning mills, hay-tedders and farm or field rollers, 5 per cent. reduction.

There is a lengthy list of reductions on various products of the mine, the most important being a decrease of the Canadian duty on bituminous coal from 53 to 45 cents per ton. The revenue loss from this will be large, over eight million tons of bituminous coal having been imported last year. This would mean about $640,000 in reduced duties on coal. The people of Ontario now pay most of the soft coal duties.

R. L. Borden arose amid Conservative cheers shortly after 5 o'clock. He said this question was one of the deepest moment to Canada, being practically a proposal for a new Canadian tariff. It would dislocate trade greatly, but no man could now say how far this dislocation might proceed.

The Finance Minister had spoken of the importance of cultivating trade with the hundred million people to the south. What about the trade of the three or four hundred million people under the British flag? Was not that trade the first consideration?

Think U. S. Will Kill It.

Montreal, Jan. 27.—The Washington arrangement was received here last night with a feeling of relief, as people wanted to know the worst or the best. Sir Thomas Shaughnessy declined to be interviewed, as he wanted to read the schedule before pronouncing himself.

Mr. Robert Meighen, president of the Lake of the Woods Milling Co., says a serious blow has been struck at the Canadian milling industry, while F. M. Thompson of the Ogilvie Co. would not be quoted.

General Manager Jones of the Cement Co. figures that the duty will be lowered five cents per barrel, but says they will be doing business at the old stand.

The manufacturers are evidently pleased that they were not struck with greater severity, although everybody will admit the seriousness of the milling situation. They think, however, that it will be all the same in the end, as the United States Senate will surely kill the measure.

English Views.

London, Jan. 27.—Few of the London morning newspapers comment on the reciprocity agreement between the United States and Canada. The Morning Post, however, says:

"The American Government will rejoice at having forced the door a little way, thereby obtaining leverage to force it further in the future. President Taft expresses as clearly as diplomatic caution will permit, his conception of the agreement as a prelude to some kind of future political union."

The Daily Express declares that the new bargain strikes a deadly blow at the comfortable pretentions of British free traders. It hopes, however, that the treaty with one of Great Britain's trade rivals may do the Empire invaluable service, demonstrating to the Mother Country the necessity of power to negotiate.

IDENTITY OF INTEREST

This Is Taft's Reason For Reciprocal Agreement.

He Says the Bond of Similarity In Race, Language, Institutions and Position Makes Exchange Desirable—It Is Not a Violation of Protective Principle—Different Treatment For Canada.

Washington, Jan. 27.—"Identity of interest of two peoples linked together by race, language, political institutions and geographical proximity" President Taft gives as the chief reasons for such reciprocity as he recommends in his special message yesterday.

"While equivalency should be sought in an arrangement of this character, an exact balance of financial gain is neither imperative nor attainable," he said.

"The path having been opened," he continues, "for the improvement of commercial relations, a reciprocal trade agreement is the logical sequence of all that has been accomplished in disposing of matters of a diplomatic and controversial character. The identity of interest of two peoples linked together by race, language, political institutions, and geographical proximity offers the foundation.

"A far-sighted policy requires that if we can enlarge our supply of natural resources, and especially of food products and the necessities of life, without substantial injury to any of our producing and manufacturing classes, we should do so now. We have on the north of us a country contiguous to ours for three thousand miles, with natural resources of the same character as ours, which have not been drawn upon as ours have been, and in the development of which the conditions as to wages and character of the wage earners and transportation to market differ but little from those prevailing with us."

President Taft holds that a commercial agreement with Canada is not a violation of the protective principle, as that has been authoritatively announced by those who uphold it. "Our common boundary line of three thousand miles in itself must make a radical distinction between our commercial treatment of Canada and of any other country," he says.

The President says that the Canadians "soon must decide whether they are to regard themselves as isolated permanently from our markets by a perpetual wall, or whether we are to be commercial friends. If we give them reason to take the former view," he adds, "can we complain if they adopt methods denying access to certain of their natural resources except upon conditions quite favorable to us? A notable instance of such a possibility may be seen in the conditions surrounding the supply of pulpwood and the manufacture of print paper, for which we have made a conditional provision in the agreement, believed to be equitable. Should we now, therefore, before the policy has become too crystalized and fixed for change, meet them in a spirit of real concession, facilitate commerce between the two countries and thus greatly increase the natural resources available to our people."

Quebec's Budget Under Criticism.

Quebec, Jan. 27.—In the Lower House the budget speech was under criticism at both the afternoon and evening sessions, and at midnight, when adjournment was agreed to, neither the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Tellier, nor Premier Gouin had been heard. The debate was continued yesterday. Messrs. Armand Levergne, Gault, Cousineau and Jean Prevost put the arguments of the Opposition in their best and most effective form.

The colonization methods, the distribution of school funds in a way which gave election patronage to the Government, and the way that liabilities and assets were figured up in the budget, were strongly attacked from the Opposition side.

Mr. Jean Prevost brought the day's discussion to a close at midnight. Mr. Prevost went over the colonization policy of the Government, claiming it might be made more effective, and that not enough attention was paid to the French-Canadians who were lost to the province by emigraiton to Ontario and the United States.

Masked Bandits.

Los Angeles, Jan. 27.—Yelling like Indian warriors and firing promiscuously from revolvers in both hands, two masked bandits boarded an inbound Beach suburban car on the outskirts of Santa Monica on Wednesday night, robbed 22 passengers, seriously wounded one of them, and were forced to flee by a single shot fire through the doorway by a passenger.

This shot wounded one of the robbers, and later the injured bandit was captured when he attempted to board a car to come into the city for treatment. He gave the name of Roy Fox, 19 years old.

Drunk While on Prohibited List.

Brockville, Jan. 27.—Fines and costs totalling $88 were imposed in the Brockville police court yesterday on two men arrested for being drunk while on the prohibited list, and two others who supplied them with liquor. At Delta, in Leeds County, two justices of the peace salted a stage driver named F. Stafford $125 for taking orders and delivering whisky in a local option district.

Sbaretti a Cardinal?

Ottawa, Jan. 27.—A private cable from Rome yesterday announces that Mgr. Sbaretti, formerly papal delegate to Canada, and now secretary of the congregations of religions in the United States, will be a candidate for the cardinalate at the next consistory. Recent deaths having reduced the number of cardinals in Curia to 20, it is expected the consistory will be held this year.

HAS $150,000 COMING.

Travers Put Some Money Into Another Mining Venture.

Toronto, Jan. 27.—From papers on file at Osgoode Hall it appears that former Manager W. R. Travers put considerable money of the Farmers' Bank into another mining venture as well as into the Keeley Mine. It is the Welsh Mine at Gowganda and from this may come as large a sum as $150,000, which may be added to the assets of the bank. Wishart is also interested in this deal, and it is from him that the money will come, should there be anything forthcoming. Wishart believes that anything that may be coming should go to swell the assets of the bank.

The crown was not prepared to go on with the case against the four provisional directors of the Farmers' Bank, when it was called in the Police Court yesterday morning.

A further enlargement was had until a week from yesterday, Feb. 2nd, when Crown Attorney Corley thought he would be in a position to proceed with the investigation.

Mr. Corley explained to Magistrate Denison why it was that he was unable to keep the implied promise made when the gentlemen in question appeared last Friday for the first time to answer a charge of conspiracy to obtain $10,000 unlawfully from the Farmers' Bank.

Dr. John Ferguson, Mr. Alex. Fraser and Mr. Alex. G. Lown, all of this city, and Mr. John Watson, exmayor of Listowel, acted as provisional directors of the defunct institution for about two years, while the work of promotion was going on.

They thought—and, had the bank proven a success, might have thought rightly—that their services should be requited in current coin of the realm. They, therefore, are said to have voted themselves $2,500 apiece, and it is because of this action that the existing charge is laid at their door.

The Police Court was again crowded when the four gentlemen against whom summonses were issued answered to the call of the magistrate; the expectation on every hand was that new and interesting developments would be the order of the day.

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

Scarlet fever is epidemic in Manitoba, several hundred cases having been reported. The Board of Health has issued a warning to the health officers.

A man who formerly worked for Dr. Beattie Nesbitt told the Hamilton police that he had seen and spoken to the doctor in that city. He was disguised as a priest.

Sir William Mackenzie is reported to have been robbed by his car porter of $1,000 at Ottawa. The man was followed to Windsor, where he gave up the money and was let go.

Flags of fishing craft in Gloucester harbor are being flown at half-mast, union down to-day, to signal the sentiments of their owners regarding the provision of the proposed reciprocity treaty.

For the first time in the history of aviation an aeroplane rose from the water yesterday at San Diego, sailed about, and returned to the starting point, where is landed on the water. This feat was achieved by Glenn H. Curtiss.

Manitoba farmers, in convention at Brandon, cheered the announcement of the tariff agreement with the United States. They say it will make a difference of ten cents on wheat, and the free entry of cattle to Chicago will solve the freight problem.

Strike May Result.

London, Jan. 27.—A conference of employers and compositors in the printing trade held Wednesday with a view of adjusting their differences and avoiding a threatened strike ended without an agreement having been reached.

The compositors demand a reduction in the hours of labor to a total of fifty hours a week, while the employers have offered to reduce the week's work to fifty-two hours. Neither side is prepared to yield. Twenty thousand compositors in London alone have notified their companies of their intention to quit work on Feb. 1.

Route For the Welland.

St. Catharines, Jan. 27.—That the route for the new Welland canal has been definitely decided upon, and that the work of construction is going to start pretty soon seems evident from the fact that engineers are now at work at Jordan Harbor, which is to be the northern terminus of the new waterway. The engineers are making test holes to find a good bottom which looks significant.

Turkey Purchasing Vessels.

Bremerhaven, Germany, Jan. 27.—The Turkish Commissioners who are here to pick up second hand vessels for use as transports in the navy of Turkey, yesterday purchased the Oldenburg and Darmstadt from the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. The steamers will be remodelled here and immediately after proceed for Constantinople.

New Industry for St. Catharines.

St. Catharines, Jan. 27.—By a majority of 1,501 votes the city yesterday gave 35 acres of free land to the Steel & Radiation, Ltd. The company is to erect $50,000 buildings, and employ 250 workmen, with an annual wage roll of $125,000. The city also gives the company a fixed assessment of $5,000 for three years, $10,000 for seven.

SIR CHARLES DILKE DEAD

Famous Liberal Statesman a Victim of Heart Disease.

One of the Strongest Men in British Public Life, He Would Have Been Premier, But For His Implication In a Scandalous Lawsuit — His Death Directly Due to Work In Recent Campaign.

London, Jan. 27.—Sir Charles Wentworth Dilke, one of the foremost Liberal statesmen of England, died suddenly of heart disease yesterday, at the age of 68. His death was a direct result of the strain of the recent British election. Following the election he went to the South of France to recuperate his failing health and seemed to gain in strength. He returned to England last Saturday, telling his friends that he had been greatly benefitted by his stay on the continent. On Sunday he suffered an attack which necessitated the administrations of a physician.

Sir Charles was one of the foremost advocates of world's peace and was the supporter of an Anglo-American entente with the idea of preventing war between the powers. He was one of the leading friends of the Suffragettes in England and in 1906 introduced a bill in Parliament that every man and woman should be qualified to vote at Parliamentary and other elections and that no person should be disqualified by sex or marriage from being a member of either Houses of Parliament.

He probably would have been made Premier when Mr. Asquith was chosen had it not been for the scandal of the Crawford-Dilke divorce case in which he was involved.

Some of his Parliamentary orations are masterpieces. He was born in 1843 and was educated at Cambridge, taking up the law. Some of the important offices he has held are Under Secretary of War, President of the Local Government Board, chairman of the royal commission for negotiations with France, chairman of the royal commission for housing working people, chairman of the select committee on Income Tax.

He had written extensively on political topics, some of his works being "The Present Positions of European Politics," "The British Army," "Imperial Defence," and many others.

His recreation was fencing.

A Black Hand Case.

New York, Jan. 27.—A panic was created in the Italian quarter, on the upper east side yesterday, when a bomb was thrown into the basement of a store and residence building on East 83rd street. The explosion wrecked the lower part of the building, and shook the neighborhood. John Garliago, a grocer, who occupies the basement, admitted to the police that he had received several threatening letters from the "Black Hand."

License Inspector Dead.

Mount Forest, Jan. 27.—Josiah Hampton, license inspector for East Wellington, died at his home here on Wednesday night from heart trouble, following an attack of la grippe. He was 77 years old, a prominent Conservative in politics, having contested the riding of East Wellington twice for the Legislature. Was mayor of the town for several terms, and represented the town at county council, being warden at one time.

LOCAL OPTION MEETING WAS LARGELY ATTENDED

City Hall Well Filled With an Interested Audience—Many Ladies Were Present—Rev, Ben Spencer of Toronto Was the Principal Speaker—His Vigorous Denunication of the Treating System—Strong Resolution Passed—Preliminary Steps Towards Submitting a By-Law

The city hall was last evening well filled by ladies and gentlemen who assembled to hear local option discussed and to take action if considered necessary towards conducting a campaign in this city. The result of the meeting was that a resolution was unanimously carried by a standing vote to take steps towards a campaign.

Those on the platform were: Rev Dr. Bishop, Rev. A. H. Drumm, Rev A. S. Kerr, Rev. R. Wallace, Rev. A M. Hubly, Rev. H. B. Kenny, Rev G. Smith and Mr. J. L. Hess.

The chair was occupied by Rev Dr. Bishop, President of the Ministerial Association of the city, owing to the Mayor being called out on important business. The chairman, after a brief address, explaining the object of the meeting, and the necessity he felt of a local option campaign being instituted, said the matter was to decide what course to pursue.

REV. B. SPENCE.

Secretary of the Dominion Alliance said that whilst he held the position he was not present to say what action should be taken in Belleville in regard to local option. He was simply present to talk on the question generally and to give some facts regarding local option.

On the 1st of May, 1910 one-eighth of the bar rooms in Ontario were closed, and on account of the vote of this month 26 more will be closed The movement is going on throughout the province. Bar rooms as we have them to-day are simply social places, as it were, where young men congregate and are led on to be drinkers of intoxicants by the treating system. The retail dealer can be dealt with locally, but the distillers and brewers will have to be dealt with in a different manner. The sphere for individual action is in the individual and this applies to municipalities. He was not quarrelling with the men who are selling the liquor, but he was against the traffic and selling of strong drink. He would not attack the men who are engaged in the business as they are legalized to carry on that business The municipality which derives benefit from licensed liquor places is a co-partner in that business. The people of this province are realizing that they are anxious to get out of the business and many places are thus favoring local option. The passing of a local option by-law in this city would take away from 19 persons the privilege of selling intoxicating liquors. He did not know of any person who violated the local option by law, as the liquor license law is severe upon those who endeavor to break the law. "If," said Mr. Spence, "you want your boys protected, make the law so hard that he cannot procure liquor. Men sell whiskey because there is money in it. If you won't stop the sale of liquor illegally by a license holder, the enforcement of a fine will not prevent it. Imprisonment has prevented men from selling liquor who thought they could do it where local option was in force. Under local option the parties who were licensed, as a rule, keep the law, fearing consequences. There is a better enforcement of the law under local option than under license law. If local option was not a good thing why is it that so many municipalities where it has been in force for three or more years it has only been repealed in three municipalities. Strike home, home, for local option."

At the conclusion of Mr. Spence's address the chairman said he was prepared to receive any suggestion in resolutions in regard to the advisability of proceeding with a local option campaign in the city. He said if the people of Belleville voted out the bars from the city they would stay out. The business men of the towns where local option is in force state that business improves, bad debts are paid and the places are progressive. In answer to a question as to accommodation for travellers, Rev. Mr. Spence said that Belleville was too large a place to be hurt for accommodation, if local option was brought about. A hotel was improved by taking the bar out of it. Under local option he contended there would be better accommodation as too many hotels under license pay more attention to the bar than to that part of the premises for accommodation.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn said that for 25 years he had lived in Belleville and he was a total abstainer. In all his life he felt that he would like to see reform in the direction of liquor consumption in this city. He submitted the following resolution seconded by Mr. R. B. Morden:

The citizens of Belleville called by public notice and now assembled to consider the question of local option.

RESOLVED:—

1. That the Dominion of Canada, not being prepared at this time to legislate for total prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor,

2. That public sentiment clearly indicates that the evils of the liquor traffic are a serious menace of the public welfare and an enemy of the home,

3. That the existence of the bars and the treating system as at present conducted is the most objectionable feature of the liquor traffic and the most demoralizing to those engaged in the sale of liquor and to our young men who are tempted to frequent them.

4. That the only possible plan for the abatement of this evil at the present time available is Local Option as provided by our Legislature.

5. That there is a strong conviction among our prominent citizens and church members that the restrictions of the sale of intoxicating liquors as provided for by our Legislatre and called Local Option would be in the interests of our city.

6. That the surrounding municipalities of Sidney, Thurlow, and Ameliasburgh are already under Local Option law.

7. It is our duty to take steps forthwith as may be practicable to bring the Local Option law in force in our city.

8. That an executive committee be formed to immediately consider the matter in all its bearings and if upon investigation, the committee considers the circumstances warrant it, to take steps to have the said question of local option submitted to our people.

The resolution was carried by a standing vote.

Rev. A. H. Drumm said the fight was not against hotelkeepers but the business they are engaged in. They are there because we are legally responsible for their being in the business. He moved, seconded by the Rev. R. Wallace, a vote of thanks to Rev. Mr. Spence for his address.

This was suitably acknowledged, singing the doxology and the benediction pronounced by Rev. Mr. Smith brought the meeting to a close demands on the common energy-fund, continuously depriving other parts of a healthy functioning power. Thus we can readily see that organs can be diseased without the cause being in them or their governing nerve centers.

Of all organs in the body, the eyes are most capable of demanding and getting an excessive share of the general fund of nerve-energy from the human power-house, for the following reasons:

1. The feeling of vision is the most acute of all the senses, because it is actively aroused by one of the most imponderable elements known to science—light. By the impact of its delicate waves our consciousness is made to feel shape, motion and color. Its rays, reflected from various objects, pass through the cornea, the aqueous humor, the crystalline lens, the vitreous body.

SUFFERED THREE YEARS

Till Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cured his Kidney Trouble

There are few diseases that cause more acute suffering than Kidney Trouble, and Mr. F. A. Thomas, of Sudbury Ont., is one of those who know it. He writes: "For over three years I suffered from kidney disease. First I thought I had sprained my back, for suddenly the pain would catch the small of my back and it would be impossible for me to straighten myself up for several minutes. A dull ache across the kidneys was always present, my urine was thick and cloudy, and passing it caused a burning, scalding pain. Tried medicines, but they failed. I was advised to try Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, as they had cured my wife years before. A few boxes affected a complete cure. I now enjoy the blessings of good health, which is due to this remedy."

Don't neglect kidney trouble—it's too dangerous as well as too painful. That old, reliable family remedy, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills, has cured thousands and will cure you. It is equally effective in curing constipation and its attendant evils, biliousness, indigestion and sick headaches, and in purifing the blood. 25c a box at your druggist's. 10

RAID ON A "SCHOOL DEN"

Through the raiding of a so-called military school near Joliet, Ill., a few days ago, when nine boys were rescued from what are alleged to have been conditions suggesting those of "Dotheboys Hall," made famous by Dickens, a boy and his mother, who thought each other dead, were brought together in Chicago.

The boy, Charles Maloney, is now 13 years of age. He disappeared following the death of his father, 10 years ago, and his mother thought he had been kidnapped by a relative, and later gave him up for dead. She was married three years ago to L. J. Bauer, of Chicago. She saw the boy's name among those rescued, but did not recognize the lad whom she remembered as a baby. It was necessary to point her son out to her. Mother and son were found by reporters with their arms about each other.

"Poor little laddie, poor little laddie," the mother crooned, "to think what you have been through. But you have a home and a mother now."

The school was conducted by James J. Campbell, at Riverdale, near Chicago, until last August, when Campbell, his wife and the nine boys started down the Illinois River in a boat. At Channahan, a village 12 miles from Joliet, the boat was disabled and the passengers took refuge in a house nearby.

The raid on the place was made by Jerry McCarthy, State officer for the Illinois Humane Society, to which complaint of conditions at the school had been made.

"I never before saw such filthy conditions as I found there," said McCarthy. "There was not a stick of furniture in the place except a table and two stoves. The boys slept on the bare floor of a room 12 feet by 14. The only covering for the entire outfit, including Campbell and his wife, were six comforters. The boys told me that they begged from neighbors and gathered corn in the fields. When they first landed the boys said that they lived for two weeks in a shed owned by a bridge-tender, until the place got so filthy that they were ordered out.

"Campbell, I am informed, received $20 cash for their care and a course of instruction. The relatives, I have learned, who put up the money, believed that the lads were well cared for."

DIVORCED SHE STILL DREAMS OF HUSBAND

Detroit, Mich., January 25. — The flying squadron made a quick run to 167 Second Avenue last night because Mrs. Herman Collins, who is divorced from her husband, had a dream in which she thought her husband was climbing into her bedroom window. The dream was so realistic that Mrs. Collins in great fright summoned the police. Collins was nowhere around, however, and the officers returned to headquarters.

Paris, Jan. 27.—A new aeroplane record was set here yesterday when Roger Sommer carried five passengers from Douzy to Romily and returned with them successfully. The total distance covered was about fifteen miles.

This is the first time in the history of aviation that six persons have been carried in an aeroplane. Two of them were compelled to stride the skids.

The biplane used by Sommer carried a total weight of about 1,000 pounds, including a supply of petrol. The flight was made at an average height of 150 feet from the ground, the aviator never rising over 200 feet.

MODISH AFTERNOON DRESS

For informal bridges, afternoon calls, etc., a dress of this sort is ideal and almost essential to every woman's wardrobe. Black pin-striped poplin, in a rich shade of dark green, was used for the model from which our sketch was taken, and it makes a most becoming and serviceable gown. The design is very good, especially of the bodice, where the stripes are cleverly used in bands which outline the yoke and stock of allover lace, which are veiled with black chiffon. Jet motifs are used on bodice and skirt in effective fashion, and add much to the beauty of the dress. The deep hem is black satin, above which are three folds of the striped poplin.

DOMESTIC NOTES

Information that Will Save Money and Inconvenience

After an umbrella has been in use for a short time put a drop of oil in the centre of the top about once a month. This prevents the ribs from rusting.

• • •

If a few drops of turpentine are sprinkled on a damp duster when cleaning windows they will be found to dry quickly and cleanly, and can easily be polished with a dry duster. This is a particularly good hint for damp weather.

• • •

It is very difficult to dry the inside of a mincing machine. The best way to clean it after using is to grind stale pieces of bread through it. This will be found to collect all the grease, fat, and skin from the small knives. Wipe with a clean cloth.

• • •

The bars of a grate often have a burned and ugly appearance, which prevents their taking a good polish. This difficulty is soon overcome. Before applying the blacklead rub the bars with a piece of lemon, and they will be quite easy to polish afterwards.

• • •

Coffee stains, even when there is cream in the coffee, can be removed from the most delicate silk or woollen fabrics by brushing the spots with pure glycerine. Rinse them in lukewarm water and press them on the wrong side until quite dry. The glycerine absorbs both the coloring matter and the grease.

• • •

Corks required for bottling fruits or pickles should be placed in a saucepan of boiling water. After boiling for five minutes they can easily be pressed into the bottles, and will be completely airtight when cold. Pickles, etc., corked in this manner will keep much longer than those just tied up in the ordinary way.

• • •

Make large calico bags for your skirt; they need not be very wide. Hem the top, and run a draw-string through. Place the skirt inside, and slip the tape through the loops on the band by which the skirt is ordinarily hung up. Draw the tape up tightly, and knot it. When suspended thus in the wardrobe, you will find the dresses are kept free from dirt, creases and moths.

OBITUARY

Lacy, Toronto; Mrs. Charles Hoss Fort William; Mrs. James Elliott Foxboro, and Mrs. J. Hoskins, of this city.

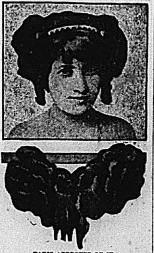
The New Chignon.

The twin chignon is a feature of the new hairdressing. The illustration tells its own story of how this invention looks and is applied. Indeed,



PARIS APPROVES OF IT.

Frenchwomen have a variety of these chignons in different styles for different costumes and take them on and off as they do their gowns. A strange but a very convenient arrangement, is it not?

Hair ornaments, too, are much in evidence this winter, and when choosing these adornments it must not only match or contrast with the color of the gown with which it will be worn, but it must be appropriate to the fabric of which the gown is made. For the lovely filmy chiffons and marquisettes so fashionable this season the hair ornaments should be fluffy and soft.

BIG SEIZURE OF OPIUM

Customs Officers Raided Two Cigar Stores in New York's Tenderloin

NEW YORK, Jan.26.—Customs agents and the city police raided two "cigar stores" in the heart of the Tenderloin to-night, from which they seized 600 two-pound cans of prepared opium, enough raw opium to bring the value of the seizure to an estimated total of $10,000, and a quantity of wires, lamps and smoker's layout. Four Chinamen were arrested, charged with violating the federal opium exclusion act of 1909, and a bundle of letters, addressed to Charles Boston, a wealthy Chinese leader of the On Leong Tong, were seized and turned over to the United States District Atorney'soffice. Among them were letters bearing the names of J. M. Morin, director of the Department of Public Safety of Pittsburg; Thomas A. McQuaid, superintendent of police of Pittsburg; E. R. Walters, director of the Department of Public Health of Pittsburg and Joseph P. Murray, police captain of the first district of Pittsburg. Each acknowledged receipt by the writer of a gift from Boston.

There was a letter purporting to have been written by Superintendent McQuaide to L. T. Stewart, superintendent of police of Chicago. It was written on the superintendent's official paper and dated August 10, 1910.

Both shops are on Seventh Avenue between Thirty-sixth and Forieth Sts., whee the white lights are brightest, and the raids stirred up much excitement among the ficating population of the streets, which soon learned what was going on.

The Chinamen arrested are Oo Wah, Kay Chong, Fong Kee and Lai Bake. They were held in $1,500 bail each, for lack of which they were locked up in the Tombs.

Some resistance was made by the surprised Chinamen at first, but they were quickly overawed and when the customs agents were reinforced by the police a thorough search of the premises began. Some of the opium found was stamped with the Government's revenue stamps, but the customs agents said the cans had been refilled.

The firm name over the doors was Tuck Lung Company, said to have headquarters in San Francisco. The seizure is the second largest made since the passage of the exclusion act. Last July the Government agents seized $25,000 worth of opium and $25,000 in cash in the warehouse of the Charles Kwong Sang Company at Kansas City.

Evidence for the raid here was obtained by two customs agents, who made affidavit that they bought opium with the understanding that it was to be used for smoking. The shops have been under surveillance for some time, and the customs agents said to-night that a list of the customers who "bought cigars" would make interesting reading along Broadway.

In a despatch received tonight Superintendent McQuaide and the other Pittsburg officers are quoted as saying that they received small presents of a silk handkerchief and Chinese nuts, sent by Charlie Boston, as a token of appreciation of courtesies shown when the Chinese Merchants Association met in Pittsburg last October.

SEIZURES AT SAN FRANCISCO.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 25.—Another seizure of contraband opium, smuggled into this country on the steamer Korea, was made today by customs officers, after a running fight with two men who were attempting to land it from a small boat. The smugglers escaped, leaving 300 five-tael tins of the best grade of opium, valued at $12,000.

Altogether 1,098 tins of the drug, worth about $44,000, brought from the Orient on the Korea, have been seized since that vessel arrived in port two weeks ago.

THE "PASSION PLAY" AT OBERAMMERGAU

Able Lecture by Judge Deroche—How the Sacred Drama Originated—Why it is Presented Decennially—Immense Crowds Throng to Witness it—Number of Auditors Steadily Increasing—Large Audience Was Greatly Interested

His Honor Judge Deroche must surely feel somewhat flattered at the audience which turned out to hear his lecture last evening, for despite the slight rain, the exceedingly bad walking, and the many counter attractions, the main auditorium of Bridge Street Methodist Church was pretty well filled. And they were certainly well repaid for braving the rain and ice, for it is doubtful if there was one in the audience who did not go away with new ideas and a more sympathetic understanding of the earthly life of the Christ.

It was variously called an address and a lecture in the preliminary announcements, but it seemed to be neither. It was more a narrative, or story told in the conversational, chatty style, in which the Judge excels, and which made him so popular with the men of his famous "Business Men's Bible Class."

And the subject, "The Passion Play," was one to inspire the tongue of any speaker who has been fortunate enough to see this now world-wide famous Swiss play. Almost everyone has heard of this Passion Play, for the magazines and newspapers have said so much about it during the last couple of years. But no magazine or newspaper could present the subject with such realistic vividness as did Judge Deroche in his narrative, and many an incident and description were introduced which never would find their way into print.

These religious plays, he said, used to be quite common at one time some centuries ago, but they gradually degenerated into mere money-making sacreligious plays, and died—all except this one Passion Play, which has retained its religious motive and has thereby lived. He told how, some three or four hundreds of years ago the little Swiss village of Oberammergau was seized with the plague, how in despair the people went to the village priest and made a vow to God to perform the "Passion" regularly in future if freed from the plague, and how through all the succeeding generations that holy vow has been religiously kept, and the play presented once every ten years, until it has become so ingrained in the very natures of the peasants that all their ambitions in life seem to centre around that one thing—the Passion Play.

It is still only a small village, say about the size of Madoc or Tweed, with probably 1,500 inhabitants, some 600 or 700 of whom actually appear on the stage as participants in the play. These 1,500 people manage to provide beds for some 4,000 strangers in their own homes, there being no hotels, and the Judge gave a good description of the quaint little village, with its narrow crooked streets and old homes. Some of these houses, he said, were very old fashioned, and very plain inside, and illuminated at night by candle light only, while the modern cow stable, built off the living room, was of cement and lit with electric lights.

The play is staged two or three days each week from May to September, and during this period, about 300,000 strangers come to this little village from all the nations of the world. The main stage is in the open air. The great auditorium (which is nothing but a huge shed) seats 4,000 or more, and is filled from the opening of the play at eight in the morning to its close at six o'clock in the afternoon, and this vast crowd, many of whom are blase sight-weary tourists, sits there intensely interested through the eight long hours of this play (which stops only at noon for dinner) because they all appreciate instantly that they are attending, not merely a play, but a real religious ceremony, and that these villagers are actually performing not their parts only, but the vow made to God by their ancestors.

The play itself is divided into a number of acts, the first of which depicts the triumphal entry of the Christ into Jerusalem a week before His death. This was followed by the cleansing of the temple, which so enraged the priesthood that the next act shows the Sanhedrim plotting as to how to get rid of this too popular upstart. The next act gives a glimpse of the tender home life of the Christ, as in the house of Lazarus at Bethany He bids a last farewell to friends, disciples and his mother before going on what He knew was His last visit to the holy city. The Judge said that the realism, the tenderness and sadness of this scene were such that the whole vast audience were moved to tears. And the memory of the act was still so vivd and fresh with him that as he told of it many in his audience sought their handkerchiefs.

The play then proceeded with the temptation of Judas by the priests, the Last Supper, the further meeting of the Sanhedrim when it was agreed that Christ must be put to death. Then the scene in the garden, the betrayal by Judas, the several trials in turn before Annas, Caiphas, Pilate, Herod, and Pilate again, the sentence and the carrying of the cross, the last despairing soliliquy of Judas and his suicide, the agony of the women, the crucifixion, which was described very fully. Then came the act showing the empty tomb and the risen Lord and joyful friends, and last a tableau showing the ascension.

The Judge held his audience in rapt attention until ten o'clock, telling what can at best be only summarized here, and at the close of the meeting he received many warm words of praise for his instructive discourse.

Mr. F. E. O'Flynn was chairman of the meeting, and before the address of the evening Mr. Dan Cameron sang that old favorite "The Holy City," accompanied by Professor Phelps. Mr. Ernest Mouck also sang "Out of the Depths I Cry," accompanied by Mr. W. A. A. Chown. Both solos were sung in splendid style as usual, and were well applauded.

At the close of the address an offering was taken for the Children's Shelter, which seemed to be pretty large.

BONGARD WAS NOT POISONED

The Coroner's Jury Abandoned the Case After Medical Evidence Was Heard

PICTON, Jan. 27.—Acting on the report of the analyst, Prof. Ellis of Toronto, the Coroner and jury investigating the death of John Bongard on December 20 to-night abandoned further inquiry. "I have found no poison nor anything to throw light on the cause of death," replied Prof. Ellis to Dr. Currie, M.P., the Coroner. The only evidence taken was from Dr. J. Chant, who performed the post-mortem examinaton. He declared there was no indication of external violence on the body of Bongard. After describing the bluish color in which he found the viscera, and the abnormal size and color of the stomach, liver and intestines, Crown Attorney Brown asked: "Would you have been surprised if the report had come of poison?" "No", said Dr. Chant.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Many of the county officials made application for increase of salary, but few received it.

"No Mother to Guide Her" is the title of a current melodrama. And what is worse, the playright evidently suffered the same handicap.

Japan, not to be outdone by Uncle Sam, planned 27,000 or 30,000-ton Dreadnoghts, proposes to build a 40,000-ton warship. Our little allies have big ideas.

Local option may or may not be submitted to the popular vote at the next municipal election, as the committee appointed at last night's meeting may determine.

Italy is sending three warships to Egypt probably to make a demonstration against some Turkish ports on the Red Sea. If Italy has any quarrel with Turkey, the Red Sea is a very out-of-the-way place in which to settle it.

Admiral Sir John Arbuthnot Fisher the head of the British navy, retired yesterday, having reached the age of 70, which is the limit in the British navy. He served in the Crimean, China and Egyptian wars, commanding the Inflexible at the bombardment of Alexandria. His controversy some years ago with Vice Admiral Lord Charles Beresford attracted wide attention.

The very best thing that could happen Canada would be to have the United States Congress oppose and defeat the tariff treaty. And we hope it will. This growing country does not require reciprocity with the States. A fair amount of protection on all industries has done much towards Canada's prosperity and will continue to do so if the fiscal policy as it is to-day is left alone. We look to Congress to do this, as nothing can be expected frm the Laurierites at Ottawa.

The Springer Lock Company of this city, at its meeting on Wednesday last, presented to its stockholders a very creditable statement, considering that since the reorganization only about eight months have elapsed. The large number present showed their appreciation of the efficient manner in which the concern is now managed under the direction of Mr. W. C. Springer. A dividend of 7 per cent. on the first preferred stock was declared, and there is every prospect of a good dividend forthcoming on the second preferred stock within the next twelve months. The directors of the company are the same as last year, and the future of the company, it is safe to say, is fully assured.

Y. M. C. A. NOTES.

Owing to Dr. Clark and Mr. Symons, the championship "Volley Ball Match," was postponed. Messrs. Sovereign, Wrightmeyer and Sulman played against the champion but lost.

The A. C. L. Scouts won the basketball match against the Y. M. C. A. Scouts by a score of 26-12. The game was very fast but the A. C. L. Scouts were too large for the Y. M. C. A. bunch. J. Alexander handled the game in good style. E. Barlow was timekeeper and D. Graham scorer.

A class in "First Aid" until the doctor comes, was organized by the school teachers of the city last evening. This class will meet next Friday afternoon at 4.30 for the first lesson.

Do not forget the Men's Meeting at the Palace Theatre to-morrow afternoon The "Life of Daniel" is the subject which will be illustrated. There is to be instrumental and vocal solos as well as orchestral music.

Seniors' Bible Class meets to-night at 7.30. Strangers cordially invited.

A series of indoor sports for seniors and juniors will be put on during the month of February. Two events will be run off each class night.

HYDRAULIC POWER AT NIAGARA FALLS

Prof. Angus of Toronto University Tells of the Development—A Highly Instructive Discourse Illustrated by Lantern Views—Fine Panoramic Pictures of Niagara Falls and River—Magnitude of Recent Undertakings Astonished the Audience

Those members of the Canadian Club who attended the banquet last evening at 6.30 in Wallace's lunch rooms partook of an excellent dinner, served in the usual good style for which Mr. Jas. Wallace and his assistants are noted. The guest of the evening was Prof. Angus, of Toronto University. His subject was "Hydraulic Power Development of Niagara Falls." As the lecture was accompanied with lantern views, adjournment was made at 7.15 over to Bridge St. S. S. rooms which offered greater advantages to the scope of the subject.

Porf. Angus manifested by his splendid explanatory remarks that he possesses a masterful knowledge of such engineering matters. The slides shown were very clear and gave a fine panoramic view of the Niagara Falls and River as well as the profile cuts of power construction work. The magnitude of the recent undertakings was proved to be astonishing.

In his opening remarks the skilled Professor outlined the history of hydraulic work in the case of foreign countries, as Norway, Sweden, Germany, Italy and Switzerland. The effect of climatic conditions in comparison with Canada was explained The abundant fuel and power resources given to our Dominion by nature were being rapidly consumed by the consequent requirements of commercial progress. Owing to the higher level of Lake Erie over that of Lake Ontario there is 325 feet descent in the Niagara River, falls and gorge This is capable of five million horse power being developed or sufficient to supply with electricity 100 cities of the size of Toronto. By reason of Canada possessing the bulk of the volume of water at Niagara Falls we are fortunately situated so as to be able to develop 4-5 of the Niagara power. In connection with this world wonder, there are already three of the largest power concerns in the world developing hydraulic power with Canadian and American capital The companies each have a capacity of from 100 to 180 thousand horse power. Since one quarter of the volume of the Horsehoe Falls was being drawn upon, it is only natural that some inroads will be made upon the prowess and scenic effect of the stream. Prof. Angus explained in detail the different methods of construction and development employed by the different companies, especially the extraordinary undertaking of the company delivering power for the Ontario Government power lines. The erection of great dams, rock tunnels and shafts to convey the water into the large turbines and thence to the generating plant at the base of the falls, from there to the transformer station and the mechanism of control were features lucidly illustrated and explained.

At the close of the splendid lecture Col. Ponton referred to the great debt all owed Prof. Angus for his able discourse, and incidentally commented upon its significance towards university extension work.

ANGLICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL CONFERENCES

Rev Mr. Hilts Spoke on the Subject of How to Work More Effectively

A conference of Sunday School Workers was held in St. Thomas' church hall on Thursday afternoon and evening to meet Rev. Mr. Hilts the Field Secretary. The attendance was not as large as it should have been, but Mr. Hilts was not discouraged. He said the great object of the S. S. Commission was to organize for more effective work in our Sunday Schools. There was a danger in these days of over-organizing, but this was not the case in the Church of England Sunday Schools. Without proper organization much energy was wasted. Seventy-five percent of our grown-up boys were lost to our S. S through want of system. Much of the S. S. hour was wasted for the same reason. Definite work should be given to those specially fitted for it; there should be specialists in S. S as well as elsewhere. In our present scheme the Primate of all Canada is the head, aided by an Executive Committee working through the diocesean associations and through the deanery associations which is composed of the clergy, superintedents, officers and teachers. To be effective, these must be live members, or all organizations would be failures.

The able Secretary entered into a thorough explanation of the several departments, giving much interesting and valuable information. At the evening session the Rev. Mr. Hilts spoke specially on Teacher training emphasizing that the aim of the S. S was spiritual training—that teachers should know what they are to teach How to teach it and to study the individual pupil, realizing that their work was to train souls for the service of Christ. After each address by the Rev. Mr. Hilts a general discussion took place and all were invited to ask questions. More active and effective and effective work in our Sunday School is hoped for.

PROOF THAT PROVES

If one person more than another should know the value of medicine it is the retail druggist.

Therefore when ten thousand retail druggists of the United States recommend Vinol, the delicious cod liver and iron tonic, without oil, as the best strengthening tonic known and are willing to return their customers' money in every case where it fails to give satisfaction, there can be no room for doubt.

Among others, one of the most redidable druggists of Lynn, Mass., Mr Warren Toppan, says, "From personal experience I know what Vinol will do. I had a chronic cold all winter and was so weak I could hardly get about. Nothing seemed to help me until I tried Vinol—the change was magic—and what surprised me most Vinol not only cured the cold but built me up and cured me of a severe stomach trouble that had bothered me for twenty years. Vinol is certainly a wonderful medicine." (We guarantee this testimonial to be genuine.)

We ask every run-down, nervous debilitated, aged or weak person or any person suffering from chronic coughs and colds to try a bottle of Vinol with the understanding that their money will be returned if it does not do all we claim. J. S. McKeown.

Dominion Bank Statement

The Dominion Bank for the year which ended 31st December, 1010, made profits of over $650,000. This, with the sum of $205,000 which was carried forward from the previous year, makes a total of $955,000 available for distribution. The shareholders received the usual large dividend of 12% for the year, in four quarterly payments, $170,00 was written off bank premises account and $800,000 was carried forward.

The bank is particularly strong in quickly available assets, as well as in specie and Dominion Government notes, the total of the quickly available assets amounting to over $22,000,000.

The discounted bills and advances current amount to $37,200,000, showing that it is doing its share in meeting the business needs of the community. Another exceptionally strong feature of the bank is the fact that its reserve fund exceeds its paid-up capital by $1,000,000, the reserve fund being $5,000,000 and the paid-up capital $4,000,000, and that this position is appreciated by the public is shown in the total deposits, which amount to over $49,000,000 and the total assets to over $62,000,000.

Altogether, the President, Directors and General Manager of this bank are to be congratulated on the fine showing they have made.

The Point Of View

It being impossible, with the information which is at present available, to form a conclusive opinion on the probable result of the tariff arrangement which is proposed between Canada and the United States, we give herewith brief extracts from the Toronto morning papers embodying their ideas of the effect of the proposed arrangement on British connection and British preference, as at present embodied in our tariff.

The Mail and Empire says: "It is too early to pronounce upon the bargain in all its details. But it can be said that many of the concessions made on behalf of Canada will be disastrous to our producers. On this point the country will be heard from as soon as the scheme is digested. While the details can await examination, the general principle is so clear that it cannot escape notice. The bargain, as President Taft points out, is conducive to the interests of the United States in that it gives that country access to our natural resources, and a larger market in the Dominion. It is also calculated to commend itself to our neighbors because it makes a British-Canadian preferential system impossible. With Canada receiving free of duty the agricultural products of the United States, Britain could not give us a tariff preference without also giving a preference gratuitously to the country which regorously excludes her manufactures."

The Globe expresses a contrary view, as follows: "The next point of importance is that there is no entanglement in regard to the British preference. The reductions in Canada's tariff are mostly in foodstuffs, farm implements, printing machinery, coal, and certain sorts of iron and steel products in which Britain does little or no trade with Canada. The great import trade from Britain is in textiles—particularly woollens, linens and cottons—and in a wide range of highly finished manufactures of iron and steel. These things are not touched under the arrangement. In regard to the few cases in which Canadian duties are reduced to a point rendering the British preference of less value than it has been heretofore, Mr. Fielding was able to assure Mr. Foster that the question of the British preference had not entered into the discussion at Washington, and that no breach of faith would be involved if the British preference was placed thirty-three and a third per cent. lower than the new duties upon United States imports."

The World, which expresses the opinions of the "third party," agrees with the Mail and Empire, and goes even further in the distrust with which it views the "bearing of gifts" by our neighbors. It remarks: "Let us say of this that the real and primal policy of the United States to-day and of its public men is to effect what they call the unification of the North American continent, the disappearance of all British rule and institutions from North America and the triumph of the American republic and American institutions from the Arctic to the Gulf of Mexico. Canada, on the contrary, has, we believe, her greatest opportunity in remaining Canadian and British and in maintaining British institutions in America. To our mind, then, the unification of the continent is aided by freer trade relations and that British and Canadian dominion over the northern part of the continent is more or less jeopardized thereby.

"The proposals, if carried out, will tend to divert traffic from our western provinces to Chicago and other American cities, to injure our Canadian transcontinental railways as such, to cause the wheat trade now concentrating in Winnipeg to go to Chicago, to cause Canadian wheat to lose its identity, probably to drive the milling trade to south of the line, and to check the remarkable development now under way in Canadian transportation systems and Canadian eastern cities, including the enormous trade of the St. Lawrence. It would pit New York against Canadian seaports, while the east and west lines of trade and development that we now have may be diverted southeast and northwest."

Thus there are two against one in the opinion that the trend of the tariff negotiations is hostile to British preference and a direct menace to British connection. With this latter opinion we are strongly inclined to agree. Judging from the past—from the efforts which our neighbors made to force Canada into annexation by abrogating the reciprocity treaty of 1854, by their subsequent imposition of prohibitory duties on our barley, hay and other products, and by their attempt to induce us to enter into commercial union, or "unrestricted reciprocity," as a preliminary to political annexation, there are no favors to be looked for from Uncle Sam in matters of commerce. Our people must, therefore, bearing these facts in mind, look upon the proposals submitted to Parliament and to the United States Congress with deep distrust. Moreover, when it is considered that the country is spending hundreds of millions of dollars in the building of the Transcontinental Railway and in the building and enlargement of canals and proposing to expend hundreds of millions in other works of like kind, with the object of improving transportation facilities between our western provinces and the Atlantic ports, and that the three great Canadian railway companies, namely the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific and the Canadian Northern, are also spending hundreds of millios with the same object in view, any proposal to divert traffic to the south, instead of following present lines, must meet with condemnation from the people of Canada.

OVERCOAT THIEF GOT SIX MONTHS

On Wednesday last a young man named Morton, who is employed in the Standard Bank here, while in to dinner at the Anglo-American Hotel, left his overcoat hanging in a hallway. When he came out of the dining room his coat was gone. The affair was reported to the police and this morning a young man, who gave his name as Wm. McLeod, was arrested charged with the offence. McLeod, when arrested, was wearing Morton's overcoat. The accused was brought before Magistrate Masson and pleaded guilty to the offence. He was immediately sentenced to 18 months in the Central Prison. McLeod, who is but 21 years of age, claims he is a resident of Nova Scotia, and had been tramping up and down the country. He was in the police station here a few nights ago for protection.

WEDDING AT THE RECTORY

A very pretty but quiet wedding was solemnized in St. Thomas Rectory, by the Rev. G. Ross Beamish on Wednesday evening at eight o'clock, when Miss Ferole Elvins, youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Elvins, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Albert J. Howe, son of Mr. William Howe of Thurlow.

The bride was attended by Miss Lena Jackson, while Mr. Edward Howe, brother of the groom, acted as best man. The bride and bridsmaid were attired alike in green tailored custumes, with hat to match.

After the ceremony the wedding party drove to the home of the bride's parents where a wedding supper awaited them. Mr. and Mrs. Howe will reside in the city.

MRS. D. E. MINNS DEAD

At an early hour this morning Mrs D. E. Minns passed away at the family residence, Everett street. Deceased had been ill for some months with heart trouble. Mrs. Minns, who was 61 years of age, was born in Prince Edward County, being a daughter of the late Mr. Ephraim Burley, of Ameliasburgh township. For the past 21 years she had resided in this city. Deceased was a lady who had many friends. For many years she had been a member of the Methodist church, being identified with Holloway street church. In addition to her husband, two sons and one daughter survive. The sons are Hilliard, of this city, and George, of Chicago; the daughter is Mrs. A. J Richards, of Baltimore, Ont.

Philadelphia Jack O'Brien is surely the hustling match maker these days. Besides having matched such stars as Wolgast, Knockout Brown, Abe Atell, Tommy O'Toole and Joe Coster for bouts at his American Athletic Club of Philadelphia, he has also a middleweight to meet Harry Mansfield. Young Loughrey and Frank Klaus at different shows.

THE MARKETS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Jan. 27.—President Taft's message, recommending that Canadian wheat be put on the free list, led to serious misgivings to-day on the part of owners here. The market closed weak, after much unloading by timid holders. Latest prices were almost the lowest of the season, and showed a net loss of 1c to 1⅛c to 1⅜c a bushel, compared with yesterday's close. Corn finished ⅛c to ⅝c down, and oats off ⅛c to ¼c. The end of the day left provisions generally 2½c to 10c lower, but pork for January delivery was bid up $1.50 a barrel.

At Liverpool wheat futures closed today ⅝d to ⅝d lower than yesterday; corn futures ¼d higher to ⅛d lower. Antwerp closed unchanged. Berlin, ⅛c lower for wheat. Buda Pest, ⅝c lower for wheat.

Washington, Jan. 28.—By direction of the President, Rear Admiral E. B. Barry, the former commander-in-chief of the Pacific fleet, yesterday submitted his resignation "for the good of the service." DOUBLE HEADER AT THE ARENA

Fifteenth Regiment Beat the Y. M. C. A. and Lehighs Defeated the T. A. S.

At the Arena last night hockey enthusiastics were treated to a double header. The attendance was rather meagre for the two games, during the playing of which some good hockey was to be seen. The games were in connection with the City League, in which considerable interest centres. Mr. Wm. Allen was the referee for both games and he certainly was a good one. The first match was between teams representing the Y. M. C. A. and the Fifteenth Regt., and the soldier boys proved to be the better shots, winning by a score of 7 to 5. The line-up of the teams was as follows:

	—Goal—
Betts,		Wardrope,
	—Point—
Moynes,		Connolly,
	—Cover Point—

Stafford,		Wallace,
	—Left Wing—

	—Right Wing—
Alexander,		Zufelt,

The second game was between teams representing the Lehigh Athletic Club and the T.A.S. The former were victorious by a score of 7 to 2. During the progress of the game Brown at point for the T.A.S. was laid out for a few minutes owing to a clip he received over the right eye which resulted in a rather bad cut. He was able, however, to continue the game. The players and positions were as follows:

T.A.S.—		L.A.C.—
	—Goal—
Deacon,		Boland,
	—Point—

HOCKEY NOTES.

Trenton beat Cobourg Intermediates on their own ice last night 5—4, which ties Peterborough for the district.

• •

A very fast game is in prospect for Wednesday night next, when the Belleville and Picton professionals will meet here.

A correspondent writes: Everybody attending a game of hockey to-day expects the players to play a clean, gentlemanly game, but those who happened to be present and witnessed the game in the City League last evening between Lehigh and T A. S. at the Arena were unpleasantly surprised to see the great winter sport greatly demoralized by roughness of the very worst description namely slashing and that hard checking. One would think the Stanley Cup was at stake, and even if it were no such play as that demonstrated last evening would ever be tolerated The T. A. S. intend to protest the game and ask that Bedboro of the Lehighs be suspended on grounds good and sufficient to meet all the requirements of the league. The official in charge, Mr. Billy Allen, was all that could be desired, as he did his work in a very fair and impartial manner.

Trenton has protested the intermediate game played in Peterboro last Tuesday evening on the ground that Park was not eligible under the residence rule.

Preston Juniors made a great record in their district. In six games only six goals were scored against them.

The first game in the Junior City Hockey League will be played Monday evening at 5 o'clock between the Belleville Midgets and the Y. M. C. A.

HORSE AND TRACK.

TAMPA, Fla., Jan. 25.—An accident in the first race to-day resulted in the death of two of the starters, Gilvedear and Hate, and the serious injury of two jockets. CURED OF BED-WETTING BY BOOTH'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mrs. J. Tait, of Denmark St., Meaford, Ont., says:

"Our nine-year-old boy has suffered severely with kidney weakness or bed-wetting for over two years. Several remedies have been used to cure the trouble but none gave any relief until he used Booth's Kidney Pills. This medicine went right to the cause of the trouble, removed same, and to-day the boy is practically devoid of all kidney complaint. I wish all mothers knew of this excellent curative remedy and am glad that Booth's Kidney Pills were brought to my notice."

SOME CHANGES MADE IN COMMITTEES

Long Debate on the Question—Mr. Vermilyea Placed on the Finance Committee—Messrs Farrell and Maloney Added to Special Committee—Grants for Roads and Bridges in the North—Delegation for Toronto—Other Business

Friday, an. 27th, '11

MORNING SESSION.

Council resumed at ten o'clock, Warden Dryden in the chair.

The report of the special committee to select the standing committees for the year was discussed at some length.

Mr. White thought a change could be made in the Finance Committee and he would like Mr. Vermilyea's name substituted in place of his own

Mr. Vermilyea did not desire to be on that committee or any other committee. He had been chairman of that committee for a number of years and it had been an arduous task.

Mr. Hubble desired that his name be struck out of the Finance Committee and Mr. Vermilyea's name substituted instead.

Mr. Kirk was of the opinion that if either Mr. White or Mr. Hubble wished to resign in place of Mr. Vermilyea it should be done.

The report was amended so as to substitute Mr. Vermilyea's name in place of Mr. Hubble's.

Mr. Cook suggested that Mr. Farrell, Reeve of Madoc Township, and Mr. Maloney, Reeve of Marmora, be added to the special committee on bridge construction.

The suggestion proposed by Mr Cook was adopted.

ROADS AND BRIDGES.

Mr. Ketcheson, chairman of a special committee presented a report that the following grants for roads and bridges be made to the northern municipalities for 1911 :

Limerick	$300
Mayo,	$300.
Carlow	$300.
Faraday	$300.
Dunganonn	$300.
Bangor, et al,	$450
Monteagle & Herschel,	$450.
Tudor & Cashel,	$450.
Bancroft Village	$300.
Total	$3,300.00.
Grant last year	2,687.50.
Increase	612.50.

The above increase is made with the understanding that the municipalities will take advantage of the Provincial Act respecting colonization road and pass by-laws in their respective municipalities in conformity of the Act.

The report was adopted.

Moved by Mr. Mather, seconded by Mr. McLellan, that Messrs. Cook Douglas, Nugent and Netterville be and are hereby appointed a delegation to interview the local members for North Hastings and the Provincial Government re. special Government grant for bridges in Limerick Wicklow, McClure, and Wollaston now requiring special aid for repairs or construction, and also the committee to express to the members of the Legislature the views of this County Council re. Bill No. 81, known as the Hoyle Bill.—Carried.

MOTIONS.

Mr. Vermilyea moved, seconded by Mr. Sills, that the mileage of the Sheriff for services of the jury panel be fixed at $84.50.—Carried.

On motion moved by Mr. Vermilyea seconded by Mr. Sills: the G. T. R. was requested to build a tight board fence on the county road at Corbyville near their track.

Moved by Mr. Ketcheson, seconded by Mr. White, that Messrs. Mather, Cook,, Dryden, Nugent, Clarke and Tummon be a committee to ascertain what changes are necessary to the Act to make the county acquire Crown lands for the purpose of re-forestation and conservation of natural resources and report at the special meeting of the council in April.—Carried.

Mr. Hanley moved, seconded by Mr. 'McLaren, that the superintendent of roads and bridges, the chairman of roads, and the chairman of the special bridge committee, be a committee to inspect a bridge over Parks' Creek, in the 6th concession of Tyendinaga, known as Baldrick's bridge, with a view to deciding whether said bridge should be assumed by the county and report at special meeting of the council in April —Carried.

The question of re-forestration was discussed by Messrs. Ketcheson, Mather, Clarke, and Ingalls, all of whom spoke of the necessity of the county taking an active part in this matter.

Mr. Cook moved, seconded by Mr Sills, that this council disappdove of the proposed Hoyle Bill re. bridges and respectfully ask the members for Hastings county to urge upon the Legislature that no change be made in the Act relative to county bridges.

The motion was carried after Messrs. Cook and Kirk had spoken against the proposed Bill. It would mean a great expense to the county if the bill passed.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The Ways and Means Committee resumed, Mr. Tummon in the chair

Mr. Grant moved, seconded by Mr Kells, that the Tweed School Board receive a special grant of $400 on account of continuation classes being in the school.

Mr. Kirk moved, seconded by Mr Farrell, in amendment that the grant be $300.

Mr. H. J. Clarke, School Inspector presented statistics showing what the County and Government grants were to schools where continuation work is done in schools.

Mr. Vermilyea said that whilst we should be fair we should go slow in this matter, and he suggested that the matter be laid over until the Government report for 1910 is sent out and the proportion of the county grant can then be computed.

After some discussion the amendment prevailed.

The committee arose and reported and asked leave to sit again.—Granted.

Council adjourned until 2 o'clock.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

demands on the common energy-fund, continuously depriving other parts of a healthy functioning power. Thus we can readily see that organs can be diseased without the cause being in them or their governing nerve centers.

Of all organs in the body, the eyes are most capable of demanding and getting an excessive share of the general fund of nerve-energy from the human power-house, for the following reasons:

1. The feeling of vision is the most acute of all the senses, because it is actively aroused by one of the most imponderable elements known to science—light. By the impact of its delicate waves our consciousness is made to feel shape, motion and color. Its rays, reflected from various objects, pass through the cornea, the aqueous humor, the crystalline lens, the vitreous body,

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

VIEWS OF THE PRESS

All Agree That Scope of Tariff Scheme Is Staggering.

Manufacturers Are Ill-Pleased With the Result and See Peril to the National Spirit In Canada—Trade Will Be North and South, Says Flavelle—Hard Blow for Implement Makers.

Toronto, Jan. 28.—That the abolition of duty on wheat will mean that the Canadian farmer will get 4c. or 5c. less per bushel, instead of more, is the opinion of Hedley Shaw, president of the Maple Leaf Milling Co.

Mr. Shaw added: "The new regulation will mean that we will have competition in new markets, which we were just building up. The markets most affected are the Indian and South African markets. The United States are placed on the same plane as the Canadian dealers in competing for this trade if they get free Canadian wheat.

E. C. Drury, president of the Dominion Grange, said:

"We are well pleased with the arrangement as far as it goes. We would like a little more, and we will continue on our way until we get what we are after.

"I think the duty on flour should have been removed entirely."

J. W. Flavelle, speaking for the packing industry, said:

"I fear the packing industry will receive a blow of so serious a character that the industry will probably not survive it. The United States packer treats his export trade to Great Britain as an opportunity to dispose of a negligible surplus. He has also treated the trade of the western provinces of Canada in the same way. The Ontario and Quebec packers will find themselves completely cut off from all the trade in the western provinces.

"If the proposals are approved, this interprovincial trade in these food products will cease. Western cattle will be marketed in Chicago in place of Toronto and Montreal. The cured hog products consumed west of the great lakes will be imported from Chicago and western United States packing points. The eggs, poultry and dairy products required for the west will be supplied from Chicago and other western producing centres. The immediate effect will be to create north and south trading conditions in place of east and west."

Local coal dealers seem unanimous in saying that the reduced tariff on slack coal will not materially affect the situation.

That eggs and fruit will be cheaper in Toronto seems the belief of commission houses. It is stated that the price of the former will be regulated by the price in New York and Chicago, where Canada's surplus will go. Cold storage eggs in Chicago are going at 17 cents a dozen, and if this arrangement had been in force they would have been the same price here.

Cement dealers say the change will not affect the price of cement materially.

Automobile manufacturers also remark, "never touched us."

S. N. Waldie of the Victoria Harbor Lumber Co. said:

"I think that the reduction will give us a better market for our lower class lumber. I don't think prices will be affected, though."

Diversity In Montreal.

Montreal, Jan. 28.—Very few of the papers have made straight pronouncements on the tariff question.

La Patrie is afraid of the result, and finds it strange that the Government should completely change the country's fiscal policy, while we are enjoying so great a measure of prosperity.

The Herald is surprised at the scope of the arrangement, and believes that the days of high protective walls are gone for ever.

The Star evidently thinks that it is the thin edge of the free trade wedge, saying: "The Liberal party in days gone by was accused of annexation proclivities, but it has lived down that name, and has proven its loyalty to the Empire in more ways than one. All loyal Canadians will hope that the Liberal party is not entering on a misguided unpatriotic course. Its advent to power, although provocative of wild alarm at the time, has been proven to have been a good thing for the country, through the destruction of adventurous and visionary schemes for gaining power. Surely it is not going back.

A Sincere Effort.

Ottawa, Jan. 28.—The Ottawa Citizen says: "The reciprocity terms submitted by Mr. Fielding appear to be the result of a sincere effort on the part of both Canada and the United States to arrive at a mutual understanding in regard to many articles of every day use and necessity.

The Evening Journal says that beyond doubt a good stroke of business has been done for Canada and on the lines of Sir John Macdonald's standing offer of reciprocity.

"The unexpected has happened. The United States executive has met us half way about food and raw materials, and said practically nothing about manufactures. The acceptance by the United States Cabinet of such an agreement is, frankly speaking, a staggering surprise. If Congress accepts it, an excellent thing we think will have been accomplished for this country."

No Serious Disturbance.

Winnipeg, Jan. 28.—The Telegram editorially says:

"There is not likely to be any wild outburst of resentment or ecstasy in any part of Canada over the reciprocity arrangement. On close study it reveals no semblance of fiscal convulsion, or even of serious fiscal disturbance."

The Free Press says that the people of Canada as a whole will be well satisfied with the conclusions which have been reached.

Fielding Taken In.

London, Ont., Jan. 28.—The Advertiser describes the agreement as a triumph for the Canadian farmers, tempered by the fear that it will not survive in Congress. The favors to Canada have been strong, from the necessities of the Taft administration. The concessions by Canada do not expose a very wide front to the attack of Canadian manufacturers.

The Free Press says:

"What is the broad meaning of the trade proposal? Does the speech of the Minister of Finance give a clue, and is not that clue that the Minister has been overwhelmed at Washington by influences that are not in keeping with the spirit of our people, which is to build up upon this northern half of the American continent a nation that shall be a part of the great British Empire. Here a trade advantage and there a trade loss, but in the aggregate our national wealth thrown open to the despoiler, that he may preserve his own, our manufacturing interests disturbed at the entering of the wedge of free trade with a nation of specialized industries, and a general unsettling of the business that is based upon an agreement which has no greater stability than that either party to it may terminate it at will."

Hamilton Opinion.

Hamilton, Jan. 28.—The Times says: "Parliament and Congress are not bound either by treaty or convention; the changes must stand on the merit of their general reciprocal benefit if they stand at all. Canada's policy of imperial preference is carefully guarded, and the reciprocity arrangement does not impair that policy."

The Spectator says:

"It is well-known that in the United States conditions have reached or about reached that stage where in the matter of food products the country is ready to cease exporting and begin importing. The question is what has Canada gained by assenting to a free trade condition when the United States must in a short time be compelled in self interest to remove food duties."

Calls It a Triumph.

Halifax, Jan. 28.—The Chronicle (Liberal), the only paper that comments on the reciprocity announcement yesterday morning, calls it "Fielding's master stroke," and says:

"Taken as a whole the reciprocity measure is a great, even a remarkable achievement. The concessions by Canada in the tariff reductions, in return for the enormous advantage of a free market for her natural products, are not important. Sir Wilfrid Laurier told the manufacturers' delegation that he believed that a reciprocity agreement could be concluded which would be mutually advantageous, without doing injury to any Canadian interests."

A Good Bargain.

St. John, N.B., Jan. 28.—The Telegraph (Liberal) says:

"The best news from Ottawa since the British preference beyond question. So good is the proposed bargain from the standpoint of every important Canadian interest, that our own Parliament will adopt it by a decisive majority."

The Times (Liberal) says:

"The Maritime Provinces will be especially benefited by a wider free market for natural products."

COCHRANE FIRM.

He Says Ontario's Pulp Policy Will Be Unchanged.

Toronto, Jan. 28.—No doubt need be entertained in regard to the attitude of the Ontario Government with respect to their pulp wood policy. The following is an authoritative statement of the Government's position:

The proposed free interchange of pulpwood, pulp and the coarser grades of paper, which is subject to the consent of the several Canadian provinces interested, is not likely to find favor with the Government of the Province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Cochrane, Minister of Lands, Forests and Mines, left for Sarnia with Hon. Mr. Hanna at noon yesterday to address a meeting last night. Mr. Cochrane was asked as he was leaving if he could say what the position of the Government of Ontario would be on the matter:

"It has not yet been considered or discussed by the Government," said Mr. Cochrane, "but I may say personally that I would be strongly opposed to any change in our existing policy. For three years past, in all pulp concessions advertised by the crown, we have imposed the condition that the pulp should be manufactured into paper in Canada. My own view is that this is the proper course to pursue if we are to develop the natural resources of our back districts as we hope to see them develop. In justice to the industrial possibilities of our great north country, and in the interests of the settler, for whom we desire to provide local markets, I could not recommend any other course."

It will be remembered that previous to three years ago the conditions governing the disposal of pulp concessions permitted the manufacture into pulp only or pulp or paper. As a result paper matte could be taken across the line and finished into paper in American factories.

According to corridor reports the time the Provincial Secretary will introduce his bills amending the liquor license act, will depend on the attitude of Government supporters at the coming caucus.

Hon. W. J. Hanna's proposal of last session to wipe out the local boards of license commissioners and create a central license board in their stead will be put before them. It is thought no action will be taken by the Government on this matter till next session, just before the general election. The amendments of the liquor act this session will be for better enforcement of the regulations that now exist, particularly in regard to local option.

Typhoid Epidemic.

Ottawa, Jan. 28.—There are nearly 300 cases of typhoid in Ottawa. All the city hospitals are full. An emergency hospital has been established in the old museum building, the militia department furnishing beds for patients.

There have been eight deaths from the disease to date.

HUGHES TWITS EDITOR

He Makes Merry at Expense of Rev. J. A. Macdonald.

Is Taking Two Salaries One From The Globe and One From an American Society—Mr. Lewis (West Huron) Introduces a Measure Restricting the Sale of Firearms—Tariff Discussion Next Week.

Ottawa, Jan. 28.—Col. Sam Hughes (Victoria) precipitated some amusement in the House of Commons yesterday just as the estimates were called, by an attack on J. A. Macdonald, editor of The Globe. Some of the colonel's phrases were well turned, and gave expression to a political vendetta that has existed for years between himself and the editor of the Liberal organ.

Col. Hughes declared that the editor of The Globe was accepting two salaries, one of $2,500 per year, from a Mr. Ginn in Boston, as propagandist for the peace society, and the other as a Canadian newspaper editor. Mr. Macdonald's campaign was to encourage trade north and south, not to stimulate trade within the Empire. He had gone to Washington and brought about the state of affairs now revealed in the reciprocity negotiations.

Mr. Lewis (West Huron) has a bill on the order paper prohibiting the sale of deadly weapons except under license. He arose to draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to the importance of this matter, and quoted almost all the Montreal papers of a week back to show that several crimes in Canada, and especially in Montreal, could be traced to the indiscriminate selling of revolvers, stilettos and daggers of all kinds.

In conclusion the member from Huron asked the Minister of Justice either to make his bill a Government one to amend it, to change it, or to introduce new legislation, anything, in fact, that the end desired that life should not be needlessly sacrificed should be attained.

When the House met, a motion was passed arranging for the printing of the fisheries arrangement protocol, which was laid on the table by Mr. Brodeur.

Mr. Borden asked the Prime Minister when the matter of the new United States tariff would be discussed.

Sir Wilfrid said the exact day was uncertain, but it would be some time in the coming week.

An order-in-council has been passed fixing the pay of medical officers of the navy. Surgeons on entry are to receive $4.50 a day; after four years' service, $5.50 a day. Staff-surgeons on promotion are to get $6.50, and after four years $7.50 per day.

A Stabbing Affray.

Porcupine City, Jan. 28.—Two Syrians engaged in a stabbing affray at Kelso Mines last Tuesday, and one man known as Metta Sweva lies in a hospital down the country with a broken leg and many bad wounds on the body, which may yet prove fatal, while the other one, bleeding and badly wounded, took to the woods to avoid arrest.

Dispute arose over stage matters, and a quarrel ensued. Knives were drawn and fierce slashes made, Sweva being stabbed several times about the head and shoulders, while his antagonist was struck on the arms.

Sweva slipped as the result of unsound footing, and his foe took advantage of the fall and jumped on him with heavily booted feet. His right leg was broken.

Only occasionally does a fight of this character mar the peace and happiness of the district.

Threw Him Over Bridge.

Pembroke, Ont., Jan 28.—A fight that took place the other night proved to be fatal for one of the parties concerned.

It appears that two young fellows, Wright and St. Denis, met on the Indian River bridge and started a friendly conversation. In the course of it St. Denis asked Wright for a chew of tobacco. The latter refused and matters were complicated. In the quarrel that followed Wright took hold of his adversary and without further preliminaries, it is alleged, threw him over the railing of the bridge on the ice below, with the result that St. Denis died from the injuries sustained within 24 hours.

Wright will likely have to face a charge of manslaughter.

Veteran Clergyman Dead.

Thetford, Jan. 28.—Rev. Hector Currie, for thirty-five years pastor of the Thetford and Ravenswood Presbyterian congregations, died suddenly Thursday of heart failure. He was born in Argyleshire, Scotland, in 1846, and came to Canada when a boy. Mr. Currie was moderator and secretary of the Sarnia Presbytery over twenty years.

For Assaulting a Woman.

Niagara Falls, Jan. 28.—Geo. Hawkins, hotel clerk, was fined $35 by Judge Wells yesterday, when he pleaded guilty to assaulting a young woman here last week. A petition of several hundred names was presented asking for leniency, and the charge was reduced to that of common assault from a more serious one.

Aged Woman Drops Dead.

Toronto, Jan. 28.—Mrs. Mary Moore, 75 years old, droped dead yesterday afternoon in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Wm. Balsam, 238 Niagara street. She had been ailing from a complicatio nof diseases.

Another Convention.

Nashville, Tenn., Jan. 28.—The Sunday school council of the Evangelical denominations in session here to-day decided to hold the next national council at Toronto. The date will be decided on later.

DRURY AND RUSSELL.

They Debate Tariff Question in Joint Meeting.

Beaverton, Jan. 28.—A detachment of upwards of 100 manufacturers from Toronto, led by Thomas A. Russell, stormed the Grange citadel defended by E. C. Drury, president of the Dominion Grange, and on the floor of the Town Hall here, was fought the battle of the tariff.

Mr. Drury was allowed forty-five minutes and Mr. Russell followed for fifty minutes. Then Mr. Drury was given fifteen minutes for reply and Mr. Russell closed the debate with a speech of ten minutes. After the meeting the Toronto contingent returned via special N.C.R. train. Mr. Russell, in opposition, ably championed the cause of protection from the viewpoint of both the farmer and the manufacturers. Both speeches were given an attentive hearing, and as the decision as to the winner was left to the audience, and as the audience was not called upon to express its opinion, the result was left in doubt.

"I believe in manufacturing in Canada," said Mr. Drury. "Canada is a country of many and varied resources. Agriculture is necessary for the development of them all.

Nor did Mr. Druray stand, he said, as an unqualified free-trader. He believed there might be such a thing as wisely directed protection. When there was a disposition to organize a fully-developed foreign competition protection might be extended to an industry which could not be maintained in the face of that competition. But if so, that protection should be extended for a definite period only.

He maintained, however, that protection was not for the advantage of the nation as a whole, but that the tariff was generally working to the disadvantage of the farmers, and was sure that it would injure the whole nation. Further, Mr. Drury argued that he was "not opposed to a tariff for revenue. That is ecessary. But we do not pretend to say that our tariff is one for revenue." The basis of taxation, he continued, was raw material, and industries using these raw materials should be allowed to have a tariff for revenue.

In opening his address Mr. Russell said that his ambition had been not to have the manufacturer and the farmer fight each other as foes, but to meet on common ground as friends interested in each other's welfare. He had no desire to become the champion of one class. He admonished them not to overlook the wage-earning class.

The Canadian market was just as valuable to the farmer as that of the United States was shown (1) by present prices in many lines of produce being higher here than across the line; (2) in that a change of fiscal policy would have an adverse effect upon national transportation routes and national development, and (3) the transitory nature of a bond between Canadian and United States markets.

INFLUX OF MONEY.

British Elections Said to Be Responsible For It.

Montreal, Jan. 28.—An enquiry at the leading banks elicited the fact that not only have large sums of money come over to Canada since the last general election in Great Britain, when Lloyd-George and his fiscal policy were sustained by the people of the United Kingdom as a whole, but that the recent succession tax of the State of New York has also been the means of switching a good deal of American capital to the Canadian side as a result of the imposition of a tax amounting to a quarter of a man's fortune, supposing he is worth over a million dollars. The New York act gives to the state five per cent. on the first $25,000, ten per cent. on the next $75,000, fifteen per cent. on the next $400,000, and last, but not least, twenty per cent. on the following $500,000, out of a man's or woman's earthly possessions supposing the deceased's securities belong to the State of New York.

In other words, if a man dies worth a million dollars the sum of $250,000 goes to the State Exchequer.

There is no way of avoiding the payment of the succession taxes unless they are stocks of corporations created by the law of a state which does not impose succession taxes like, for instance, the State of Pennsylvania.

It is not at all surprising, therefore, as announced at the money centres Thursday, that the New York succession tax and the latest creations of the Imperial Chancellor, have both contributed to bring a great amount of money into Canada during the last two months.

It is stated, however, that the greater the amount of money being sent to Canada from Great Britain, the more cautious has become the British investor. Some months ago the bankers say a good deal of capital found its way to the Dominion without the merit of the cases being too closely enquired into, but that is not the case at the present time, and such a change will be all the better in the long run for the credit of the country at large.

A great many interesting enquiries, for instance, are daily reaching this city, and the story is the same at all the important banking institutions of the Dominion, for first-class bond issues of assured industrial concerns.

It looks, therefore, as if this inflow will be continued during the present year, and probably more money will flow into the different provinces before the end of the present year than during any twelve months since Confederation. This is, in fact, the opinion of people who have given a great deal of study to the financial situation on both sides of the Atlantic.

A Good Year.

Brockville, Jan. 28.—At yesterday afternoon's meeting of the County Council the good roads commission presented a report covering the past year's operations. Roads and bridges rebuilt entailed an outlay of $29,395. The commissioners suggested that the council petition the Minister of Public Works for Ontario for $9,798, being one-third of the total expenditure which is due the counties under the highway improvement act.

MAY GO TO DEMOCRATS

Taft Will Not Brook Opposition on Tariff Proposals.

If His Own Party Throws Out the Measure He Will Have No Hesitation In Taking It Before the Democrats, Who Will Be In Power In House of Representatives, Says Friend Who Should Know.

Washington, Jan. 28.—Snags began to loom up in the pathway of the Canadian reciprocity agreement before it had been in Congress twenty-four hours, and confident predictions of its failure were made by pillars of the protective faith. It was said that even should the House accept the terms of the arrangement it could not pass the Senate.

These dire prophesies were carried to the White House by members who visited the President, but Mr. Taft received them with smiles, which indicated that one defeat would not turn him from his purpose. If his own party fails to seize the opportunity and the credit of putting in operation this reciprocal trade pact, the President, it is believed, will not hesitate to submit his program to the Democrats.

One man in the confidence of the President came from the White House last night with the declaration that the proposed Canadian arrangement would not die an easy death so long as Mr. Taft was in the White House.

"The President was never more in earnest in his life," he said. "He would not hesitate to call an extra session if he thought such a course would do the business."

President Taft believes the mutual concessions arranged by the U. S. and Canada promise a great humanitarian movement that ultimately would mean a material reduction in the cost of living. He believes that, even if the promised reductions are not at once apparent, the very presence of this document in Congress will prove a deterrent force against continued advancement in the price of foods.

Wants a Recount.

Kingston, Jan. 28.—T. J. Rigney, barrister, on behalf of F. R. Leslie of Hinchinbrook Township, made application before Judge Price for a scrutiny of the ballots cast in the recent local option vote in that township. The petitioner testified that there had been grave irregularities in connection with the vote. People had cast ballots who had no right to do so. Local option carried by five votes over the sixty per cent. required. Judge Price decided to hold a scrutiny of the ballots on Feb. 2.

ADVICE ON CANADA

A London Paper Issues a List of "Dont's" for the Use of Intending Emigrants

"Tit-Bits" publishes a column of "Don'ts" for intending emigrants. Here are a few of them:

Generally speaking, the cost of living in the Colonies is higher than in this country, although the wages are better.

Don't pay premiums in this country to gain instruction in farming in Canada. The Canadian Government says it is unnecessary, and in many instances the payments are induced by fraudulent statements.

Don't forget that any emigrant who, within three years of landing in Canada, becomes a public charge, or an inmate of a jail, hospital, or other charitable institution, may be deported, with those dependent on him or her.

Farm and railway work is discontinued, to a great extent, in the winter in Canada, and it is now a bad time of the year to go out there unless assured of employment. In the latter case farm laborers and female servants need have sufficient travelling money only.

Don't forget that all emigrants landing in Canada between March 1st and October 30th must possess $26 and every child $13 each. Between November 1st and the last day of February, the amount is increased to $52 and $26 respectively, in addition to sufficient travelling money.

Clerks are not wanted in Canada, for the simple reason that merchants and business men are not willing to take the trouble of training them. There is a great difference between the coinage and the banking in this country and in Canada. In regard to office work, it usually takes from six to twelve months to get into the proper run of things.

A knowledge of languages will be found exceedingly useful to those going to Canada and South America. In the latter case Spanish is a useful language to learn. In many Canadian towns, like Montreal, for instance, the French language is spoken by half the population, in addition to which there are many Italians, Russians, Swedes, etc. In the business portion of the community the Scotch, English, and French predominate.

In New South Wales, South Australia, and Queensland there is a general demand for working men, such as stonemasons, carpenters, blacksmiths, fitters, moulders, and boilermakers; but in Victoria no emigrants are wanted except farmers with capital and experienced farm laborers. In New Zealand, too, there is a good demand for farm laborers, particularly at the present time, which is the summer season. There is a good demand also for women and girls in the dressmaking, millinery, tailoring, shirt-making, and confectionery trades.

ROYAL HOUSEHOLD

The King and Queen Make Several Appointments, Including a Position for Lady Minto

King George has just appointed Mr. Montague Eliot to be a Gentleman Usher in the Royal Household, so that Mrs. Eliot, who was Miss Helen Post, will be seen much about the Court next season. Mr. Eliot was given the post in the last reign, just before King Edward's death, but his reappointment has come as a pleasant surprise to his friends. The Hon. Sidney Greville, a brother of Lord Warwick, who was Groom-in-Waiting to King Edward, has not been offered the post by King George. Mr. Greville will devote himself to the Court of Queen Alexandra. The two new Grooms-in-Waiting are Mr. Harry Varney, and Captain Phillip Hunloke, who is a well-known yachtsman, and was a friend of King George in the old days in the Navy. Queen Mary has taken a very long time to complete her household. The three new Ladies-of-the-Bedchamber are Lady Minto, wife of the ex-Viceroy of India, Lady Ampthill, and Lady Desborough, the last named being one of the most charming and exclusive of hostesses in the country and the wife of the splendid athlete and sportsman who was formerly known as Mr. W. H. Grenfell. The new Maids of Honor, who will not have to work so hard as their predecessors in Queen Victoria's time, are Miss Sybil Broderick, Miss Venetia Baring, of banking fame, Miss Katherine Villiers, who is a descendant of King William IV., and Miss Mabel Cye, a niece of the Hon. Alexander Nelson Hood, the Queen's private secretary.

NOT KEEN FOR WIRELESS

No Ready Response to the Call for Operators

The Postmaster-General's invitation in a recent Post Office circular asking telegraphists to volunteer for service in the wireless establishment has not met with the ready response that was generally anticipated. This has occasioned surprise. True, only a few men were required, and the maximum offered was only $14; but bearing in mind the fact that wireless telegraphy may be said to be yet in comparative infancy, it might have been thought that a far-seeing body of men would have considered the possibilities of advancement in the service. Apart from the question of salary, there is the experience to be gained in a new branch of work, which should in itself be some consideration. As a rule, those who associate themselves with a movement in its infancy become leaders as that movement advances, therefore those few telegraphists who have responded to the Postmaster-General's call are not likely to regret the step they have taken. In the natural order of things, when the wireless establishment expands, the prospects of those who were first in the service will undoubtedly widen.

QUEEN MAUD OF NORWAY

A GREAT WORKER

Viscount Gladstone Retains his Youth by Performing his Duties With Cheerfulness

Lord Gladstone, the Governor-General of the Union of South Africa, is not nearly such a "young politician" as many people imagine, for he is in his 58th year. To look at him one would not take him for a day over 40—a youthfulness which may be attributed to the whole-hearted way in which he enters into his duties as well as pleasures. Until the time of the Armenian atrocities Viscount Gladstone was teaching history at Keble College, but his strong sympathy with the suffering Christians of the East caused him to seek election to the House of Commons, in which he sat for 30 years. No man could get through more dry official papers and statistics and assimilate them with greater promptitude than he. He once told a West Ham meeting that he would like to give work not only to all at West Ham, but to a good many in the West End as well. He was asked if he liked work himself. "I guess," he plied, "that I have done as much work as you in my time. If you care to shoulder a pick, a spade, or an axe I am willing to compete with you. Probably the heckler would have been severely defeated, for, like his father, Viscount Gladstone is a firm believer in exercise.

WILL BE A HOSTESS

Mrs. David Beatty is Having a Fine Old Mansion Re-Decorated and Adorned

Mrs. David Beatty, the only daughter of the late Marshall Field, of Chicago, will be one of the principal hostesses in London during the Coronation year. Her residence near Regent's Park is a fine old mansion, standing in its own spacious grounds, with all the quiet and charm of the country, and yet within ten minutes by automobile of the heart of fashionable Mayfair.

The house is being remodelled, redecorated, and brought up to date. The gardens are beautifully laid out. In the reception room has been hung a rare collection of paintings by old masters, which her husband inherited.

At a recent dinner party they had among their guests, Mrs. Ava Astor, the Duchess of Marlborough; the Duchess' aunt, Mrs. Tiffany, who is about to return to her home in Paris; Mrs. Clarkson Potter, Lady Ripon, and Mrs. Winston Churchill.

JUSTIN McCARTHY AT HOME

Eighty Years of Age, He Continues Literary Work

The popular author of "The History of Our Own Times," and the quondam Irish leader, is passing the evening of life in a pleasant villa at Folkestone.

"I arrived at the house just as Mr. McCarthy was returning from his morning bath-chair ride along the Leas," says a writer. "On November 22 he was eighty years of age, but his face is fresh and ruddy, and though his movements are slow and measured, he carries that fine, noble head of his well thrown back as of yore, and his figure is smart and upright."

Mr. McCarthy has continued his library work while in retirement, bringing his famous history up to date, writing Lives of Sir Robert Peel, Pope Leo XIII., and Mr. Gladstone, and publishing some entertaining volumes of reminiscences.

ANARCHISTS AND THEIR DOCTRINE

Questions Raised by the Houndsditch Affair—Raise Money by Fair Means or Foul

What are they striving for? What do they hope to gain by committing wholesale crimes? These questions have probably occurred to the minds of many readers since the amazing battle with Anarchists which the London police recently fought in the East-end. There are many aspects of Anarchism, which have been voluminously dealt with by a number of writers; but there is one idea common to all Anarchists, namely, that government of man by man constitutes oppression, and is an interference with freedom. Anarchists desire liberty for all men. They object to any regular government, and they object to any man possessing more land or capital than another. The latter should, they say, be the common property of society, at the disposal of everyone.

The following resolutions, drawn up at an Anarchist meeting some time ago, at which were present delegates from Anarchist societies in all parts of the world, explain the extraordinary aims and objects of Anarchists:—

"Destruction of the existing class rule by any means.

"Establishment of a free society, based upon co-operative organization of production.

"Free exchange of equivalent products by and between the productive organizations, without commerce and profitmongery.

"Equal rights for all, without distinction of sex or race.

"Regulation of all public affairs by free contracts between the autonomous (independent) communes and associations, resting on a federalistic basis."

Father of Anarchism

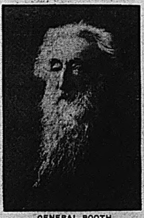
It is, in order to bring about this state of society, that Anarchists form their societies and their clubs and publish newspapers all over the world, persevering in their propaganda work in spite of the efforts of Governments to suppress them.

It is an error, however, to suppose that all Anarchists are of that extreme type who seek to attain their aims by spreading terrorism by assassination. There are moderates as well as extremists, who, in a quiet and unostentatious way, spread the teachings of Proudhon, the famous French Socialist and acknowledged father of Anarchism, who died in 1865. There are about fifty genuine Anarchist journals in existence at the present time, but not more than a dozen of these openly preach a doctrine of violence, the majority contenting themselves with denunciations of government and bureaucracy.

Audacious and Fearless

Concerning Anarchist newspapers, it might be mentioned that London has for the last few years been the headquarters of several Anarchist publications, which are printed for circulation in many other countries besides England. In countries like Spain and Portugal the fearlessness and audacity of Anarchists are strikingly illustrated by the fact that on the anniversary of the murder of King Carlos and his son busts of the murderers were placed on the graves of the two assassins, the celebrations being organized by a leading Anarchist newspaper. In Portugal the Anarchists openly flout the authorities, and it was the campaign of their newspapers which had a great deal to do with the revolution in Portugal which dethroned King Manuel.

Money is not lacking amongst Anarchists, but there are times when funds run short, and they are prevented from carrying on their work. And if they cannot obtain money by fair means they resort to foul, as in the case of the Houndsditch affair.—Tit-Bits.



GENERAL BOOTH

The visit which General Booth paid to Birmingham was the commencement of an energetic year, to which, despite the approach of his eighty-second birthday, he is looking forward with pleasure. Although no decision has yet been taken, this veteran religious organizer hopes in the autumn to pay his sixth visit to Canada and the United States, where a series of lectures will be delivered if the proposal materializes. Previous to that, however, and following a brief sojourn at Stratford-on-Avon, the General will go to Ireland, and after a rest he will undertake a tour in France and Italy of about four weeks.

A NARROW ESCAPE

It Is Effected For Another by an American Girl

By KATHLEEN J. M'CURDY

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Miss Helen Armstrong, an American girl, traveling between London and Paris, having crossed the channel from Dover, entered a railway compartment at Calais. There were two other persons in the compartment, both of whom got out at the first station. A man came along looking into the compartments and, seeing that there was plenty of room in the one occupied by Miss Armstrong, entered and settled himself in a seat. The guard closed and locked the door, and the train steamed on.

An hour would elapse before the train would stop again, during which the girl must remain locked in with a strange man. The train had not been five minutes away from the station when the man said in French:

"Mademoiselle, I'll trouble you for your clothes."

Helen understood French, but did not understand what he meant by asking for her clothes.

"I'll trouble you for your clothes," he repeated and at the same time began to divest himself of his coat. By this time Helen comprehended what was wanting.

"Monsieur," she said, "in my suit case on the rack you will find a costume. Can you not use that?"

"It will simplify matters very much," he replied. "I intended not only to put on your clothes, but to compel you to put on mine. In that case there would have been many chances more of the discovery of my identity through the discovery of yours. Pardon me, mademoiselle."

He reached for the suit case. Helen handed him the key, and, removing a dress, he proceeded to put it on over his own clothes. There was also a felt hat in the case with a veil about the crown. The man put on the hat and arranged the veil so that it could be pulled down over his face.

"There," he said as he leaned back in his seat. "I think I will do."

Instead of being hard featured, as would be supposed from his action, he was refined looking and spoke with a voice as well modulated as if he were asking a lady to dance. He was about thirty years old, his eyes were a mild blue and his hair of that very light hue which bespeaks northern physical heritage. He was not a Frenchman, for he spoke the language with a foreign accent. But whatever prepossessing there was about him was lost on Helen, who was burning with indignation. Gradually she gathered courage to say:

"You may kill me, but I shall inform the guard of this as soon as he comes again."

"I will not kill you, and you will not inform upon me."

She looked at him for an explanation.

"On the end of your suitcase are the letters H. A., Cincinnati. That is a city, if I mistake not, of the United States. You Americans are all liberty loving. I am concealing myself not from justice, but from injustice. My life work is to make my country as free as America."

This put an entirely different construction on the matter. Where Helen had seen the expression of a criminal she now saw that of a martyr.

"Tell me your story," she said.

"It is the story of all or at least the most of us. I am of the nobility of Russia. My father is one of those who are near to the czar and does his will. If I am taken it will be that father's duty to send his son to Siberia. You Americans know what that is, confinement, tyrannical treatment, in a frozen climate till the prisoner's only recourse is the terrible hunger strike or self starvation. From the time I was twenty I have been a revolutionist. It would take too long to catalogue the so called crimes for which I am hunted. I have treated you brusquely, I admit, but if you had the dreadful Siberian prospect before you in order to avert it you would not scruple to possess yourself of even a lady's clothes."

This was a new, a unique experience for Miss Armstrong. To hold the life of a martyr to liberty in her hand, and that martyr a refined, intellectual and handsome man, was immensely attractive to her. She at once entered into his cause with all her heart and soul.

"Tell me," she said, "how to act in case your identity is suspected."

"Treat me as your maid."

Helen shook her head. "I see I shall have to take the lead," she said. "You are not sufficiently versed in the affairs of women. No lady's maid would wear a dress like that."

The dress was too small for the man, too short, and it was impossible to hook it over the back. Besides, it was not even a traveling dress, being more fitted for afternoon or evening.

"The only article," continued the girl, "that I have large enough to cover the misfit is this loose dressing sack. Put it on, then get down my rugs from the rack and with one of them conceal the shortness of the skirt. Now put this raincoat over your shoulders without attempting to get your arms in the sleeves. There; get back in the corner. Have you a ticket? Give it to me. When the guard comes I will do the talking."

Helen never forgot the look of gratitude the man gave her or the pressure of the hand as he grasped hers impulsively. Then he leaned back in his corner, where he could best prevent the incongruities of his costume from being seen.

"I see that your ticket is to Paris," she added. "I am going there. Do you remain there?"

"No, mademoiselle. I go to Marseilles, where I hope to get a ship to your country."

"That's right; America will harbor you."

When the train reached the next station the guard punched the tickets, while the nihilist pretended to doze in his corner. As soon as the two were again locked up and on their way Helen said:

"You can't leave the train at Paris in that costume. You would attract the attention of every one. Must you be disguised?"

"The Russian embassy at Paris has a list of all Russian political fugitives and keeps persons at all stations to note arrivals and departures. These detectives have my photograph and are instructed to procure my arrest."

"Then you must be carried. When we stop again I will telegraph my father to have an invalid's chair at the train on arrival and a carriage outside. You can slip into the chair from the car door and into the carriage from the chair. Where do you propose to go from the station—to the Marseilles train?"

"How can I do that in these ill fitting clothes?"

The girl turned her thoughts to devising further plans for her protege.

"I suppose I shall have to take you to our hotel with me. I don't know what father will say, or, rather, I do know. He'll say we'll all be arrested for complicity in some crime against the government. Well, I can't help it. I must make him do as I wish him to do. You'll never get through Paris without my assistance."

"Oh, mademoiselle, I have always heard that American women are wonderful, so superior to European women, much more self reliant. There is but one class who are more remarkable, our Russian revolutionist girls."

"For self immolation no women can equal them," replied Helen.

At the next station she telegraphed her father to have a chair at the train for an invalid friend, and when the train pulled up in the station she got out and found both the father and the chair on the platform. "Ask no questions yet," she whispered and without waiting for a reply directed the attendant to wheel the chair to the car door. The nihilist, holding on his covering as best he could, the veil concealing his features, shambled into the chair and, apparently exhausted, was wheeled to the carriage. Helen got in after him, and her father followed.

"For heaven's sake, Nell," exclaimed the old gentleman, "what does this mean?"

"S-s-h, papa! I've got a live nihilist."

"A nihilist! Thank heaven you haven't got an anaconda. What are you going to do with the lady?"

"She isn't a lady, papa; she's a man."

"Thunder and guns! Are you going to send us all to Siberia?"

"No, but I'm going to send him to America."

"Oh, good gracious, Nell, you'll be the death of us before we get you home! I should have known better than to bring you."

"There's no danger whatever, my dear popsy. We've just escaped that by getting safely away from the station. We'll get a room for the gentleman at our hotel and can send him to the train tomorrow for Marseilles, whence he expects to sail for the 'land of the free and the home of the brave.'"

The nihilist understood no English, so he knew not a word of this dialogue except by the expression of the speakers. He knew by that of the father that the daughter had carried the day, but the old gentleman was trembling like a leaf.

The next morning the Moniteur contained an item stating that a Russian political prisoner who had been arrested in London and was being extradited had jumped off a train between Calais and Paris and escaped. He was tracked to a station where he was seen to board a train just starting. His follower took a rear car and endeavored to pick up the fugitive as he left the train, but the latter succeeded in eluding him.

"I must go to the American minister's at once," he said to his daughter, "confess and ask him to help us out of this dangerous position into which you have plunged us."

"Nonsense, papa. You'll do no such thing. The nihilist has gone. He took an early train."

"Did he wear the same clothes?"

"No; they were not big enough. He wore mamma's traveling suit."

"He did?"

"Yes."

"Oh, Nell, if I ever get you home I'll never be such a fool again! When he is arrested the dress will implicate the whole family."

But the fugitive was not arrested. He succeeded in reaching a Mediterranean port, where he found a vessel going to America, and got to that country in safety. Helen received a letter from him giving her full credit for having saved him from an imprisonment worse than death. "Without your clever management," he said, "I should surely have been taken."

"There, papa," said Helen after reading her father the letter; "you see how much distress you have saved a fellow being by your noble effort."

"Humph!" exclaimed the old gentleman. "I hope the thing's over. They may get on to us yet."

PLUCKY STEWARDESS

An Incident on a Passenger Steamer En Route to St. John, N.B.

R. McBride, Glasgow, relates the following story of a plucky stewardess:

"Some years ago, when serving as an assistant engineer on board a passenger steamer en route to St. John, N.B., we ran into one of those impenetrable fogs so prevalent in the Bay of Fundy. Suddenly, as if on the rocks, the ship bumped heavily several times close by where I stood in the engine-room, followed by the telegraph signal from the bridge, 'Full speed astern.' I was relived by the chief engineer, and ordered to take a good look round, and see if any excess water was rising in the bilges. Descending two or three steps to the shaft tunnel convinced me that it was, and rapidly, too, as I found myself up to the knees in sea water. After putting the pumps to work, I hastened to the stokehole, to find that the firemen on watch had already cleared out, and that the fires were burning low. On going in search of them on deck, I was just in time to notice their heads vanish down the stokehole ladder, while the voice of our stewardess was raised in angry tones, denouncing them as cowardly dogs for deserting their post at the first sign of danger. At her feet stood a partly-filled bucket of hot water, and in her hand she flourished the galley soup-ladle; and I learned that she had been liberally douching them with boiling water from the bucket on finding them preparing to clear away on one of the boats. They had evidently slunk back to work, and the risks entailed, rather than brave the biting lash of the infuriated woman's tongue and the compelling influence of the scalding water. To her timely and heroic conduct our salvation from foundering was undoubtedly due, as we all had our work cut out in bringing the ship safely to Halifax dry dock, where it was found that besides being badly strained and fractured, several plates in the ship's bottom had been broken, through which the water was rushing in."

HENNIKER HEATON

Has Four Times Declined the Honor of a Knighthood

The City of London conferred its freedom upon Mr. Henniker Heaton eleven years ago, and successive Governments have pressed a K.C.M.G. upon him. But Mr. Heaton has four times declined the honor. There is a joke in connection with Mr. Heaton's friendship with Mr. Marconi which might bear repetition. When he was made a Freeman of the City of London Mr. Marconi accompanied him, and when the latter's turn came and he received the freedom of Rome, he insisted that Mr. Heaton should return the compliment by going with him to Rome. Some little time before this Sir Benjamin Stone had photographed them together on the terrace of the House of Commons in the costumes of their respective Courts. Mr. Marconi sent a copy of this to an Italian newspaper, and the latter published it on the day Mr. Marconi received the freedom of Rome over the inscription: "Mr. Marconi and King Edward the Seventh." One of Mr. Heaton's most treasured possessions—and he only received it during his election campaign this year—is a letter from Mr. Chamberlain wishing him success. Lord Desborough has chosen the following extract from it as an inscription for Mr. Heaton's tombstone: "It has been given to few men to promote reforms independently, and to see them adopted in their own lifetime with universal approval." There is an amusing anecdote in connection with a Parliamentary chess match which the famous postal reformer got up between Great Britain and America in 1907. It was played by cable, and at one stage of the game everything pointed to the defeat of the Yankees. Realizing this, they wired "You're too good for us; we'll play you at poker!" The game, however, ended in a draw, and the offer to play poker has not been accepted.

THE KING'S TREASURES

Guarded Beyond the Hopes of the Most Daring Burglar

Special precautions were taken to safeguard the Royal treasures during their removal from Marlborough House to Buckingham Palace. Four detectives were especially detailed to guard them. These personal treasures consist of gold and silver works of art and some exquisite Dresden china, a number of valuable pictures, and a large quantity of very rare antique furniture. In addition to these valuables, there is, of course his Majesty's collection of stamps and a big library containing a number of extremely rare editions.

There is only one attempt on record in the past hundred years to burgle Buckingham Palace, which is most carefully watched night and day by the police detectives both inside and out. The private entrance used by members of the Royal Family was one evening left ajar by the Prince Consort, and almost immediately afterwards it was entered by a man who was permitted by the servant at the entrance to pass. Subsequently, the man was stopped when attempting to enter one of the private apartments and was given in charge of the police—a plan of the Palace was found on him.

It may be remembered that some years ago, when some of Queen Alexandra's collection of miniatures were sent to be reframed, four of them were stolen. They were, however, recovered very shortly afterwards. As a rule, the Royal treasures are so carefully watched and guarded that the most daring and ambitious burglar never hopes to capture them.

RUSSIAN HOLIDAYS

MAX O'RELL ON LOVE

The following are a few observations and reflections of the late Max O'Rell on men and women in love:—

Man is capable of love as earnestly as woman is, but love is not the whole business of his life, whereas it is a woman's. When a child she loves her doll, when a girl her mother, when a woman a man. She can feed on love and die of it. When a mother she loves her children. When she dies, surrounded by beloved grand-children, she may say that her life has been well filled.

I believe that a woman can love more than once. I have known widows remarry and love their second husbands with the same devotion as their first.

A man really loves once only. I knew a man under fifty who was married three times. He was a good and devoted husband to his three wives, but he never really loved but the second. If he dies suddenly, without having time to take all his precautions, the portrait of his second wife will be found on his heart.

The reason of this is that men and women love in different ways. A man loves because his whole being, heart, soul, and body, craves for a woman. A woman often gives herself to a man because it pleases her to be loved by him. For a man love is the pleasure he feels in the company of a woman; for a woman, it is the enjoyment of the pleasure she gives to a man. A woman is proud to call herself a reward, and that is why all heroes appeal to her so much.

Mirabeau was the plainest of men, with his face covered with smallpox marks, yet no man ever made so many conquests among women. Successful generals, explorers, great orators, authors, artists, singers, all appeal to women. They may not love them personally, but it affords them great pleasure to be loved by them. There is in every woman a craving for a man superior to herself, and that is why women who try to dominate men are such dismal failures.

A man likes to feel, to know, he is loved, but a woman likes to be told. You may tell her all day long. She will spend her life listening to you telling her.

Never have a sneer at a woman or at a child. Whenever you feel sarcastic exercise your talents on something else.

Never profane the words, "I love you;" they may seal the fate of a woman; but when you have uttered these three words in great earnestness, and the woman has answered with that great religious, almost sad smile that Victor Hugo called "the smile of angels;" when, in a word, she is yours, place her on a pedestal, on an altar, and worship her. The world has nothing better to offer you.

A man can cure a woman of a man. Nothing can cure a man of a woman, unless it be that woman herself.

FROM A SOUTH WINDOW

IN CANADA

"Love, Laughter and Life"

THE CANADIAN GIRL AND SPORT

Nowhere in the world is there more opportunity for young girls to enjoy either summer or winter sports than in Canada.

And nowhere are girls better fit to take part in outdoor exercise than in Canada.

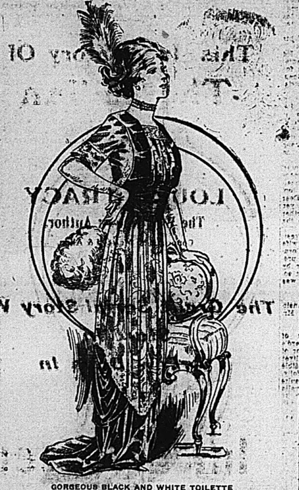
The Canadian girl who doesn't skate or snowshoe or toboggan or ride misses a great deal, not only of pleasure, but of healthful exercise that would develop her into beautiful womanhood.

The ambition of every natural girl is to be attractive, and outdoor winter sports are the best beauty medicine yet discovered.

One of the things that has increased the charm of the Canadian girl is her sensible dress. The toboggan cap, the sweater coat, and the natural form dress in general has given the young woman greater freedom and more natural grace. Whatever may be said of Fashion's decrees as to street or house costume, there is no doubt but that rational dress is the most sensible for athletics.

The young woman who fears that some young man may not be as impressed with her attractiveness in an outdoor sports costume as in a stylish outfit may rest assured that the average man likes to see easy and graceful action in skating or any other sport, and prefers that to all the feathers she could put on.

The bracing Canadian air is the only rouge a young girl should resort to, and if she takes part in outdoor sports she will not only have the red in her cheek but brightness in her mind and joy in her heart.



GORGEOUS BLACK AND WHITE TOILETTE

Truly this is a velvet season, and one sees it worked up into every sort of costume, but none are so perfectly beautiful as the evening gowns.

A stunning example is portrayed by our artist in the accompanying sketch, which shows a skirt of black panne velvet, wonderfully draped on sides and veiled with a white lace tunic. The bodice of white net and lace is trimmed with broad bands over shoulders and deep girdle of black velvet joined to them in jumper fashion.

WHAT HUSBANDS ADMIRE

Men admire in their wives the virtue of sympathy, which means a heart that is readily touched with a tale of joy or sorrow. They like intelligence, but if they can only have one or the other of the two qualities in their helpmeets, then they would generally prefer that the heart should be stronger than the brain. They above all like women who seem always to possess a continual source of sunshine in themselves, and whose faces are an index of the contented mind, which is said to be a continual feast. They like a woman to dress well, but that is not necessarily either expensively or conspicuously. They want in women companions who know enough of the world and its ways and of what is going on there to be able to talk intelligently to them of all in which they themselves are interested, and of their hopes and fears for the future, so that they may be ready with cheering words of sympathy and encouragement when they are needed.

NOT MUSICAL ENOUGH

The Queen of Roumania is passionately fond of all animals, and her palace in Roumania almost resembles a menagerie in the number of cats, dogs, and other pets that it contains. But it is of her cats that she is, perhaps, most fond. She studies them in every way, and recently said: "My insufferable typewriter makes too much noise for my cats, and since the machine is entirely unmusical I have not been willing to accustom the kittens to it. I feared that it might injure their little brains, for they are exceedingly nervous and sensitive, and are easily upset. One cannot be too careful not to irritate or offend them."

Some men never realize how valuable they are till they are sued for breach of promise.

THE "DUTCH CUT"

Has Many Advantages for the Little Girl—Good For Hair

If a girl is to have luxuriant tresses when she grows up, her hair and the scalp of her head must be cared for while she is young. It is a good plan, so mothers used to think and many think so still, to keep the little girl's hair cut short until she is seven or eight years old. There are mature women to-day whose hair is long and abundant who ascribe its healthy condition to its having been kept short for several years, sometimes, it must be said, much against the will of the little owner. Nowadays the small girl accepts the "Dutch cut" as a matter of course, being reconciled to the loss of most of her locks by the big bow which decorates the shortened remainder. Convenience and comfort have made the Dutch cut fashionable, but the fashion has a further recommendation in that it helps to keep the hair from becoming broken and strengthens the growth. If it is allowed to grow without being cut, the hair is very apt to become thin and uneven. When a child has curly hair, there is a temptation to let it grow as long as it will, but even curly hair may be improved by being cut even once in a while. It is sometimes argued that repeatedly cutting the hair tends to make it coarser, but this is the natural tendency anyway. The fine silky hair of a child would not be suitable for an adult.

"Queer, isn't it, that a lawyer should be such a lover of dogs?"

"What is there queer about it?"

"It is more natural-like for a lawyer to become attached to something more in the fee-line species."

TEMPLE BAR

Interesting History of A Structure Which Was Shifted From Fleet Street

There is some talk about bringing Temple Bar back to London. It was removed from Fleet Street rather more than thirty years ago, and re-erected at Theobald's Park, the residence of the late Lady Meux. The old city gateway was rebuilt by Sir Christopher Wren in 1670-2, after the fire. Its predecessor was "a house of timber, erected across the street, with a narrow gateway and an entry on the south side of it under the house." That structure had stood for two and a half centuries before Wren put up the stone gate known to our day. It stood, of course, at the city boundary, which, before the "house of timber" was built, was marked by posts, rails and chains. Temple Bar had to go because it was an obstruction. It has had an interesting history, though, as was said about it, it "represents little else but a gibbet." It has been suggested that it should be brought back to London and re-erected at the south end of Middle Temple Lane.

A SHREWD GIRL.

She Proved She Knew Where Power Was Best Placed.

By ELINOR STEWART CATON.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

There is a point on the Connecticut coast extending into Long Island sound called Sachem's Head, the name probably having been derived from some connection an Indian chief formerly had with the place. The shore is divided between rocks and beaches, backed by part low and part high or rather rolling ground. On the east side of the head, not far from the point, in the year 1800 stood the house of a farmer, John Cromwell.

One autumn day Cromwell was sitting on his porch smoking his pipe when he discovered out on the sound a boat being rowed toward the shore. Today that region is full of boats of all kinds, but then they were a rarity. The farmer watched the oars alternately disappear and flash in the sunlight till the boat entered the little cove before his house and ran its nose up on the beach. Then a man jumped out, pulled it farther up and advanced toward Cromwell.

The stranger was young and comely, but rather singularly dressed. His hat was big and pointed in the crown, his coat was short and flaring below, his breeches and his shoes were ornamented with large silver buckles, his hose were a dark red, while his waist was encircled by a wide belt clasped with a wider buckle than either of the other two, and in it were several pistols of an eighteenth century pattern. In short, his appearance smacked of piracy.

"Have I struck Sachem's Head?" asked the young man.

"That's what they call it," replied the farmer.

The young man looked about him as if trying to get his bearings. Presently he spoke again:

"You wouldn't mind letting me stay with you awhile, would you? I can pay for my keep."

"Where did you come from?"

"I took French leave of a ship that passed this way last night. Since then I've been hunting for Sachem's Head. I'm mighty hungry. Can't you give me something to eat? And I don't like these clothes. Let me have one of your own suits."

IT WAS FULL OF GOLD PIECES AND JEWELS.

The stranger thrust his hand down into his breast pocket and pulled out a handful of Spanish pieces of eight. The farmer cast an eager glance at the gold, went into the house, told his wife and daughter that a stranger needed a meal, then went upstairs to find him some clothes. When the young man had been fed and reclothed the farmer gave him a pipe, and they sat together on the porch for a smoke. Cromwell, being a Yankee, followed the proclivity of his race and began to question the stranger.

"Guess you've got a name, haven't you?"

"Edward Kent."

"Did you ship from the old country?"

"I did originally."

"And not in the vessel you deserted?"

"No."

"Ever been here before?"

"No."

"Then why did you try to find the place?"

"Oh, I've heard about it."

Cromwell kept up the pumping process for some time, but, not making any headway, finally gave it up. Kent agreed to pay a good price for board and gave several of the pieces of eight for the castoff suit of clothes he wore, so no objection was raised to his remaining.

The day after his arrival Ruth Cromwell, the farmer's daughter, looking out of a window, saw the stranger standing on the narrow strip of beach in front of the house. He held a bit of paper in his hand, which he would alternately consult and look at certain objects near by. The tide was out, exposing a considerable area of mud, and about a hundred yards from the beach a rock shaped like a sugar loaf was left completely bare. The stranger went down on the sand till he came to the mud, stopped, turned, sighted some object on the grounds in the rear of the house, turned again for another look at the rock, then, facing about, walked to a pine tree that stood alone.

Arrived at the pine, he again consulted the paper. He then cut a small branch, which he whittled to a point, then walked with even paces to a place where he stopped and, turning, set out at a right angle to a rock partly hidden by a clump of bushes. Then, facing the house, he walked to a point midway between the rock he had left and the house and, stooping, forced the stick he had cut into the ground. Ruth noticed that when he walked he appeared to count his steps.

The girl's curiosity was excited. She was a reticent young woman and kept what she had seen not only from her father and mother, but refrained from asking Kent, as most girls would have done, what was the meaning of his strange walks. She preferred rather to wait and watch.

From the moment she had seen the handsome stranger in his singular but becoming costume she had been greatly attracted to him. Girls living where they seldom meet a man are liable to fall easily in love, and Edward Kent in education and refinement was far above any man she had ever met. It was not long before the young man conceived as strong a preference for her as she had conceived for him. The two rowed about sometimes in the boat he had come in; but, being a heavy ship's boat, they used it only in windy weather, at other times taking a common rowboat.

It was on these trips that Edward made love to Ruth and she acknowledged her own love for him. But he told her that their marriage depended upon a certain contingency. He said he had a scheme for making a large amount of money. If he succeeded there was no reason why they should not be married at any time; if not, there would be a life of poverty for them together and it might be better that they should remain separate.

To this Ruth listened without comment, though when Edward asked her if she did not think it imprudent for them to marry with nothing to marry on she assented. But she was no talker, taking in everything that was said to her, maintaining silence as to her opinions.

It was not long after the stranger's arrival that he offered the farmer the remaining pieces of eight if he would permit him to build a log hut on his premises. He said there were noises in the house at night that prevented his sleeping. Cromwell gladly gave his consent, and Kent chose a spot in the rear of the house and near the smokehouse. It was where he had put in the stick. Having made all arrangements, he cut down timber in the forest suited to his purpose and built his cabin. When he had finished it and put a cot and a chair in it—all the furniture he needed, he said—he took the Cromwell family into it to inspect it, then locked the door, and no one of them ever after had a peep inside of it till after he had abandoned it.

Several weeks passed when one day Kent told Ruth Cromwell that he had met with a great disappointment. He also explained the mystery that had hung about him since his arrival at Sachem's Head. "I am a younger son of a country gentleman in England," he said. "A year ago I sailed from London to New York to take a position with a merchant there. On the voyage, when off Long Island, our ship was captured by pirates and every one except myself was forced to walk the plank. I pretended to a desire to follow a life of piracy and begged to be permitted to join the crew. As the captain was very ignorant of navigation and I had made a voyage for the purpose of studying it my offer was accepted. I spent months with the pirates while they intercepted Spanish ships carrying money between Mexico and Spain and afterward while they pillaged the coast east and south of New York.

"One of the crew, a better man than the rest, took a fancy to me, and when he was wounded after a fight with an armed merchantman and at the point of death told me that he and some comrades had buried a large quantity of gold and precious stones they had plundered at Sachem's Head, on the Connecticut coast. He gave me this paper, on which are directions where to find the treasure." He read:

"'Sachem's Head. Third beach east of point of rocks. Cove contains rock like sugar loaf 100 yards from beach at low tide. Apex just awash at high tide. Seventy paces west to pine tree standing alone. From pine fifty paces toward island to N. E. Turn at right angle, thirty paces to rock covered by brush. Face house, go twenty paces due east. Dig six feet.'

"A few days before I reached here the pirate ship sailed into the sound past Block island, went westward looking for ships to capture as far as New Haven, but, hearing of a war vessel, went back. While passing here at night I let myself down into a boat, cut loose and rowed ashore. I knew I was near the place I wanted, but did not know how near. You know the rest, except the denouement.

"I built my cabin over the spot where I expected to find the treasure, then dug down, filling the cabin with the earth I took out. I was doomed to disappointment. I found no treasure. If we marry we shall be doomed to a life of poverty."

"I love you so well that I prefer a life of poverty with you to living without you," said Ruth.

"In that case I yield."

"Come with me."

She led him to the smokehouse, unlocked the door, opened it, and they entered. In a corner was a sailor's locker. Ruth opened it, and it was full of gold pieces and jewels. Edward looked at her in amazement.

"I saw your maneuvers," she said, "and suspected your object. I tunneled from the smokehouse and reached the treasure ahead of you. Since our marriage depended on it, I preferred that it should be mine."

Mrs. Kent always spoke of the fortune as "my property."

Be sure you are right—but don't forget there are others.

SUGGESTIVE QUESTIONS ON SNUDAY SCHOOL LESSON

The most popular and the most practical plan for Bible study, together with a prize Bible contest, commences in the present issue of the Intelligencer. For the past thirteen weeks we have been explaining the importance of this course of Bible study, and the conditions of the contest, and urging all our readers to join our Local Club. If there are any who do not understand fully about the contest, and the prizes call at this office and it will be fully explained. In short, the Sunday School lesson must be read each week for 52 weeks beginning with lesson for Jan. 29th, also the "Suggestive Questions," and the coupon should be cut out each week and signed, certifying that this has been done. Then any five of the questions that are indicated to be answered in writing must also be answered; and at the end of the term the coupons and written answers, duly signed with name and address, must be delivered to this office. The prizes will be awarded according to the number of coupons sent in, and the merits of the written answers. You can get all the help you want with the written answers.

Substitutes are Dangerous

Beware of imitations unscrupulous dealers tell you are "just as good as" Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

These cheap concoctions are foisted on the people with the intent to deceive by dealers mindful of their profits only and caring nothing for the health of their patrons. Some go so far as to try to make you believe it is Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey.

When a remedy has been before the public for more than half a century, has been prescribed and used by the best doctors and in prominent hospitals, and has carried the blessings of health into as many thousands of homes as Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey has, imitations are bound to arise. But they can imitate the bottle and label only—no one can imitate the contents.

The Right House

A Man Who Was Taken For a Burglar

By ANNA B. CLARK

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

Jack Merton arrived in Chicago at 5 o'clock on a rainy afternoon. His train for the west left at 9, and he was prompted to spend the intervening hours with his cousin. Taking a cab, he was driven to the house.

"No. 232. There she is, the next one to this. I might have recognized the bronze flowerpots on the balcony anyway. Now for a surprise." He ran lightly up the steps of No. 232, pulled out a latchkey he had long carried and inserted it in the lock.

The key fitted easily, and the door swung open, revealing a long expanse of cool dark hall in summer attire of linen coverings. There was not a soul in sight. The doors that he remembered led to drawing rooms, library and sitting room were tightly closed.

At this hour Uncle Fred and Peter would probably have returned from the office and, as was their daily custom, would be grilling over the evening papers in the library in the glare of strong electric lights instead of spinning along the lake front watching the sunset after the strenuous day downtown. The Mertons were money grubbers, anyway, with but little eye for beauty. Nevertheless money grubbing had not affected the warmth of their big hearts, and this was unusual.

Jack strode down the hall, softly turned the knob of the library door and entered—to find himself in the mellow, subdued light of a solitary lamp on the writing desk. Out of the surrounding shadows a darker shape flitted and then came forward, revealing the straight, slim figure of a girl in a soft black gown, with a string of pearls around her white throat and dusky masses of hair framing the loveliest face Jack had ever seen—a face lighted by glorious hazel eyes and tinted with exquisite color.

The hazel eyes met Jack's fearlessly, and he was conscious of a quick movement of her right hand; then he found himself looking into the menacing barrel of a small revolver.

"What do you want here?" asked the girl quietly.

Forgetful of his clandestine entrance, Mr. Merton drew himself up proudly. "Rather an original method of welcoming a guest," he said lightly.

"Rather an original method of paying a call," retorted the girl. "You see, I heard you enter the house."

"How did you know it was not Mr. Merton—or his son?" asked Jack, with amusement.

"Merton?" The girl lifted her fine black brows questioningly. "You have made a mistake; there are no Mertons here."

Jack stared. "Then I am in the wrong house. Isn't this No. 232?" he asked bluntly.

"Yes."

"My uncle has lived here for twenty-five years. Surely there can be no mistake. You see, I just came in from the east, and while waiting for western connections I ran up here to surprise them. Here is the latchkey I have carried for ten years past. It fitted the door, and so I came in, expecting to find my relatives here." He stopped abruptly at the slightly scornful expression on the girl's face. "Perhaps you don't believe me?" he asked scornfully.

For answer the girl pushed a newspaper across the table and pointed at the large half tone portrait of a man occupying the center of the front page. It was evident that she had been reading the paper when he entered and had slipped into the shadow of a tall screen at the sound of his approaching steps down the hall.

Jack picked up the paper and carried it nearer the light, the girl still covering him with the little revolver. The young man uttered a slight exclamation and studied the picture and the surrounding text with amazed eyes and parted lips.

There before him was what might have been a portrait of himself, fair, keen face, handsome nose and fine eyes, with the careless toss of hair above. The black type underneath proclaimed this the picture of "Fussy Harry," the slickest gentleman burglar out of jail, and it was the purpose of the article to warn the public against his early arrival in Chicago—and to endeavor to place the gentleman burglar behind the bars as speedily as might be accomplished.

"You've been reading this?" asked Jack, rather breathlessly.

The girl nodded.

"I don't wonder you thought I might be—let me see—Fussy Harry! I'll confess that we look enough alike to be brothers—twins, in fact—but I'm not vain, you know, only have I got that ratty look in my eyes?"

"I'd rather not say," returned the girl shortly. "You must understand that I'm not going to let you get away. The paper says you have committed murder—you are wanted for numerous burglaries and"—

"I suppose you intend to call up the police station and turn me over to the authorities. Well, do so! I can prove my identity, but not before I have been held up to suspicion, my name bandied from one end of the reer ruined. Well, let 'er go!" said Mc. land to the other and my future ca- Merton recklessly.

He leaned against the wall, with folded arms, and surveyed the carpet gloomily.

"If you wouldn't mind sitting down so I can rest my elbow on the desk. It tires my arm holding this thing out so. Thank you," she said as Jack obediently sank into a chair.

"If you're going to call the police I hope you won't mind doing so at once, because if I can clear myself in time I want to catch the 9:30 western express."

"I have called them," hesitated the girl.

"How?"

"As soon as you came in I found the buzzer on the burglar alarm that connects with the police station and signaled. They should be here very soon." She was quite white now, and the hand that held the revolver trembled visibly.

"Is there a telephone in this room?" asked Jack presently.

"Yes," replied the girl.

"You wouldn't let me call up central and discover where my cousins, the Mertons, are? If I'm in the wrong house, why"—

"Is there any doubt about that?" Her face was slightly contemptuous.

"A good deal of doubt," asserted Jack boldly. "This room is as familiar to me as my own home. I've spent weeks here. I know every chair and table, for the Mertons are not given to changing their furniture. If you would take the trouble to look you might find a picture of me somewhere about the premises."

"I think not, except here." She laid her hand on the paper, with a provoking smile.

"Do you mean to tell me that this is not Mr. Fred Merton's house?" demanded Jack.

"Really, if it's any advantage for you to know, I wish I could tell you the name of the owner; only, you see, my friends have rented it furnished for the summer season, and I only arrived this morning, and I did not hear the name of the owner if it has been mentioned. And so it is possible that this is Mr. Merton's house. I daresay you are quite familiar with a good many houses"—

"Let up on that!" growled Jack, quite out of temper. "No use hitting a fellow when he's down, you know."

"I beg your pardon," said the girl, her face coloring adorably, "but you must think me very mean. I've really been talking at random. I thought I heard a sound"— Her head was bent in a listening attitude.

"Burglars!" suggested Jack, with a grim smile. "Or, what might be worse for me, police—ugh!"

A strained look came into the girl's face as footsteps advanced swiftly down the hall toward the door. She arose and leaned toward her captive.

"I'm sorry. I hope you'll come out all right. I wish it had not been I who had to"—

"Thanks," said Jack dryly. "I'll probably come out after I've served time! As in the case of the girl in the musical comedy song, you know, 'I must be captured by somebody, and it may as well be you.' Well, here goes!"

There was the sound of voices outside the door—feminine voices—and then the door opened and skirts rustled silkily forward.

"Jean, you poor child, were you frightened to death staying all alone here. Mercy, what's this? Oh, put down that pistol!"

Three young women, pretty as pictures, handsomely gowned, fluttered toward the loveliest girl of all as she dropped the revolver to the desk. She arose and pointed a slim forefinger toward Jack Merton.

"That is Fussy Harry, wanted by the police. I have captured him"— She fainted away then, and it was Jack's privilege to gather her up and lay her on the leather couch before confronting the bevy of hysterical girls, who had fled to a distant corner.

"I'm Jack Merton," began that gentleman with what dignity he could assume, "and I've been trying to persuade this young lady that"—

"Of course it's Jack," cried the tallest girl, tossing back her veil. "It's Peter's cousin. Tell me what has happened."

Jack found his hands grasped by the welcoming hands of his cousin, Peter's bride, and he found no difficulty in convincing his listeners of his identity. The girl on the couch was recovering and sat up, listening to the conversation with flaming cheeks and sparkling eyes.

"We went to the matinee and left Jean alone. All the servants were out. She's been reading that lurid newspaper and—well, really, Mr. Merton, it does look like you," explained Mrs. Fancher when Mrs. Peter had made the proper introductions. "I don't wonder Jean was frightened. But what pluck she had! Just fancy holding that revolver, and it is loaded, girls. No; there is no burglar alarm. What a fib, Jean! Of course she didn't know the name of Merton. We just met Mrs. Peter downtown and dragged her up. They're staying at the shore and"— So the explanations went on, and after a little while Jack found himself sitting down beside Jean Innes trying to make his peace with that disconcerted little lady.

"And so your home is in San Francisco?" he asked delightedly. "Why, that's where I'm going to live. I hadn't counted on such good luck—having a friend there, you know."

"I'm so sorry," faltered Jean, with a soft shyness in her tender eyes.

"I'm not," asserted Jack, "and I'm sure you would have captured me sooner or later. You'll find me the most willing victim." And the look in her eyes satisfied Jack that he had entered the right house after all.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

Brand, too, save for a couple of visits to the hotel, remained invisible. He was pale and worn, a man at war with himself. The young Philadelphian—for Pyne's family home was in the Quaker City, though his estate lay principally in New York—was not pleased by the slight signs perceptible behind the screen of Brand's reserve.

"Constance takes after her father," he told himself. "There may be trouble about her mother. In the scurry I may get left. I must think this out."

At last came a day of warm sunshine, when Enid announced that the invalid, by the doctor's orders, was carried downstairs.

"Has Mr. Brand seen her yet?" asked Pyne.

"No," replied Enid, with a little cloud on her fair face. "He never mentions her. And how we wish he would. He is suffering, but keeps silent, and neither Constance nor I can make any suggestion."

"But what will be the outcome?"

"How can I tell? That night—after we left the hotel—he told us the story of his married life. I did not seem to be utterly impossible to straighten matters, but we knew nothing of her career during so many years. Was she married again? I have asked my father. He believes she was, but is not certain."

"Father" was Mr. Traill; Brand remained "dad." Thus did Enid solve the difficulty.

"Is she aware that Constance knows she is her mother?"

"We think so. Indeed, we are sure. She has been so ill, and is yet so fragile, that we dare not excite her in the least degree. So Constance has been very careful, but every look, every syllable, shows that her mother is in no doubt on that point."

"It's a pretty hard nut to crack," said Pyne. He blew cigar smoke into rings. Seemingly the operation aided reflection.

"Say, Enid," he went on. "If the weather is fine to-morrow, do you think Connie would come out for a drive?"

"I don't know. Certainly she needs some fresh air. What between her anxiety and her mother's illness, they are beginning to look like sisters."

"Just mention to Connie, in her father's presence, that if the sun shines at eleven, I will be along in a dog-cart. Mrs. Vansittart will be down stairs by that time?"

"Yes."

"And if Connie comes out with me, you just find an errand in town. Rope Jack into the scheme, or any old dodge of that sort. Take care Mr. Brand knows of it. By the way, send Mrs. Sheppard out too."

"What in the world—"

"You're just too pretty to think hard, Enid. It causes wrinkles. Do as I ask, there's a good girl."

Enid was delighted to find that Brand strongly supported the suggestion that Constance should take the drive. Pyne, sharp on time, drew up a smart pony in front of the cottage, and did not twitch a muscle when Constance, veiled and gloved, ran down the pathway.

"Excuse me getting down," said Pyne. "I dispensed with a groom. I guess you know the roads round here."

She climbed into the seat beside him.

"It is very good of you to take this trouble," she said, and when he looked at her a slight color was visible through the veil.

"How is your mother?" he asked, abruptly.

He felt, rather than saw, her start of surprise.

She did not expect the relationship to be acknowledged with such sudden candor.

"She is much better," she assured him.

"That's all right," he announced, as if a load were off his mind. And then, somewhat to her mystification, he entertained her with the news.

Elsie and Mamie had quitted Penzance the previous evening, an aunt having traveled from Boston as soon as the first tidings of the wreck reached her.

"She was a young, nice-looking aunt, too," he said, cheerfully. "And I was powerfully fond of those two kiddies."

"The association of ideas might prove helpful," she suggested, with a touch of her old manner.

"That is what struck Elsie," he admitted. "She said she didn't know why I couldn't marry Aunt Louisa right off, and then we could all live together sociably."

"Oh! And what did the lady say?"

"She thought it was a great joke, until I said that unfortunately I had made other arrangements. Then she guessed her nieces had got a bit out of hand."

"Have you seen the poor fellow whose arm was broken? Enid has not had a moment to give me details of events since we landed."

From that point their conversation dealt with generalities. Soon the girl perceived his intent. His sole desire was to place her at her ease, to make her realize that no matter what troubles life held they could be vanquished with a smile. She responded to his mood, and enlivened the drive with comments on the people they met and the houses and villages they passed. For two hours the world went well because it was forgotten.

Enid, the conspirator, waited until the pair in the dog-cart were out of sight. Then she went to the little room at the back of the cottage where Brand pretended to be busily engaged in compiling a scientific account of his auriscope.

"I am going out, dad," she said, trying to appear unconcerned.

"All right," he answered, laying down his pipe.

"I only came to tell you because Mrs. Sheppard is out, too."

Obviously Enid was determined that if Pyne's calculations were worth anything they should have fair play.

"Oh," he commented sharply, "but the maid is in?"

"Yes. She is such a stupid girl in some things. If—if our guest rings you will hear her. Would you mind asking Mary what it is in case she gets muddled?"

He glanced at her. She was pulling on her gloves, and vastly bothered by a refractory button.

"If I hear the bell, I will inquire," he said, and she escaped, feeling quite wicked.

When he was alone, he did not resume his task. In the next room, separated from him only by a brick wall was his wife. A wall! Why should there always be a wall between them? It was not of his building. Had she made it impassable during the long years? And what would be the outcome, now that Constance was in daily communion with her mother? The doctor, in kindly ignorance, had told him that Mrs. Vansittart was convalescent and would be able to travel in a few days. In response to a question, the doctor added that the lady herself asked when she might be moved.

What was her plan? Mr. Traill, that day, had written him a sympathetic letter, mentioning the fact that Mrs. Vansittart had voluntarily rescinded her promise to marry him, and, indeed, judged by the light of present knowledge, had determined on that course since she first knew that her former husband was living.

Suddenly Brand pushed back his chair from the desk at which he sat.

"The young dog!" he growled. He had in fact followed the exact mental process which Pyne mapped out for him. The letter, the drive, Mrs. Sheppard's absence, Enid's uneasy wriggling at the door, were all parts of an ordered plan. He was to be given an opportunity of seeing his wife and disentangling the twisted strands of twenty years. He rose impatiently, and paced the room, quietly withal, lest the woman in the next room should hear him. A decision had been forced on him. He could shirk it no longer.

"Pyne has contrived this," he muttered. "He thinks he can see more clearly into the future than a man twice his age. Enid is in the plot, too. And Connie! No, not Connie. Dear heart! She is worn with anxiety, yet she never once mentioned her mother to me since she carried her into the house like an ailing child."

Back and forth he walked, wrestling with the problem. See his wife he must, and before she quitted Cornwall. Was it advisable, in her present state of health, to take her by surprise? Pyne evidently thought so. And the doctor! Good Heavens! was the doctor in the thing, too?

At last, he tugged at the bell.

"Mary," he said, "ask Mrs. Vansittart if she feels able to see Mr. Brand."

There; it was done.

Mary, rose-cheeked and soft of speech, dreading only Mrs. Sheppard's matronly eye, knocked at the door of the sitting-room. He heard her deliver his message. There was no audible answer. He was lamenting his folly, hoping against hope that no ill results might be forthcoming to the invalid thus taken by surprise, when he caught Mary's formal "Yes'm," and the girl came to him.

"Please, sir," she said, "the lady says she is anxious to see you."

He walked firmly to the door, opened it and entered. He had made up his mind what to say and and how to say it. It would be best to ask his wife to discuss matters in a friendly spirit, and, for their daughter's sake, agree to some arrangement whereby Constance should see her occasionally. There need be no tears, no recriminations, no painful raking through the dust-heaps of the vanished years. The passion, the agony, of the old days was dead. The secret had been well kept. It was known only to those whom they could trust, and they might part without heart-burnings, whilst Constance would be spared the suffering of knowing that her mother and she were separated forever.

These things were well ordered in his brain when he looked at his wife. She was seated near the window, and her beautiful eyes, brilliant as ever, were fixed on his with harrowing intensity. They shone with the dumb pain of a wounded animal.

Her Secret.

Why She Always Looked So Young

Everyone refers to her as one of the most attractive women in town. It wasn't her features, for while regular, they were not unusual. But the charm lay in the head of splendid vigorous hair that made a veritable crown. It had that peculiar lustre and the sun gave it an added brilliance—you couldn't look at her without unconsciously commenting on the beauty of her hair.

When asked how she kept it so beautiful she replied that it was no secret, simply proper shampooing, regular combing and the conscientious use of Hirsutone. She admitted it had not always been in that condition, but that she found Hirsutone the best thing she ever got for the hair. It gave the scalp such a cool, refreshed feeling, and the hair was so much easier to dress after its use.

There are plenty of heads that would be just as attractive for Hirsutone soon brings the hair and scalp into good condition.

Your Nyal Drug Store will cheerfully guarantee Hirsutone to do all that is claimed for it, and every woman owes it to herself to try it.

PHOEBE'S CATCH.

A Fishing Trip That Had Most Satisfactory Results.

By CLARISSA MACKIE.

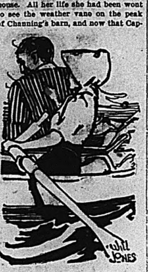
[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

There was a tinge of autumn in the air, although the calendar still showed its September page. Here and there on the hillsides a tree flamed out, herald of Jack Frost. The bay wrinkled crisply into white capped waves, and over all was the odor of ripe grapes, sweet cider and burning leaves.

Phoebe Allen leaned over the gate and drank in the sweetness of the air and looked at the blue and white water and saw the flaming tree.

"Smells frosty," she sniffed delicately. "I'm always mighty glad when winter comes around. It's the coziest time of the year. Wish I knew which way the wind was blowing."

Her pleasant face wrinkled in a frown as she tried to peer around the corner of Captain Amos Dodge's new house. All her life she had been wont to see the weather vane on the peak of Channing's barn, and now that Captain Amos' house had interposed its bulk Phoebe felt personally aggrieved.



IT FELL OUT AT HER TOUCH.

She had even approached the doughty captain and laid her complaint before him. "I never can tell what the weather's going to be without seeing that vane," she said.

"I'll put one up on my cupola," promised the captain affably.

"I won't look at it—probably it'll not be good for anything," said Miss Phoebe peevishly, and so she went home.

Captain Amos and Phoebe had known each other all their lives; they had gone to school together, and they had attended merrymakings as they grew older. Phoebe had danced holes in her slippers under the skillful guidance of Amos Dodge, and Amos had been caught by his father while concocting a love letter to Phoebe, and an incipient romance had been destroyed.

Amos had run away from his motherless home, and Phoebe had forgotten all about him until years afterward, when his father was dead and buried, he came home a childless widower and built a house on the brow of the hill beyond Phoebe's solitary cottage.

There had been no sentiment about their meeting. Their first words had been a disagreement about the weather vane, and neither had recovered. Now Phoebe craned her soft round throat in a vain endeavor to learn the direction of the wind.

A barefoot boy whistled past, a fishing rod over his shoulder and a can of bait dangling from his hand.

"Where you going, Hennie?" asked Miss Phoebe.

"After blues—they're running down in the channel," returned the boy.

"Which way's the wind?" asked Phoebe.

"I dunno," said Hennie stupidly. "Don't make no difference about wind. The tide's coming in, and the blues are running in with it."

"I believe I'll go and get some for my supper. It's too fine a day to stay in. Hennie, I'll give you a nickel if you'll get me some bait. What you got there?"

"Mummies."

"Want to sell 'em?"

"I don't mind."

"I'll take 'em. Wait a minute."

After the transaction was concluded Phoebe ran back to the cottage and donned an ancient skirt and knitted jacket. On her head she tied a pink sunbonnet, and over her feet she drew rubber overshoes. She packed a small basket of lunch, fed the cat, hunted a rod and line from the woodshed, locked up the cottage and scurried down to her little boathouse on the beach below.

Presently she was rowing slowly out toward the harbor's mouth, where little boats were dotted about laden with eager fishermen, for bluefish were running plentifully.

Phoebe's bright brown eyes had discovered a more isolated spot where she had learned by experience that the current ran swiftly and where excellent luck might be had. This was between the breakwater and the long sand spit that became an island when the tide was high.

It was fast becoming an island now, and save for one lone fisherman the little channel was quite deserted, for there was exciting sport in the harbor's mouth.

Such a clever little sailor woman as Phoebe Allen found no difficulty in getting her boat into the right position, dropping her anchor overboard and preparing for sport.

The lone fisherman proved to be her especial abhorrence, Captain Amos, and and as his broad back was turned to her and his great flapping hat quite covered the back of his head he was recognizable only by his size and the dainty lines of his new boat.

One, two, three, into the boat they flopped, little silver beauties. Phoebe's cheeks grew pink with excitement as she pulled them in. Enough for her own supper at first and then supplemented by others there were enough for gifts to various fishless neighbors.

It so happened that Captain Amos was fishing with a rod, and so was Phoebe Allen. It is an awkward way to catch fish from a small boat, but Phoebe loved to see the silver booty come swinging through the air into her craft, and it was also Captain Amos' favorite method.

At last Phoebe impaled her last bit of bait and swung the line overboard. It jerked forward, and she felt the weight of a captured fish. As she pulled in the pole flew up, and the baitless hook sailed over her head and caught neatly in the slack of Captain Amos' shirt between his broad shoulders. It caught and stayed there.

Almost in the same instant Captain Amos lost his bait in the same way, and his pole performed the same upward leap, his line flew over, and the hook imbedded itself in the woolly intricacies of Phoebe's knitted jacket.

Then Captain Amos, feeling the point of the hook in his tender flesh, yelled murderously.

"Woman!" he threatened, turning his head as far around as pain would permit.

"Man!" snapped back Miss Phoebe, straining at her pole and against the captain's hook.

"What in tarnation"— sputtered Amos, groaning. "Woman, you have killed me."

"Keep still, do," said Phoebe impatiently. "You've gone and caught yourself in my hook. It was the last one I had. If you'd reach around you might get it out."

"Get out nothing! Do you understand the English language?" asked Captain Amos, with deadly calm.

"Of course I do."

"Then listen. Your hook is caught in my skin—s-k-i-n—skin, and I'm bleeding to death. If you'll have the goodness to look around and see what damage you've done," suggested the captain savagely.

"Perhaps you'll look around and see what you've done," said Phoebe crossly.

She craned her neck and looked around at the captain's back, which the point of her fish hook barely pricked. At the same moment Captain Amos peered around to see his own hook caught in his neighbor's jacket.

Something in the ridiculous situation broke the icy crust of years of separation; it recalled another day when, as children, they had fished for minnows in the millpond and, sitting together in the old green boat that had belonged to Phoebe's father, they had hooked each other quite as neatly as they had done today.

"Amos Dodge, you little ninny!" cried Phoebe in the same teasing words she had used on that former occasion thirty-five years ago.

"Girls don't know how to fish," retorted Amos as he had done in that other day.

"Does that hook hurt, Amos?" asked Phoebe.

"Not much," admitted the captain, twisting his neck around to look into Phoebe's sunbonnet. "Your boat's drifting a little, Phoebe. Don't get any farther away from me," he said in a queer voice.

"I won't," said Phoebe gently. "Just wait a minute, Amos, while I slip off this jacket—there! Now I'm free of your hook I'll help you. Wait, now, till I get my boat over."

By dint of careful maneuvering Phoebe ran her boat near enough to the other to lean over and touch the hook. It fell out at her touch.

"I was afraid the point might have caught, but it's all right, captain"—

"Amos," said the captain briskly. "I wasn't any captain when I knew you."

"Amos," repeated Phoebe obediently. "I hope it didn't hurt you."

"Not a mite, Phoebe. To tell the truth"— He reddened and looked doubtfully at his old sweetheart.

"Tell it," commanded Phoebe in her old imperious way.

"I caught you on purpose," confessed the captain.

"Why?" blushed Phoebe. "Whatever"—

"Just to get acquainted again. You have been as stiff as a ramrod ever since I came home again and"—

"Tide's turning," said Phoeme from the depths of her pink sunbonnet. "I've got lunch to eat."

"So've I," returned the captain promptly. "Let's go ashore and have a picnic."

"Let's," said Phoebe.

That night when they trudged up the hill swinging their strings of silvery fish somebody saw them and said:

"Well, if Phoebe Allen ain't caught Captain Amos at last!"

Somebody else saw them and said, "Land sakes, if Captain Amos ain't caught Phoebe Allen, after all!"

And just then Captain Amos was saying, "When you get over to the big house with me, Phoebe, there won't be anything to shut off your view of the weather vane."

"I guess there won't be anything to obstruct my happiness either," sighed Phoebe contentedly.

FOILED.

A Historical Story of Diplomacy.

By F. A. MITCHEL.

Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.

In looking over some papers, yellow with age, I came upon the following, written by my grandfather, who in his younger days was a newspaper correspondent of considerable celebrity:

During the civil war I was sent to France as correspondent for the Washington ——. The duties of a European correspondent are very different from one in America. There it is the duty of the enterprising journalist to secure an entree to the society of those who are making the history of their times, from whom alone he can get the news.

There was one man in France to whom the Emperor Napoleon III. was more indebted for bolstering him on his throne than any of his imperial majesty's official councilors. One evening at a ball at the Tuileries this man, whom I shall call Count de V., approached me and entered into a conversation with me about my journalistic work. I was rather surprised that he should take any interest in such a matter, for no American correspondent was a part of the European system, being usually employed to gather the news as it was published and transmit it to American newspapers.

Among other things Count de V. asked me if I corresponded with any other than American papers. I replied that I had a commission to send news to an English paper whenever I had anything special to send, whereupon he asked me to breakfast with him the next morning, promising that he would give me an item.

When I met the count the next morning at breakfast I was not only amazed at the item he gave me, but at his giving it. He told me that the emperor had been striving to secure another power to join him in interfering to stop the war in America; that he had been working secretly and persistently upon the English government, the people of England being almost wholly on the side of the south owing largely to their dependence on getting cotton from that section. "The emperor," he added, "is about to succeed, and within sixty days a combined French and English fleet will be on the American Atlantic coast to break the blockade."

Patriotic American that I was, my blood chilled at this information; but, immediately remembering that if the news were true a man so close to the emperor would be guilty of betraying a trust to give it to me, I said, "It would be impossible for me to secure the publication of this news in any English paper without documentary proof."

"I can give you the proof," replied the count, "provided that proof remains with you and dies with you—that it is kept a secret till we are all dead."

"I am quite sure, count," I replied, "that if I can say that I am convinced the paper will act upon my assurance that I have been convinced."

Count de V. arose, went to a cabinet, unlocked a drawer with a key he took from his vest pocket and brought out a package of papers, which he laid before me. I perused them with ever growing wonder and long before I had finished was convinced not only of the truth of his statement, but that within sixty days the independence of the Confederate states would be acknowledged by France and England. I kept rereading the papers in order to gain time to think. I was perusing documents of which President Lincoln was ignorant and which constituted the death warrant of the Union cause. What should I do—what could I do—to arrest such a blow? Finally I looked at the count and said:

"Count, you are either the greatest knave or the greatest fool on earth or you have some especial purpose which will result beneficently to the emperor."

"I am no knave. How much of a fool I am depends upon your sense of honor. That I have a purpose I will not deny."

"You have gone so far that you must go further. Tell me all."

The count deliberated for some time, and before he spoke his manner indicated that he had resolved to tell the whole story.

"Very well," he said. "Listen. The throne is tottering. There are too many factions striving to possess the government to permit the emperor to remain in peace upon it. He realizes this and desires to concentrate the minds of the people on some foreign achievement for the benefit of France. He purposes to take possession of the government of Mexico, which has been offered him by a few malcontents there. Before doing this he desires to break the United States into two parts, gaining at the same time the good will of one. By bringing about this intervention he will establish the Confederacy and gain the eternal gratitude of the southern people. His Mexican scheme will then be on a far stronger basis."

The count paused, and I noticed that a pained expression passed over his face.

"And your opinion, count, of the wisdom of all this?"

He shrugged his shoulders.

"It means the end of the empire. No more crazy scheme was ever devised. I believe that there are underlying principles in this American struggle of yours which in the end, however remote, will give the free north the victory over the slave south—that even the south, once free, will not tolerate a foreign government set up so close to her. And now we come to the object of this revelation. I have begged and pleaded with the emperor to have nothing to do with America or the struggle now going on in America. He declares that it is his only hope to save his throne. He will not listen to me. I would save him from himself. By securing a premature publication of the plan I may thwart it, and my master will be saved from its disastrous consequences."

In my enthusiasm I grasped the count's hand and held it as in a vise.

"Count," I exclaimed, "I am no less struck with wonder at your disinterested wisdom than I was at first at your seeming dishonor. These men about the emperor are idiots. You are a statesman in the very highest degree."

Though I was burning to act in the matter, I left the count to spend twenty-four hours in thought upon it before doing so. The fate of my countrymen was in my hands. By an error I might turn the clock of human liberty back half a century. By a well aimed stroke I might change the fate of the American republic. I slept not a wink that night and when the morning came had formed a new plan. At 10 o'clock I was again with the Count de V.

"Count," I said, "I have not sufficient standing with any English paper to feel sure I can put your scheme in practice. American journals would pay millions for the news, but they are too far away to serve the purpose. I have a proposition to make. Trust me to reveal this conspiracy to some ruler who has the power in himself to thwart it."

The count thought a few moments, then with a sudden impulse turned to his desk, seized pen and paper and wrote. "There," he said when he had finished, "is a note of introduction to a man very near the person of the emperor of Russia. I have told him to introduce you to his master and say that I have proof in my possession of all you may tell him. Go to St. Petersburg, reveal the plot to the czar, but remember that my honor, my life, depend upon your ability to play this difficult role."

"I will do my best, count, not only for my country, but for you."

"Goodby!" he said. "And may you save the empire of France as well as the cause of liberty in America. If you do either and I am sacrificed I shall not go down in vain."

That night I took a train for St. Petersburg. Fast as we traveled we seemed to me to be going at a snail's pace. My mind was ever on my work of blocking the most rascally political game that was ever played by civilized governments. But, while I thought much of the main issue, I thought more of devices by which I could get the benefit of De V.'s information without bringing him into the matter.

Arrived at St. Petersburg, as soon as I had made a toilet I drove to the house of Alexiaef Vronsky, to whom I bore the letter of introduction. I found a middle aged gentleman, untitled, but for some reason possessing great influence with the czar. He listened to what I had to say, then told me that he would go at once with a view to making an appointment for me at the palace. The same afternoon he wrote me a note saying that he would go with me and present me to the emperor the next morning at 11 o'clock.

On the way to the palace Vronsky said to me:

"There is great hope for you in this: The emperor is not fearful or jealous of the French, but he is watching the efforts put forth by England to control the sea and thereby the trade of the world. I tell you this that you may know your best card and know how and when to play it."

When I stood in presence of the autocrat of all the Russias I felt that I bore on my shoulders the cause of freedom for the world. He listened to what I had to say intently and with evident interest. But, seeing me hesitate, he said:

"You may trust me as you have been trusted."

That was a help to me, and I got on much better as soon as I had been thus assured. I laid bare the whole scheme and showed a knowledge of facts which fitted in with much that he knew himself about the schemes not only of Napoleon III., but the prime minister of England. Before I had finished I knew I had at heart won the czar's confidence.

"I can only say to you now," said his majesty, "that the scheme will not be carried out."

I withdrew at once perfectly satisfied with the result of my mission. After thanking Vronsky again and again for this introduction I took the train at once for Paris, knowing that De V. would be eager to hear what I might have to say. I called on him on my arrival before going to my home and after assuring him that his part in the matter would never be known gave him an account of my interview ending with the czar's assurance.

In a few weeks, hearing nothing more of the matter and becoming uneasy, I sailed for America to report the affair to the president. In sailing up New York bay I found it filled with a Russian war fleet.

Perhaps some people talk incessantly in order to disguise the fact that they have nothing to say.

A Spanish jury is to decide on the merits of a poet's sonnets. The same process applied to mine would likely end cooking. Then put on the stove and cook slowly.

HOW TO GET FREE

A 50c. BOTTLE OF PSYCHINE

(PRONOUNCED SI-KEEN)

The white corpuscles of the blood—the Phagocytes, as they are known scientifically—are the policemen or the scavengers of the body.

Not a germ of disease can invade the body anywhere but these white corpuscles get after it. And, if they are strong enough or in sufficient numbers, they devour it.

If they're not strong enough or in sufficient numbers, then the invading army of disease germs triumphs and disease holds the body.

Any preparation that strengthens these white corpuscles or that increases their number, will not only preserve health, but will build up its defences so strongly that contagion or infection are impossible.

* * *

Herbs have always been great curative agents from time immemorial.

They have been styled nature's own remedies.

Certain herbs more than others are noted for their curative powers.

And it has been found that those herbs that are most effective in maintaining or restoring health, do so by building up the white corpuscles or Phagocytes.

* * *

These herbs are incorporated in Psychine.

And it is the tremendous curative power of these herbs that is responsible for the unequalled record of this splendid preparation.

Think of it. In Psychine we have a preparation that has been in use a third of a century. That has cured hundreds of thousands of many kinds of diseases.

For which we have received hundreds of thousands of unsolicited testimonials.

MAN WITH A WOODEN LEG.

One of the Best Civil War Stories Ever Told.

OLD CROPONE, as he was called, walked on a crutch after he lost a leg in the civil war. One day he was at the Macaroni club in Boston and was prevailed upon to tell the story of the missing member. He began by relating that there was a bunch of Union men, some of whom had lost a leg in the same battle and one had lost both. They were removed to a southern mansion soon after the battle.

"One day," he went on, "word was brought that a woman had crossed through the lines and would visit us that day. It is wonderful how a woman's visit will spruce up low ebb courage in a sick man. There we lay watching the door, and at last she appeared. She carried on her arm a basket filled with little packages which she distributed to the cots as she came along, meanwhile talking to each invalid. She wasn't what you would call a pretty woman—in fact, she would be called plain—but the influence of the hour and her presence made her appear to me angelic. I could hardly wait for her to reach my bed and hear her low spoken words of comfort. Her progress was very slow, and the poor fellows kept her talking to them as long as they could. I got to wondering what it was that she gave each of them as she left the cots and from the size of the package guessed that it might be tobacco.

"At last she came to me. I thanked her in advance for her kindness and told her in my plain words how cheering her presence made us feel—that if we took a new lease on life we owed it to her visit.

"She held her finger up to me in warning and said she had orders to do all the talking and not to tire us out. Then she began:

"'Sometimes trials are given us for a purpose. Who can tell? It may be that the wise Creator wishes to soften our hearts and cleanse us of our sins. Hardships come upon us—sickness, blindness and lameness—and they all mean chastisement of the carnal spirit. You are all on the road to recovery, and when you once more reach your loved ones at home it will not be an easy matter to resist the pleasures that have been denied you so long. I want you to promise me something before I leave your camp. If you do it will quite repay me for the risk and trouble I have undergone to be with you now.'

"I was ready to promise anything, sight unseen. Who could resist a woman in tears with a sob in her throat, especially under such conditions? But she interrupted me again:

"'You cannot promise my request until you know what I am going to ask you and not until you have fully understood its significance. I shall leave this little token with you and return in an hour. Then you will know. A pledge to me is sacred and should never be given unless with the intention of keeping it.'

"She left the room solemnly, and I fell to my package with all due haste. It was tied with a blue ribbon, and the first sentence on its printed page struck me with amazement. I was hit in a vulnerable spot. The sin she was asking me to blot out was one I loved dearly, yet I knew before she returned to that room that I should give her my pledge."

"What was she after?" we yelled in chorus.

"Her crusade was against the 'Evils of Waltzing.' I promised her then and there that I would never dance again. That was thirteen years ago, and I have kept my word."—John Mason in Associated Sunday Magazine.

No Shirking.

"What are you lying there on the ground for, young man?"

"I am taking the sun cure for a headache, father."

"Well, you get up and go to work or you will be taking the dad cure from the toe of my boot in about a minute."

Knew What They Deserved.

"Did the story end happily?"

"Sure. Everybody killed himself in the last chapter."

"Horrible!"

"You would say they got their just deserts if you had read the book."

Appropriate.

"Why do you bury yourself here?"

"Because I like it."

"Oh, I see."

"See what?"

"You are a dead one."

"VITAL" MAN IN GREECE.

New Cretan Leader of Chamber the Idol of the People.

M. Venizelos, the Cretan, who was recently made leader of the Greek Chamber, is the idol of the people, partly because he has had the courage to risk his reputation as a statesman in order to obey his country's call, and partly because he is not only a man, but the personification of an idea. "If for years Greeks have borne with misgovernment, mismanagement, and corruption, it is because they lacked a leader to put their aspirations into action," said a Greek deputy.

"The leader was found, a man of iron will, magnetic force. He is possessed of immense will power, but he is sensitive, and it is a grief to his friends to see how he has suffered since he left Crete from the revelations of corruption and immorality in Greek political life.

"It is our fear that he will succumb, and that, with his energies sapped by annoyances and anxieties of every kind, he will neither have the force and physical energy to kill forever the weeds of faction and corruption which smother the true life of Greece, nor the power and endurance to inaugurate the new era of liberty. For he is not a man to us; he is an incarnate idea. Should he fall, with him falls the spirit of reform and the hopes of Greece as a nation.

"The period which will follow this will be a terrible one. The regeneration of Hellas will be put back for a hundred years. His enemies have every interest in crushing him, for with the reforms instituted by M. Venizelos their sources of power and income will alike vanish. They care for nothing but their own selfish ends. They wilfully ignore the fact that the outcome of this political chaos and national degradation will be the crushing of Greece by some foreign enemy, or the subjecting of this country to the control of the powers. His first aim is the strengthening of the army and navy, his second is the purification of our national life. Should God grant to Venizelos ten years of life Greece will have entered on a new and glorious era of power and prosperity.

"A war with Turkey is inevitable, not perhaps immediately, but certainly within the year," added this deputy. "The situation of Greece is more critical at the present moment than at any period in the last fifty years, because the influences of corruption and immorality stand savagely at bay, and will not be crushed without a ferocious resistance. If they are triumphant, a civil war will probably result."—Athens correspondent of The London Morning Post.

Stars by Daylight.

It is worthy of remark that but for the brightness of the sky the stars could be seen in daylight. Even as matters stand some of the brighter of them have been seen after sunrise by explorers on high mountains, where the air is very clear and the sky dark blue. If we could go above the atmosphere the sky would appear perfectly black and stars would be visible right close up to the sun. Astronomers observe bright stars in daytime by using long focus telescopes, the dark tubes of which cut off the side light, and persons in the bottom of deep wells have noticed stars passing overhead, the side light being reduced by the great depths of the wells.

THE FUN OF VICTORY.

THERE'S a heap of satisfaction
In a trouble if you grin,
If you keep your nerve in action
And you wear a lifted chin.
There's a joy in doing something
That you've never done before,
So don't be a deaf and dumb thing.
Chance is knocking at your door.

Down and out, there's fun in rising,
Fun in facing heavy odds,
Doing deeds that are surprising,
And the happy fellow plods,
Plods along and hums a ditty
As he journeys down the street
Of the busy, gold mad city
Till he's back upon his feet.

It's in overcoming trouble
That a fellow gets his fun.
It's in shattering the bubble
That is labeled "can't be done."
It's in striving night and day time
When the problem hopeless seems,
Man appreciates his playtime
When he's realized his dreams.

There's a heap of satisfaction
In a trouble if you grin.
Difficulties have attraction
If you keep a lifted chin.
And the harder that your fight is
Then the greater is your fun
And the finer your delight is
As you view the things you've done.

Outbid.

A clergyman was very annoyed to find that an old gentleman, accompanied by a boy, fell asleep on two consecutive Sundays during the sermon. So after service on the second week he told the boy, whom he rightly guessed to be the old gentleman's grandson, that he wished to speak to him in the vestry.

"My boy," asked the clergyman when they were closeted together, "who is that elderly gentleman you attend church with?"

"Grandpa," was the reply.

"Well," said the clergyman, "if you will only keep him awake during my sermon I'll give you a penny each week."

The boy fell in with the arrangement, and for the next two weeks the old gentleman listened attentively to the sermon. The third week, however, found him soundly asleep.

The clergyman, very angry, called the boy to him and said:

"I am very angry with you. Your grandpa was asleep again today. Didn't I promise you a penny a week to keep him awake?"

"Yes," replied the boy, "but grandpa now gives me twopence not to disturb him."—Spare Moments.

It was moved by Mr. R. J. Christie, seconded by Mr. H. W. Wilcox, that Mr. W. D. Matthews do take the chair, and that C. A. Bogert do act as Secretary.

Messrs. W. Gibson Cassels and A. H. Campbell were appointed scrutineers.

The Secretary read the report of the Directors to the Shareholders, and submitted the Annual Statement of the affairs of the Bank, which is as follows:

To the Shareholders:

The Directors beg to present the following Statement of the result of the business of the Bank for the year ending 31st December, 1910:—

Balance of Profit and Loss Account, 31st December, 1909		$295,766.98
Profit for the year ending 31st December, 1910, after deducting charges of management, etc., and making provision for bad and doubtful debts		659,300.58
Making a total of		$955,067.56
Which has been disposed of as follows:
Dividend 3 per cent., paid 1st April, 1910	$120,000.00
Dividend 3 per cent., paid 2nd July, 1910	120,000.00
Dividend 3 per cent., paid 1st October, 1910	120,000.00
Dividend 3 per cent., payable 3rd January, 1911	120,000.00
		480,000.00
		$475,067.56
Written off Bank Premises		170,000.00
Balance of Profit and Loss carried forward		$305,067.56

Your Directors, in submitting the Annual Statement of the affairs of the Bank as on the 31st December, 1910, with the result of the year's business, beg to report that there has been a general substantial growth in every direction. A considerable increase in the net profits will be noted, owing to the satisfactory conditions which have prevailed throughout Canada and the steady demand for banking accommodation from all districts where we are established.

For some time past the Board has had under serious consideration the necessity for the enlargement of our Head Office premises, which have become quite inadequate to meet the present needs of the Bank, without having regard to the ordinary expansion of our business which may be expected in the future. Endeavors were made to secure adjoining lots, but without success. In 1910 an opportunity arose for the acquisition of the land and buildings at the northeast corner of King and Yonge streets—31 feet on King street by 112 feet on Yonge street—and after due deliberation the purchase was completed. It is not the purpose to hold both properties any longer than is necessary, and when a policy for building is decided on, your Directors have every reason to believe that our present premises can be disposed of for an amount which will practically offset the recent outlay.

In addition, suitable buildings were erected last year for Edmonton, Moose Jaw and Notre Dame avenue, Winnipeg, branches.

These various disbursements have caused a considerable increase in Bank Premises Account, but, following the usual policy, a substantial amount has been written off.

A lot was purchased at Saskatoon, and it is proposed to erect a building at this point and at Calgary during the current year. With the completion of these buildings your Directors are of the opinion that no further immediate expenditures for our Western Branches will be necessary.

It is the intention to erect offices this year in Toronto: At the corner of Dovercourt road and Bloor street, corner of Lee avenue and Queen street, corner of St. Clair avenue and Vaughan road, and the corner of Sherbourne and Bloor streets, where we are already established in temporary premises.

A Branch of the Bank was opened in February last at the corner of St. Lawrence boulevard and Prince Arthur street, Montreal.

The offices opened in 1909 are making satisfactory progress, and already justify their establishment.

In accordance with the By-law passed by the Shareholders at our Annual Meeting in January last, the par value of the shares of the Bank was on September the 1st changed from $50 to $100.

The Directors, following their usual custom, have examined and verified the General Balance Sheet of the Bank as on the 31st of December, 1910, and have checked and found to be correct the cash assets, securities and investments shown therein. They have, in addition, given careful scrutiny to all borrowing accounts.

The Branches of the Bank have been inspected in the usual thorough manner during the year.

E. B. OSLER,
President.

The Report was adopted.

The thanks of the Shareholders were tendered to the President, Vice-President, and Directors, for their services during the year, and to the General Manager and other Officers of the Bank for the efficient performance of their respective duties.

The following gentlemen were duly elected Directors for the ensuing year: Messrs. A. W. Austin, W. R. Brock, James Carruthers, R. J. Christie, J. C. Eaton, J. J. Foy, K.C., M.L.A., W. D. Matthews, A. M. Nanton and E. B. Osler, M.P.

At a subsequent meeting of the Directors, Mr. E. B. Osler, M.P., was elected President, and Mr. W. D. Matthews, Vice-President, for the ensuing term.

A FATHER'S DREAM

The Last Scheme Herr Bischoff Planned For His Son.

By HELEN COMFORT.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

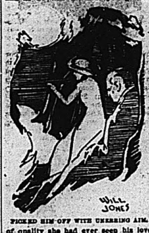
In the center of a large tract of land in Germany a hundred years ago stood a hunting lodge owned by Wilhelm Bischoff, a retired merchant of Berlin. Both Bischoff and his son Carl were sportsmen and used to go to this lodge in the proper season to hunt. The wild boar was at that time still to be found in certain parts of that country. When food was scarce the woods were infested with wolves.

The elder Bischoff was an optimist, often surprising his family by some visionary scheme. His son Carl, who inherited the traits of his mother rather than those of his father, was of a more equitable mental organization.

On one of Carl's visits to the lodge when his father remained at home he stopped one day while hunting at an ancient schloss occupied by one of those impoverished German noblemen whose ancestors were great men and whose descendants have had to pay for their progenitors' prominence. The schloss had always belonged to the Gehrensteins, whose living had been gained by plundering. But that part of the country did not fill up with the rest, and the laws gradually did away with the employment of the robber barons. He who occupied the schloss at the time the incident narrated in this story occurred had a pitiful income, which he supplemented by game.

Carl Bischoff was entertained by the baron, the only member of whose family living was Gretchen, a fair haired, blue eyed maiden of nineteen. Brought up in a wild region, a certain uncouthness marked her movements. Yet she had inherited the peculiar superiority of her ancestors. Carl followed her with his eyes wherever she went and saw in her the lady of the middle ages of which he had often read. Indeed, having lived in the same schloss, in the same wild country as they, she could not be anything else.

Instead of hunting the wild boar Carl Bischoff remained at the schloss till the time had arrived for his return to Berlin. He went away desperately in love with Gretchen Gehrenstein, and as he was the first young man of quality she had ever seen his love was returned. And, being returned, it was returned tenfold.



PICKED HIM OFF WITH UNERRING AIM.

When Carl reached his father's house the hunting season was drawing to a close. The elder Bischoff had been detained from his accustomed outing and a few days after his son's return started for the lodge. Before going he called Carl into his library and said:

"Carl, I have just completed negotiations for your marriage with the daughter of Herman von Hecker, who is in high favor with the king. I can settle upon you a fortune, and with this alliance you will be received at court. This will give you an opportunity to distinguish yourself either in the diplomatic service, the army or some department of the government."

"So?" said the young man, who was used to his father's schemes and thought it better to wait for him to replace the present one with another. "That will be fine indeed."

Bischoff was much pleased with his son's compliance and went off to the lodge in a very good humor. A few days after his arrival the Lady Gretchen was riding through the forest when she came upon a riderless horse nipping what grass remained after the frosts preliminary to winter. The trappings denoted that the rider was above the ordinary woodchopper and trapper, and it was evident that some gentleman had met with an accident. She rode about till she caught sight of a man sitting on the ground leaning against a tree. Riding up to him, she asked him what was his trouble. She did not know that he was the father of her lover, and he did not know that she was his son's sweetheart.

"I am much pleased to see you, my dear young lady," he said feebly. "In chasing a boar my horse stumbled and fell, his whole weight coming down on my leg, which I fear is broken. I beg of you to catch him that I may get back to my hunting lodge."

Gretchen dashed away after the horse and soon returned leading him by the bridle. Dismounting, she endeavored to assist the man to rise, but in the effort to do so the pain of a broken leg threw him into a faint. Gretchen waited till he had come back to consciousness, when the two consulted what should be done. They were very near a wood road. It did not seem possible for them to make any move. Their only plan was to wait for some woodcutter to come and remove the injured man on his sledge.

An hour passed. It was coming dark, and yet no one had come. The invalid was growing despondent and somewhat terrorized at the prospect of spending the night in the forest. Then the girl asked him if he would consent to stay alone while she went for assistance. He agreed to the plan. She mounted her horse and was about to ride away when a distant bark was heard. She waited, listening. The bark was answered by one near by.

"I cannot leave you," she said. "There are wolves near at hand."

Bischoff blanched. "But, my dear lady," he said, "if there are wolves you must go. I cannot consent that you should perish because I must perish."

She looked at him with a surprised expression, not seeming to understand him. Her ancestors had not been accustomed to fear any danger. It was a part of their lives. And as to leaving one of their companions to suffer death to insure their own safety, such a thing had not occurred to them. It did not occur to this faraway offspring that had never known any surroundings except those in which they had lived. She cast a quick glance at the horses, as much as to say, "They will suffice to feed the wolves if there are not too many of them." Then she took up Bischoff's rifle and examined it. It was no breechloader of the present day. Every charge had to be rammed home before another could be fired. A small rifle was hanging from the saddle of her horse. She unhooked it and laid it beside the man. Then she led her horse some fifty yards away, tied him to a tree and did the same with Herr Bischoff's horse, placing the animals on different sides of them. All these preparations she made as a general expecting an attack would dispose of his means of defense. The last preparation was the gathering of what wood she could find and the lighting of a fire.

It was quite dark before the first wolf was seen, and then only two eyes like coals of fire appeared. Frightful neighs were heard from both the horses as the brutes sprang upon them. The fire kept off the wolves, though Gretchen stood before it, her rifle in hand, and if one of them came too near she picked him off with unerring aim, reloading immediately. There was plenty of powder and ball at hand and so long as it was not necessary to fire rapidly the ammunition could be utilized. Bischoff sat with his rifle ready to shoot, while Gretchen reloaded, and with the two, the fire and the horses to satisfy the wolves' hunger the prospect was fair—that is, if not too far prolonged.

Herr Bischoff always referred to that period from the fall of darkness till daybreak as the "horrible night." For twelve hours the girl stood defending him, and then when a light began to permeate the forest the wolves were seen stealing away between the trunks of the trees. An hour later a man with a horse and an empty sledge came by on his way for wood. Bischoff was lifted on the sledge and driven to the schloss.

One morning Carl Bischoff, who was attending lectures at the university, received a letter from his father giving an account of his adventure and telling his son that he was at an old tumbledown schloss not far from the lodge with a broken leg. He desired Carl to come to him and as soon as he was able to be moved to take him home. Carl first went to the lodge, where he communicated with Gretchen, telling her that she had saved and was nursing his father and asking her not to recognize him (Carl) when he appeared.

This matter having been arranged between the lovers, Carl appeared at the schloss. When he had embraced his father and they had rejoiced that he had been spared to his family the latter said:

"Carl, I have a new scheme for you."

"Oh, father," said Carl, "you are always having new schemes! What is this one?"

"You remember the marriage plan I had for you. Well, I have changed my mind. This girl who has saved me is in truth a wild looking thing"—

"Very."

"But she has descended from great people. I think it quite possible your mother can take her and make a lady of her. Now, I wish you—if I can get her for you—to marry her. It is quite likely that by repairing this venerable pile and your taking the additional name of Gehrenstein at her father's death you may assume the title. This will be a better platform from which to enter public life"—

"Father, say no more. I cannot consent one day to please you by falling in with your selection of a wife for me and another falling in with another scheme."

"I will double the amount to be settled on you."

"Desist."

"I will spend a hundred thousand marks on this schloss."

"Do not tempt me. I am in love."

The father sighed. "With whom?" he asked lugubriously.

The son put his arms about his father's neck.

"With this girl, my old poppy, whom you have called a wild thing and who has preserved you for us."

"You love this girl?"

"Yes."

"And yet only last week you agreed to marry another."

"I knew you would change your mind."

This was the last dream Herr Bischoff had for his son, and it turned out a reality. The schloss was renewed in more than its ancient splendor, and Carl is now Carl Bischoff von Gehrenstein.

THE MAKING OF ROADS

Kingston Alderman Says That if Scheme Is Adopted Permanent Pavement Will Result

(Kingston Standard.)

Ald. Carson thinks that his roadmaking scheme is a winner, and he seems to have plenty of documentary evidence to back up his belief.

Ald. Carson says that his wonder-working material is Bermudez Lake asphalt, which was manufactured in Venezuela. He showed a letter which he had received from the engineer of the Borough of Fulham, England, who wrote that by using asphalt binder he expected to reduce the $20,000 required annually to maintain the ordinary water-bound macadam roadways of Fulham, to $3750, a yearly saving of over $16,000.

Ald. Carson also showed a letter which he had received from a big concern in Philadelhhia, in which was pointed out some of the merits of Bermudez Lake asphalt. So far as the effect of the atmosphere was concerned it was as a result of the sun shining down on it for thousands of years, a known quantity. Bermudez asphalt was an enduring product, and would last as long as the stones themselves.

The road apostle then handed the newspaper man a copy of the Sanitary Review, of Glasgow containing an informing article by the engineer of Fulman Borough on "A New Form of Road Construction." The article showed how much better were the asphalt-bound roads than the ordinary water-bound macadam.

WEARING CAPACITY.

The writer of the article, to show the wearing capacity of an asphalt-bound roadway, said that in Fulham there was a road over which for a considerable period had passed cabs, motor lorries (9 tons) coal and other vehicles to the number of 2,000 per day. For a severer test, a section had been laid down in a road subject to traffic from several contractors' wharves, where heavy loads, traction engines, etc., were the rule.

Continuing the writer said:

"There is not a sign of deterioration of any kind. The material is brought onto the road hot and direct from the mixing machinery; it is rolled with an ordinary steam roller, while hot, on a scarified and ordinary prepared surface. About 500 superficial yards are laid and completed for traffic in a day. The cost in Fulham is about 3s. 6d. to 4s. 6d. per super yard. The old macadam may be used, and two roads have been laid in this way. The material is not affected by a hot summer, having been tested on a recent summer day in June to 120 degrees Fah. It is not slippery, and is, comparatively speaking, noiseless. In laying new roads it will be quite as cheap as laying ordinary macadam."

Ald. Carson says that the necessary machinery can be provided at a very small expenditure of money, while the work can be done by local labor.

"If my scheme is adopted," said Ald. Carson, in conclusion, "by the Board of Works and the Council there will be on every street in the city a permanent pavement."

GRAND LODGE TO MEET LATE

Will Not Hold Session In Winnipeg in May—May Meet In August

The Grand Orange Lodge of British America, which was to have met in Winnipeg in May next, will not meet in that month, and may be postponed till August. The reasons for the delay are various. The chief is that the reduced rates for round trips to the west do not come into operation till June, and Parliament may still be in session in May, and if the adjournment of the House is made so as to allow the member of Parliament who so desire it, to attend the coronation in June, then the meeting cannot be held until some time in Judy. But July is the month of the universal celebration of the Twelfth, and so it would be most inconvenient for the leaders, who would be scattered all over Canada at demonstrations of the faithful, to have to journey to Winnipeg in July.

Under these circumstances it has been decided to postpone the meeting at Winnipeg, and the strong probability is that the gathering will take place at the end of July or early in August.

ELECTRICITY FOR STEAM ON QUEBEC'S RAILWAYS

The Forests to Be Safeguarded—Railways Asked to Assist—Picking out the Lemons—A Bad Scare on Food—Legislation as to Cocaine—Gambling Trust Broken Up—Other Matters of General Interest

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

ELECTRICITY FOR STEAM.

MONTREAL, Jan 30.—Although Canada's loss by forest fires was far less this past year than on any previous year, and although her record through many years has been much better than her neighbors in the United States, concerted efforts are now under way to minimize in a practical manner the many dangers which, from one source and another, beset her timber wealth. At the forestry convention, which was presided over by Earl Grey in Quebec, many opinions were expressed by noted foresters from all parts of the country on the part of those who are vitally interested in and partly responsible for timber destruction would do more for conservation of this kind than any law ever promulgated. Therefore, it may be safely said that it will not be many months before the Province of Quebec will have a plan of campaign drawn up in which the railways, contractors, settlers, hunters, and the general public who make use of the forest areas, will play their parts for safeguarding against fires. The railways have been asked to figure out the cost of replacing steam by electricity, and Sir Lomer Gouin has hinted that he would be in favor of granting no charters for new roads in northern Quebec unless they were equipped with electricity.

RECIPROCITY AND MANUFACTURERS.

Although the reciprocity negotiations at Washington are over, and interest in the subject is not so much to the fore as it was some weeks ago, it hardly seems out of place to call attention to some of the prophecies which were made at the banquet of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association here, when some of the best known men of the country sat down to dine together. That there are subjects of agitation in the country was evident from the tone of the speeches. Hon. Mr. Lemieux, Mr. R. L. Borden, Sir E. B. Walker, Mr. Donald Macmaster and Mr. Charles M. Hays each had something striking to say, and each expressed his opinion frankly. The reciprocity negotiations, the divergency of interests between farmers of the west and manufacturers of the east, the closer linking of Imperial bonds, and Hon. Mr. Lemieux's eloquent description of harmony under the British flag in South Africa were all subjects of keen interest to the more than 300 captains of industry who attended the banquet.

A BAD FOOD SCARE.

As a result of a seizure of something like seventy-five thousand gallons of Russian eggs here the other day, a rigid investigation as to how Montreal gets her food supply has been started by the Board of Control. Dr. E. P. Lachapelle, one of the Controllers, and also a member of the Provincial Board of Health, says he believes that Montreal has been made the dumping ground for bad food, refused by other cities, for years. The eggs were put up in tins for sale to the bakers and samples of them tested by the city's analysts showed that one dose of the mixture killed a guinea pig in less than a day.

GRAPHITE MINING NEAR MAYNOOTH

A Promising Mining Industry Now Under Way—in Operation Near Hybla

A new mining industry for North Hastings and a promising one is reproduction of high grade graphite. A graphite prospect is being opened in Monteagle township, about a mile east of C. O. R. tracks between Hybla and Maynooth. The prospect is on a farm belonging to Mr. Robert Best which he has sold to the company operating. The mineral was discovered by Mr. T. C. McConnell, who interested the American capitalists, who are operating at Wilberforce on I. B. & O. railway. Mr. Mathews, a mining engineer is in charge of the work, and is likely to develope a good paying mine.

The graphite occurs on a hillside and by sinking holes a few rods apart it was found that the entire body of rock is mineralized. A main shaft is being sunk and several carloads of mineral have been taken out.

The graphite is distributed through the rock in fine flakes and is treated by grinding the rock in a special mill requiring much expensive machinery.

The graphite, however, is of a high grade used for gun powder, crucibles, manufacture of steel etc. It is several times more valuable than the amorphous graphite used in lead pencils and in electric lamps.

The rock from different parts of the property tests 15 per cent. graphite which assures a rich paying property.

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Everybody is talking tariff and naturally some very funny things are being said.

The exclamations uttered by those who fell on the wet ice while on the way to church yesterday, could hardly be mistaken for prayers.

"Clear the track !" the familiar slogan of the coasters, is heard every day on the hills, but the police turn a deaf ear to it.

The weather as a topic for remark has temporarily been displaced by the tariff, but it is none the less worthy of remark on that account and it can always "come back" in good fighting trim.

The one good thing which can be said of the tariff agreement with the United States is that should it be ratified it can be changed by Canada if it works to our disadvantage.

All things considered Canada under the new customs arrangement with our neighbors may soon be in the position of the Italian on whose tombstone was inscribed : "I was well, I would be better. Here I am"

The County Councillors have voted to increase their daily pay from $3 to $5. Compared with the increase made in the pay of members of the Dominion Parliament and of the Legislature it can hardly be said that the Council have been too exacting.

Having dissipated many of their own natural products, notably pulp wood, the Yankees are to have free access to those of Canada. That is one effect of the arrangement that is now before the Parliament of Canada and the Congress of the United States. Haply the latter body is not likely to adopt the proposals submitted to them for some time to come, as the statesmen in the neighboring country are, like the Giaour in the novel "Vathek," continually crying "More More !"

London Free Press (Con.) :— Here a trade advantage, and there a trade loss; but in the aggregate our national wealth thrown open to the despoiler that he may preserve his own our manufacturing interests disturbed at the entering of the wedge of free trade with a nation of specialized industries, and a general unsettling of business that is based upon an agreement which has no greater stability than that the other party to it may terminate it at will.

After a strike, lasting seven months more than 10,000 cigar makers have returned to work at Tampa, Florida under conditions as they were when the strike was called. The concessions offered by the employers were rejected, the employees preferring unconditional surrender. It probably is fair to infer from this outcome that the workmen will strike again when the time is more favorable. The strike was marked by much violence. The weekly loss in wages ran to $250,000.

Sir William Mackenzie, in an interview at London, said :— "I am dead against any such agreement as I feel that such a reciprocity is antagonistic to the best interests of the Dominion, and that the business men throughout the country share the same opinion. Canada is prosperous enough at present and hands ought to be kept off. It is quite another matter within the Empire. If desirable to lower the tariff walls, it is also quite possible that a disagreement will result. The agreement would increase the cost of living in Canada which is quite high enough at present."

CELEBRATED THEIR 34TH ANNIVERSARY

Holloway St. Congregation Had Interesting Services Yesterday—Rev. R. H. Leitch of Port Perry Preached to His Former Hearers—Gladsome Music Appropriate to the Occasion—Large Congregations at Both Services

On August 16, 1876, the corner-stone of Halloway St. Methodist Church was laid and on January 27, 1877 the sacred edifice was opened for divine worship. Yesterday, the 34th anniversary, was commemorated by special services being held. The preacher for the day was the Rev. R. H. Leitch of Port Pery, a former popular Pastor of the church. The Rev. gentleman preached two appropriate sermons to large and appreciative audiences. In the evening hi dicource was based on the words found in 1st Corinthians, 1st chapter and 21st verse.

For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness at preaching to save them that believe.

In his opening remarks the Reverend gentleman referred to the salvation of man's soul as provided by God and the salvation has been brought to us in the golden vessel. Namely the church of the living God. There must be some medium of cognizance to the world, and God sent His word and His truth unto the end of the world through the medium of the church. Christ is the leadership. Manneeds God, he is not complete without divinity within. God purpose is complete in our creation and in our salvation. The animals seek association, the birds congregate together, the fish gather in schools and the animal condition. Look at human association. The spiritual and intellectual are provided in the church and the Saviour is the shepherd. He is for the greatest good for the greatest number. Why did Judas leave the beautiful fellowship of the disciples? It was sin. Sin not only drives us in lonely association, but from citizenship of all that is pure and lovable. How many are at present outcasts from home because of sin, and isolated from God? How we forget that we should believe in the communion of saints. God has given to us His Word, and the privilege of a fellowship that we must appreciate in order to enjoy. They that gladly receive the truth of God are converted by receiving it gladly. By contrition, confession and consecration is conversion accomplished. Man is not satisfied with material things. He hungers and thirsts after righteousness. It is our privilege and possibility to receive the Gospel of the Master in its fullest sense. The soul wants and the soul needs the bread of eternal life. Who shall preach this wonderful Gospel? The preacher, Sunday school teacher, public school teacher; yea, we can all preach it by example, and thus all be made ministers. Who of us cannot minister in holy things? We should get in fellowship with God in assisting in spreading His Gospel throughout the world. At last Jesus will gather up His own and we shall then be with Him and the saints for ever and evermore.

During the service appropriate music was furnished by the choir. Solos in two anthems were sung by Mr. J. W. Brown and Miss Foster and Mr. Taylor sang a solo.

TERRITORIAL BAND MADE FINE MUSIC

Opera House Crowded at Their Performance Last Night Despite Bad Weather

The Canadian Territorial Staff Band, a musical organization which is connected with the Salvation Army was in the city on Saturday evening and yesterday and delighted large audiences with their musical selections. It is certainly an organization which the Army has every reason to be proud of. All the members are musicians of high order and play with precision and despatch. On Saturday evening, after an open air meeting had been held on the corner of Front and Bridge Streets, in which the band participated, a meeting was held in the Army barracks on Pinnacle Street. This was presided over by His Worship Mayor Ackerman who briefly referred to the work of the Army and the good it was accomplishing. The band then rendered a number of selections which were much appreciated by the large number present. A selection entitled "All Nations," in which the colors of various nations are grouped, was a feature of the programme. A cornet solo by Capt. Myers was well executed. The band's quartette sang a selection entitled "We Are Marching," which was a fine number. On Sunday afternoon the meeting was held in the Opera House, presided over by Judge Deroche, who made a capable chairman. The musical festival by the band of sacred selections was highly appreciated. A vocal solo entitled "Anchored," was rendered by Capt. Dodd in a touching manner. The hymn "Lead Kindly Light," rendered by the Staff Band quartette, was most impressive.

In fact all the numbers upon the programme were of the highest order and were equally appreciated.

The Sunday evening meeting was also held in the Opera House, presided over by Brigadier Findlay, who gave a fine address on Army work. The band also assisted in the service.

GRIFFINS OPERA HOUSE. "PAID IN FULL."

The wonderful record of this most popular play, by Eugene Walter, will surely be maintained when it makes its appearance here at Griffins' Opera-House on Thursday, Feb. 2 and the fact that it will be seen for the first time here at regular prices will be a great inducement to our local theatre-goers to turn out en masse to witness this most successful of Broadway productions. The cast is an excellent one. Seats on sale at Doyle's Drug Store.

$100,000,000 OR $2000,000,000 MORE

Truly Canada is growing, at least in incurring debts. Another $100,000,000 or two expenditure is, so the present Government evidently think, of little consequence in this growing country so long as it will assist them in retaining power. Rodolphe Lemieux, Postmaster General, volunteered the information a few days ago, at a banquet held in Montreal, that in a few days the Government would put in motion their proposition for the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal. This has been supplemented by the statement of another Minister of the Crown that the work is to be commenced at an early day, and that, too, at the two ends, Montreal and the French River. Whether the route at Montreal will be in front of the city or by the Back River is an open question. Each has its advantages, but the latter, it is stated, is the cheapest by two million dollars. The saving of $2,000,000 will not weigh an ounce with the present Government. With it the only question that will be considered is which point will bring to them the greater political support.

The further information is that while the work will be done by contract, it will be a Government undertaking rather than that of a private company with a bond guarantee. The total cost will be considerably over a hundred million dollars, as since the estimates were prepared originally the cost of labor and materials has gone up.

This is but one of the many schemes which the Government has under consideration for expending public money. Sir Wilfrid has already promised or indicated a willingness to either deepen the present Welland Canal, or build a new canal, which would at least cost from $25,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Then we have the promised canalization of the North Saskatchewan River from Edmonton to Winnipeg, which no doubt will be supplemented by a continuance of the canal from Winnipeg to the head of Lake Superior, at a cost of a few hundreds of millions of dollars more. Such are the prospects before us. By such means the present Government expects to retain power.

The day of reckoning must come, and that, too, at no late date, or the country will be irretrievably involved in debt that it will require a decade or two to extricate itself from.

FEEDING THE HUNGRY

The Laurier Government is always ready to cater to the appetite of its friends, whose hunger is insatiable. This is particularly true of the Public Works Department, under the management of Dr. Pugsley, who is ever ready with a "hand-out" in the form of a sawdust wharf or a dredging contract, or some other fat job in the gift of his department.

One of the latest achievements of the worthy doctor in that line is the renting of buildings for the public service in Ottawa at prices which have been so extremely liberal as to have called for a discussion in Parliament. At a recent sitting Mr. Blain moved the following amendment on the motion to go into supply:

"In the opinion of this House the action of the Government in renting certain buildings in the city of Ottawa at prices which give the owners annually from 15 per cent. to 18 per cent. net on the cost of their property, is unbusinesslike, indefensible and merits the censure of this House."

In support of his motion, Mr. Blain instanced the case of the Regal building, now occupied by the Department of Labor. Formerly it was the Y. M. C. A. building, but when that institution moved into larger quarters it tried for over a year and a half to sell it. Finally the present owner, Dr. Hanna, paid $47,500 for it, and spent $32,000 more fixing it up, making a total investment of $80,000. The department pays a rental of $16,095 a year, and after Dr. Hanna has paid taxes, insurance, etc., he has a net income of $14,484, or 18 per cent. In addition to its rent, the Government pays water rates, lighting, heating, elevator service, etc., and about a third of the building is vacant. Why, asked Mr. Blain, did the Government not take some of their boasted surpluses, and purchase this building when it was on the market, instead of allowing middlemen to make a big rake-off? Everyone knew property was going up, but instead of buying outright at low prices, the Government preferred to rent buildings from their friends at enormous prices.

In the course of the debate which followed, Mr. Sharpe made a further exposure of the methods of the department. He said that Mr. Blain had been too modest in his amendment. Instead of from 15 to 18 per cent., the net rentals were more like 25 to 30 per cent. He gave some startling figures respecting the rentals paid for the Woods and Canadian buildings now owned by the Imperial Realty Company. These cost respectively $115,000 and $110,000, but the Government had spent $60,000 on permanent improvements. Rent was paid by the Government several months before taking possession, and the improvements were made in spite of the fact that the Imperial Realty Company had offered to make them at its own expense. Mr. Sharpe alluded to the rake-off in connection with the lighting and heating of these buildings. The Imperial Company had been paid $9,000 a year for heat, whereas it only cost the company $1,600.

The company got its light from the Ottawa Municipal Company for $3,000 a year and charged the Government $9,000. In all the Government was paying 30 per cent. on the amount invested in these two buildings.

Mr. Blain's motion was, of course, voted down by the usual majority, but the facts cannot be voted out of the public mind by any majority, no matter how large, and the honest electors will in due course render their verdict on the facts above cited and other matters of like kind for which the Government is responsible.

NORTH AMERICAN LIFE

FINE RECORD FOR 1910

The Thirtieth Annual Meeting of the North American Life Assurance Company was held at its Home Office in Toronto on Thursday, Jan. 26th, 1911, when the report of the business for the year ended Dec. 31st, 1910, was presented.

CASH INCOME.

The business continues to be conducted on a conservative and economical basis, the North American Life being among the foremost in this regard.

PAYMENTS TO POLICY-HOLDERS.

The amount paid on Policy-holders' Account was $877, 792.31, of which sum $142,764.06 was for surplus or dividends. Considering that the sum of $6,000 only was paid to Guarantors, the preponderance of the Policy-holders' interest is apparent.

The large amount of $480,707.85, including surplus and guaranteed reserve, was paid to holders of Deferred Dividend policies.

ASSETS.

The assets increased by $898,308.42, and now amount to $11,388,773.32. They continue to be, as heretofore, invested in the best class of securities available, principally in Mortgage Loans and Bonds.

SURPLUS.

After making ample provision for all liabilities and further strengthening the reserves, the net surplus on policy-holders' account was increased to $1,174,768.68.

INSURANCE INCREASE.

The policies issued during the year, together with those revived, amounted to the sum of $5,106,047, being an increase over the previous year. The total business in force amounts to $43,391,236.

AUDIT.

A careful and systematic audit was made every month by the Auditors, who also made a thorough scrutiny of all the securities of the Company. In addition, a committee, consisting of two Directors, made an independent audit of the securities each quarter.

According to Government Estimates

was made in Western Town Property during the year 1909

Did you participate in these huge profits or did you "pigeon-hole" the propositions submitted to you by your western friends for future consideration? In short, are you the man who made a profit or the unfortunate one who had the chance but did not possess sufficient judgment to recognize the opportunity or sufficient courage to close a deal? The man or woman entitled to sympathy is the one who says: "Five or ten years ago I had the chance to buy this or that property at $100 or $500, and now it is worth $10,000." The average persons sneers at the person who makes such a statement and says; 'I would have bought and made that money." Are you going to say five years from now that you had a chance to buy a lot at Poe, Alta., at from $50 to $100 each, or are you going to be the man who will have from $1,000 to $10,000 in cash as a result of having bought property in this town in this year of grace, 1911?

POE A COMING COMMERCIAL CENTRE.

Poe is located on the main line of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway between Edmonton and Saskatoon. It is located in one of the finest farming districts in Western Canada. The surrounding country is settled by a progressive type of farmers and consequently will become the market centre for Northern Alberta. Poe district possesses rich coal mines, is close to rivers and lakes and large forests are easily accessible from this point. These natural resources insure for the residents of the town, first, low cost of living, and second, great commercial activity, two essentials in the upbuilding of a large town, thus creating valuable real estate.

POE AS A MANUFACTURING CENTRE.

This townsite and contiguous territory has the requirements outlined by large manufacturing concerns for the location of large factories or lareg enterprises of any kind employing large numbers of people. The rivers and lakes furnish water, the coal fields and forest furnish fuel and cheap building material, the fine farming lands furnish farm products, enabling the residents to live at a low cost.

The town is located on the main line of a transcontinental railway, assuring the necessary transportation facilities. These combined conditions will furnish cheap labor, one of the most important features of a manufacturing centre.

Poe townsite was recently placed on the market and already over 200 lots have been sold, and many of these lots have already changed hands at a substantial increase in price. Most of these lots were purchased by representative business men throughout Canada, who are now profiting by their foresight.

The townsite is high and dry and very suitable for building purposes.

Prince Lucifer of Old Now Prince of Demons

Pastor Russell Finds Much in the Bible on Satan's Past, Present and Future.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Jan. 29.—Pastor Russell addressed large audiences here twice to-day at the Opera House. His afternoon theme was "Hereafter." In his evening address he discussed Satan and suggested valuable lessons from his errors. Incidentally he showed that many of us have been wrong in thinking of him as a fire stoker in a far off torture chamber; others, equally in error and out of accord with the Scriptures, in denying Satan's personality and claiming that the name represents merely the principle of evil. From the Scriptures Pastor Russell pointed out that he who is known as Satan, or Adversary of God, was not another God evil of disposition and thus contrary to our Creator, nor was he in any sense created evil. He was an angel of light, or rather, The Angel of Light. He was a Prince or Superior among the angels—a "covering cherub," as described in the Scriptures. He was glorious, beautiful, intelligent, one of the highest of God's creatures on the spirit plane. Angels in general in the Scriptures are referred to as sons of God and as stars, bright, luminous, glorious. The original name of Satan before his transgression was Lucifer, which signifies a bright and morning star.

One might suppose that an angel of Lucifer's dignity and glory would have been thoroughly content with the wonderful position of Divine favor which he enjoyed. But it is not always those who without name and fame and blessings who are ambitious for higher things. As the millionaire desires more millions, so Lucifer, rich in Divine favor and blessing, honor and greatness, longed for still more. He was ambitious. It seemed to him that the Divine programme worked slowly. He longed for an opportunity to put into exercise his own brilliant pschemes. These schemes naturally were secreted in his own heart. He revealed them to no one. He said in his heart, he would ascend above the stars; he would be as the Most High (Isaiah xiv, 13, 14). Not that he thought of usurping Jehovah's Empire, but merely that he coveted a little corner of the Universe where he could be supreme, above the other angels, exercising his own genius. This unholy thought, disloyal to his Creator, he harbored, instead of repelling as moral poison—instead of saying: "To my God I will be true." My life and every blessing I owe him. He is All-wise, whether I understand all of his doings or not.

None of the holy angels were disloyal to God and foolish enough to prefer Satan. Satan's first opportunity for putting his ambition into practise came when mother Eve was created, and he heard the Divine message that through the human pair the earth would be peopled with a race of their kind. Ambition whispered: Secure the pair as the foundation for your empire and soon they will fill the earth, and your long-cherished desires will have fulfilment.

The story of the deception of mother Eve by falsehood, and of father Adam's disobedience and practical suicide because of his love for his wife is the well-known Bible study. Satan achieved his ends and became, as Scripturally declared, "The Prince of this world" (John xiv. 30). But, alas! his Kingdom is one of darkness. Sin regins. And death, the penalty of sin, has brought to mankind pain and sorrow, mental and physical, with moral depravity. To-day Satan's empire of 1,600,000,00 is a wretched one whose only hope is in God and the Divine provision— that in due time the Redeemer, as the world's Messiah shall take the Scepter of earth and bind Satan for a thousand years, release mankind from the bondage of sin and death, and give to Adam and all his race a full opportunity for return to Divine favor, as at first enjoyed, and of knowledge, both of good and evil, of which mother Eve too precipitately partook.

The speaker quoted Jesus, the great Teacher, as saying that "Satan was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the Truth" (John vii. 44). This, he said, corroborated the many other statements of Scripture respecting the personality of Satan. An evil principle could not truthfully be termed a murderer and a falsifier. Such terms could apply only to an intelligent being, such as the Bible describes Lucifer, now called Satan.

St. Paul likewise refers to Satan as a person, saying "We are not ignorant of his devices" (II Corinthians ii, 11); and again, "We war not with flesh and blood (merely), but with wicked spirits in high power" (Ephesians vi, 12). The speaker held that Satan has certain evil angels of an inferior grade subordinate to him and over whom he is the prince or ruler—"The Prince of demons." These, he said, he might refer to more particularly next Sunday. Through these evil spirits for six thousand years a malevolent influence has been exercised upon mankind.

Not only have they preyed upon human weaknesses and passions, but, as adversaries of God, they have used every device at their command to misrepresent the Divine character and Plan, putting darkness for light and light for darkness. It was these false teachings, propagated by Sacan and his demon subordinates, that the Apostle referred to as "doctrines of devils" (I Timothy iv, 1).

The speaker believed that St. Paul had in mind the rebellious and degenerate course of Lucifer and intended to institute a contrast between the course of those in the passage which declares that Christ, the Logos, meditated not a usurpation, not to be like God, but, on the contrary, was willing to humble himself and take a bondman's form and then to become obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. The Apostle declares, "Him hath God highly exalted, and given a name which is above every name"—to which angels bow. The contrast is that Lucifer allowed pride to rankle in his heart and to lead him to rebellion, while the Logos, fully loyal to Jehovah, submitted himself obediently to every test of loyalty applied. The one who sought to exalt himself will be abased to the Second Death. The one who humbled himself in obedience to death, the death of the Cross, will experience the great reward—glory, honor and immortality much more than Satan ever dreamed of.

"Thine was the chastisement, with no release,
That mine might be the peace;
Wounded for my transpressions,
stricken sore,
That I might sin no more;
The bruising and the cruel stripes were thine,
That healing might be mine;
Thine were the sentence and the condemnation,
Mine the acquittal and the full salvation."

QUEEN OF SPAIN DECIDES TO ABDICATE HER POSITION

King's Dissipation Cause—International Scandal May Cause Castilian Throne to Totter—Gaby Deslys, Who Caused Loss of Manuel's Crown is Implicated

MADRID, via HENDAYE, Fr., Jan. 27.—Grown tird at last of the openness of King Alfonso's neglect of her and of the attentions that he is showering on favorite deminonde, of Paris, Queen Victeria has decided to return to her home in England for an indefinite stay.

From confidential court sources, the United Press learns that the queen's forthcoming visit will virtually amount to a royal separation, as she has declared that she can not longer tolerate the insults of the King, whose treatment of her is now an open book throughout Spain.

There is a long list of Alfonso's feminine charmers, past and present, and in the number is Gaby Deslys, one of the chief contributing causes to King Manuel's loss of his Portuguese throne. It develops that Alfonso was first enamored of the fair Gaby and that after he tired of her, he turned her over to the youthful Portuguese monarch, who plunged into a mad infatuation for the dancer.

Alfonso's frequent incognito trips to Paris, knowledge of which the cabinet tried hard to suppress by official announcements that the King was spendinga few days in the retirement of his home, it now transpires have been nothing more than flagrant escapades in the gay life of the French capital. On one of these trips Alfonso remained in Paris for nearly three months, although the official time of his stay was announced as only a few days.

Knowledge of his continued stay in Paris was finally revealed through a snapshot photograph of the King. This picture, however, was suppressed and the affair hushed up by a discreet display of international diplomacy.

During this prolonged visit in Paris, Alfonso's movements were such that the Paris police were driven nearly frantic in their efforts to guard him and keep his identity unknown.

English detectives had a similar experience on Alfonso's last visit to England, who he spent much of his time in the company of actresses. His attentions at this time to Lily Elsie were so flagrant that a royal scandal was narrowly averted. The pleadings of his English relatives had absolutely no effect upon the King.

Following his affair with Lily Elsie, Alfonso's became infatuated with Monra Delga, a famous Parisian beauty, who later gave way to Orlette D'Orgere, well-known in Paris music halls. At last accounts Orlette was still first in Alfonso's affections.

This is the third time that Victoria has been on the verge of renouncing he Queenship and returning to England. The first was soon after their honeymoon, when there were authoritative stories of violent differences between the royal pair. The second time was during the Catalian revolt in 1909, when the British Government sent special emissaries to Madrid to investigate the situaion and kept secret service agents in readiness to assist in the contemplated flight.

All the stories about the marriage of Alfonso and Victoria in May, 1906, being the culmination of a real love affair have long since been wholly disproved. In their place is the hard, cold fact that the marriage, like that of most other royal marriages of Europe, was arranged purely for political purposes. Alfonso never disguised his dislike of the heavy, Anglo-Saxon type of his wife and the latter was no less backward in showing her displeasure of most of the qualities possessed by Alfonso.

Naturally the King's Spanish advisors are making a desperate effort to patch up the present trouble. They have told the King plainly that his neglect of his kingdom for the gaieties of Paris is greatly increasing the danger of revolution and that in the event of a royal separation, Spain would lose her most valuable asset, the friendship of England.

So far Alfonso has given no heed to the warnings. The gay life of Paris seems to have him effectually in its clutches and there is no ground for believing that he will forsake his dissipations and neglect of his wife in time to avert an open breach and the greatest international scandal of recent years.

The King and Queen have three children, Prince Alfonso, Prince Jaime and Princess Beatrice. Alfonso, the Crown Prince, is reported to be of unsound mind.

To Freshen a Lace Waist.

A tight cut lingerie waist of white lace and embroidery gains wonderfully in elaborateness by the addition of the latest French fancy. This is a broad band of net in a pastel shade, embroidered in soutache braid of the same color and applied just over the bust. With this is worn one of the new neck scarfs of chiffon, in a color that exactly matches and with the ends embroidered in the soutache. Both of these are easily made up at home by any clever needlewoman and will go a long way toward hiding the deficiencies of a pretty but aging lingerie waist. The chiffon scarf is especially charming when embroidered its entire length with large coin dots in satin stitch.

Avoid Harsh Drugs

Many Cathartics Tend To Cause Injury To The Bowels.

If you are subject to constipation you should avoid strong drugs and cathartics. They only give temporary relief and their reaction is harmful and sometimes more annoying than constipation. They in no way effect a cure and their tendency is to weaken the already weak organs with which they come in contact.

We honestly believe that we have the best constipation treatment ever devised. Our faith in it is so strong that we sell it on the positive guarantee that it shall not cost the user a cent if it does not give entire satisfaction and completely relieve constipation. This preparation is called Rexall Orderlies. These are prompt soothing and most effective in action. They are made of a recent chemical discovery. Their principle ingredient is odorless, tasteless and colorless. Combined with other well known ingredients, long established for their usefulness in the treatment of constipation, it forms a tablet which is eaten just like candy. They may be taken at any time, either day or night, without fear of their causing any inconvenience whatever. They do not gripe, purge, or cause nausea. They act without causing any pain or excessive looseness of the bowels. They are ideal for children, weak delicate persons and aged people, as well as for the most hearty person.

They come in two size packages, 12 tablets, 10 cents, 36 tablets 25 cents. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store—The Rexall Store. J. S. McKeown.

2. Notice carefully any slip he makes while you are awake; point out the dull points to your children and your friends, it will come around to him.

3. Censure his efforts at usefulness. Deplore his want of common sense and tact. Let him know that you will not help him because A. B does, because you were not first consulted, or because you did not start the plan yourself.

4. Let him know the sins of his hearers. Show him how much he over-rates them and their unkind criticisms on himself.

5. Tell him when he calls what a stranger he is; how his predecessors used to be so friendly with you, and how much you liked them.

6. Do not tell him when you are ill. He should be a mind reader or hear it from your neighbors. It is enough trouble to send for the doctor. Tell him how badly you feel over his neglect when he calls.

7. Require him to swell the pomp of every occasion, unless there are good reasons for passing him over.

8. If he is always in his pulpit clamor for strangers; if he has public duties and sometimes goes abroad complain that he is never at home.

9. Be slow and niggardly in paying his stipend. Humbling him and keeping him poor will make him more easily managed. He will be afraid to press home disagreeable truths and will soon become discouraged and give you the chance of having another person to teach humility end poverty

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

He walked towards her and held out his hand. Her illness had brought out certain resemblances to Constance. She looked younger, as some women do look after illness. Surely he could not, even had he harbored the thought, use cruel words to this wan, stricken woman, the wife whom he had loved and for whom he had suffered.

"Nanette," he said, with utmost gentleness, "do not be distressed. Indeed, there is no reason why our meeting should be painful. It is better that we should have a quiet talk than that we should part again in anger and bitterness."

She caught his hand in both of hers. Still she said nothing. Her large eyes gazed up at him as if she sought to read in his face the thoughts he might not utter, the memories he might not recall. Her lips distended. He saw her mouth twitching at the corners.

"Nanette," he said again, though his voice was not well under control, and something rose in his throat and stifled him. "I appeal to you not to give way to—to emotion. You may—become ill again—and I would never forgive myself."

Still clinging to his hand, she sank on her knees by his side. But there was no wild burst of tears; her sorrow was too deep for such kindly aid.

"Stephen," she whispered faintly, "I cannot ask you to forget, but you have spoken of forgiveness. Can you forgive?"

He bent over her and would have raised her; she clung to him with such energy that he desisted.

"My poor wife!" he murmured, "who am I that I should deny that which I hope to obtain from my Creator?"

"But—" she panted, in that unnerving whisper—"I treated you so vilely. I left you to join that man you had fought to save me. I deserted my husband and my child for the sake of the money he bequeathed to me. In the lust of wealth I strove to crush you out of my heart. And now that God has humbled me I must humble myself. Stephen, I am not your wife. I obtained a divorce—"

"Nanette," he cried. "I cannot bear to see you kneeling at my feet. I ask no revelations. I forgive you any wrong you may have done me, fully and freely, as I hope to be forgiven."

She yielded to his pleading and allowed him to raise her. For an instant she was clasped to his breast.

"It would be happiness to die in your arms, Stephen," she said, wildly. "I do not deserve it, I know, but Heaven is merciful."

The dreadful idea possessed him that in her weak state this passionate wish might be granted.

"Nanette!" he cried, "you must control yourself. If you will not promise [illegible] and talk quietly, I will leave you."

She obeyed him instantly.

"I don't care how much you scold me," she said, "but you must not go away. I meant to see you before I left Penzance. I came here that night. I looked through the window. I saw my daughter and her adopted sister listening to you and weeping because of a mother's shame. Then I must have lost my senses. I ran away. I remember nothing else until I woke up to find Constance caring for me—in your house."

He tried to break in upon the trend of her thought. This was by no means the line he had intended to pursue. His hope was to soothe and calm her, to part from her in amity and without giving her cause to deplore a loss of dignity.

"I am only too pleased that when illness overtook you you were committed to my care and to Constance. Poor girl! She thought you were dead."

"Did you tell her that?"

"No, but I allowed it to be assumed, which is the same thing."

"When did she know the truth?"

"In the hotel—after you left the room. I had to say something. It was—better—for you—that I should say you were my wife."

"So, even in that trying moment, you strove to shield me from unjust suspicions. Stephen, how could I have acted towards you as I did?"

Again he endeavored to lead her to talk of the future rather than the past.

"There is one great surprise in store for you," he said. "But it is a pleasant one in every way. Enid is Mr. Traill's daughter."

"I am glad," she said simply. "I do not understand, but you must tell me another time. Just now, I can think only of you, and of myself. You muct listen, Stephen. I will do all that you demand, hide myself anywhere, but you must know everything. When we parted, when I deserted you to nurse a dying man, I was foolish and wilful, but not wholly abandoned. Nor have I ever been. I was rich enough to gratify my whims, and, for a time, I lived in Paris, on the Riviera, in Florence and in Biarritz. But I was always meeting people who knew you, and, although my wealth, and perhaps my good looks, kept me in a certain set, I felt that our friends invariably took your side and despised me. That embittered me the more. At last your father died, and I saw some vague reference to your disappearance from society. I employed agents to trace you. They failed. Then I went to America and lived on a ranch in Nebraska, where I obtained a divorce from you on the ground of desertion. Desertion, Stehen! That was the plea I raised."

She gave a mocking little laugh. Brand, thinking it best to fall in with her mood, sat in silence on a chair which he had drawn close to the window. From his house he could see the wide sweep of Mount's Bay. The Trinity tender was steaming out from the harbor. It struck him as an extraordinary fact that this was the day of his relief had he served his full two months on the rock.

To-day by his own design, the second era of his checkered career would have come to a peaceful close. Within a little while he would have taken Constance, and Enid, if unmarried, on that long-contemplated Continental tour. But the hurricane came, when "the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm," and the pillar, the refuge of his distress, became the centre of influences destined to mold his life afresh.

What did it all mean? He bowed his face into his hands. He heard his wife's low, sweet voice continue:

"I lived there nearly six years. Then my manager died. He was an Englishman named Vansittart. Within a month his wife died. There was some fever about the place, and I became frightened. A longing for the old life seized me, and I went east, but not as Mrs. Brand, the name which I always bore in Nebraska. I had done with it and with you, as I thought—Constance never entered my mind save as a feeble memory—so I became Mrs. Etta Vansittart."

Brand raised his head and looked at her again. She was speaking now in a curiously subdued tone. She was giving evidence against herself, and giving it truly.

"In Newport, Saratoga, and the Adirondacks in summer, in New York during the winter, I lived in a drowsy content. People who take drugs must reach that state, but their condition is pitiable when they are aroused. Many men asked me to marry them. I laughed at the idea. At last I met Mr. Traill. We were friendly for quite five years. I came to Europe, to the Engadine, where I found that Mrs. Stephen Brand's troubled life was forgotten, but Mrs. Vansittart, the rich widow, was popular. There I saw Mr. Traill again. He offered me marriage, and I fancied it would be well to ally myself with a man so distinguished and widely known on both sides of the Atlantic. I did not love him. I respected and admired him—that was all. I accepted him, but stipulated that I should go back to the States and wind up my affairs there, returning to Paris for the wedding. That was necessary, if I would maintain my deception. So, Stephen, after a lifetime of vagary and wandering, this is the result. I am bespattered by the mud of my own acts; I see my forgotten daugher grown to beautiful womanhood; I meet my husband, whom I might have loved and honored, patiently following the path into which my neurotic impulses drove him. Stephen, do you think my punishment is completed?"

The bitter self-condemnation in her voice was not defiant but subdued She had traveled far in spirit through the Vale of Tears since the Gulf Rock barred her onward progress.

Though she asked a question she seemed to expect no answer. Brand thinking to render her task less trying, was still looking through the window and watching the steady churning of the tender towards Carn du and thence to the lighthouse.

ALL DRUGGISTS

Aviator as Herdsman.

Houston, Texas, Jan. 30.—Rene Simon, the aviator, known on two continents for his daring, has added new laurels to his record, when for the first time in the history of aviation, he demonstrated Friday afternoon that herding cattle with aeroplanes was possible.

Simon left the aviation field, and heading across the prairies, darted directly for a herd of cattle grazing half a mile away. Cowboys were just arriving preparatory to rounding up the animals, when Simon descended and circulating around the steers soon had them on a trot toward the aviation field. He drove them up to the fence separating the field from the prairie and then started them off westward, delivering they to the cowboys.

Barrie Doctors Burned Out.

Barrie, Jan. 30.—Fire which did damage to the extent of about $2,000 broke out about 11 o'clock Saturday night in the beautiful home and offices of Drs. W. A. and Fred Ross on Dunlop street. The fire started in the disinfecting cabinet in the basement, Dr. W. A. Ross having been called out on a case during the evening which was thought to be contagious, on return home removed his clothes, placing them in the cabinet and started the disinfecting apparatus.

After the doctor had been upstairs but a short time, it was discovered the clothing had caught fire, and in turn had set fire to the building. Some of the family, who had retired for the night, were quickly gotten out and removed to safety in neighboring houses.

Corsican Has Stormy Time.

Halifax, Jan. 30.—The Allan liner Corsican, which arrived in port on Saturday night from Liverpool with the English mail and five hundred passengers. She encountered terrible weather off Halifax in a blizzard on Saturday morning. Captain Cooke arrived off the harbor at six o'clock, and ran into the worst storm of the winter. The wind was blowing fifty miles an hour, and after several attempts to make the harbor the captain decided to anchor until the evening, when the wind shifted. The blizzard that swept the coast was one of the worst for years. It is remarkable that considering the fierceness of the storm, how little damage was done.

Father Morriscy's Remedies

Now on Sale in Ontario

When Father Morriscy, the famous priest-physician of Bartibogue, N. B., died a year ago last spring, he left his prescriptions to the Sisters of the Hotel Dieu, at Chatham, to be used for the benefit of humanity and of the church.

Not being in position to make up and distribute the prescriptions themselves, the Sisters arranged with a number of gentlemen, who had been Father Morriscy's friends, to do it for them. These gentlemen working under the name of the "Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Limited," had by the first of the year placed the remedies in nearly every store in the Maritime Provinces.

So gladly were they received, and so satisfactory has been their record of cures, that the Sisters and the Company have decided to place them on sale throughout Canada.

Father Morriscy's "No. 7", for Rheumatism and the Kidneys—"No. 10", Cough Cure and Lung Tonic—"No. 11", Stomach Remedy—"No. 26", for Catarrh, and "Father Morriscy's Liniment"—can now be obtained from most dealers in this Province. If yours does not keep them write the Father Morriscy Medicine Co., Limited, Chatham, N.B.

LATE TELEGRAPHIC NEWS

PACT IS INTRODUCED

Congressman McCall Presents Tariff Agreement.

Member of Ways and Means Committee of the Lower U. S. House Puts Machinery in Motion—Many Things May Happen to It—It May Be Delayed Till Too Late or Amended and Killed.

Washington, Jan. 30.—Representative McCall of Massachusetts, a member of the ways and means committee, Saturday introduced in the House the administration bill to carry out the reciprocity agreement with Canada. The bill was referred at once to the ways and means committee.

The introduction of the bill by the Massachusetts man, instead of by Mr. Payne of New York, chairman of the ways and means committee, occasioned some comment. It is interpreted in many quarters to indicate that Mr. McCall will take a prominent part in steering the bill through the committee and in engineering its progress on the floor of the House.

While members of the committee decline to discuss their prospective attitude on the measure, it has become fairly well established that the McCall bill will pass through committee and come out on the floor of the House within a comparatively short time.

The first move will be to take up the bill at a meeting early in the week and determine if any hearings will be held upon the measure. It is the opinion of several members of the committee that if certain delegations representing industries seriously affected by the lowering of the tariff rates wish to be heard by the committee, an opportunity will be afforded before any final action is taken.

There will be no extended hearings, however, and no opening of the bars to all the tariff arguments that might be introduced for and against the terms of the new arrangement. Members of the committee believe the facts upon the various items were fully elicited in the hearings held during the preparations of the Payne-Aldrich bill; and that to renew extensive hearings upon the reciprocity agreement would needlessly and dangerously delay its consideration by the House.

As a bill to raise revenue, it will be subject to amendment and change, unless a rule of closure is first put through the House prohibiting amendments and forcing the House to vote on the reciprocity agreement as a whole.

The negotiations are received in a definite and concrete arrangement, which cannot be changed in any particular, without upsetting the balance and the effectiveness of the whole agreement. For this reason, it is the opinion of those who favor the approval of the Canadian pact, that the ways and means committee and the rules committee will have to prepare a rule providing for its consideration as a whole, and without amendment.

The impression has been strengthened that President Taft's determination to secure action on the measure at this session is such that he will resort to an extra session if it becomes necessary to bring the matter to final consideration in both Houses of Congress. The extra session talk has caused no little worry at the capitol. The leaders of the Senate do not believe an extra session will be necessary, even in the light time remaining in this session to dispose of the trade agreement in both Houses.

If defeat comes, it is said in the Senate, the Democrats of the House, after a fairly careful poll by the leading members of the minority are apparently disposed to accept the treaty and to support it in debate and with their votes. They look on it both as a tariff change in line with Democratic ideas, and as a serious attempt on the part of a Republican President to take the tariff out of politics and elevate it above political dispute.

The McCall bill, after indicating the duties that are to be levied upon Canadian products, proposes that they shall become effective as soon as the President ascertains and issues a proclamation showing that Canada is levying similar duties against American products. The free importation of certain articles is to become operative as soon as the President becomes satisfied that Canada is doing the same to the United States.

N. Y. American's View.

New York, Jan. 30.—The American's Washington correspondent thus sizes up the reciprocity situation:

"Canadian reciprocity faces defeat in the present temper of Congress. A poll of the two Houses taken yesterday by The New York American discloses such opposition to the reciprocal trade agreement which President Taft made public Saturday as to suggest that all the force of the administration will be necessary to secure action at this session.

"The committees to which the agreement has been referred—finance, in the Senate, and ways and means, in the House—are apparently in agreement against the plan. By delaying a report on the agreement either can defeat action.

"Arrayed on the side of the members of these committees are most of the stand-patters in both branches of Congress. The Republican leaders have learned nothing as a result of the November elections. On the other hand, the Democrats are almost soldily in favor of the agreement.

"An extra session of Congress looms up in consequence. President Taft is averse to this action, but there is reason for believing that if assurance could be given that the Democrats will ratify the reciprocal agreement as submitted without attempting to tack on to it amendments that would upset the plan, the President would issue the call.

"A large non-committal vote in both branches of Congress is disclosed by The New York American's poll. President Taft is concentrating all of his powers of persuasion on these members, who hold the key to the situation.

"Representative McCall of Massachusetts, a member of the ways and means committee, yesterday introduced in the House, the administration bill to carry out the reciprocity agreement. The bill was referred at once to the ways and means committee.

IN HANDS OF CLIQUE.

Travers Says Ring Made Him Their Slave.

Toronto, Jan. 30.—The statement of W. R. Travers, former manager of the Farmers' Bank, containing a sensational story of the affairs and transactions of the Farmers' Bank, is now in the hands of Inspector of Detectives Duncan. This confession consists of forty or fifty typewritten pages, and it is said to contain a full account of dealings which were not set down in the books of the bank and could not be discovered by the curator. The story of Travers is said to be to the effect that he was at the mercy of a clique of men who made him treat them liberally with the funds of the bank. One man, whose name is withheld, obtained $60,000 from Travers because he had threatened to put the bank out of business. Two of the men most severely blamed by Travers for assisting in his downfall have quietly disappeared from Toronto and the police so far have not located them. Travers, it is alleged, was advised in some of his irregular dealings by a lawyer whose name has not yet appeared in connection with the bank, and action is threatened against him, if a clear case can be made out.

One of the missing men is said to have reported on several mining propositions for Travers.

Turks Attack Consul.

Constantinople, Jan. 30.—J. Ridgley Carter of the American embassy, with the rank of minister plenipotentiary, Saturday lodged a protest with the Porte against the assault and indignities to which the American consular representatives at Smyrna and Alexandretta were recently subjected.

It appears that a sergeant instigated a mutiny among fifty Turkish soldiers, who were being transported on the steamship New Jersey. When the vessel reached Alexandretta she was flying the American flag, and the United States consular agent, John T. Peristiany, went on board to investigate. There he was set upon by the soldiers and driven from the ship. During the attack his hand was cut and his coat torn off.

The local police arrested some of the soldiers, but the captain of the New Jersey refused to surrender the sergeant, the ringleader. The vessel proceeded subsequently to Smyrna, where there was a second row over the question of whether the soldiers or the sailors of the New Jersey were primarily at fault. When the vessel docked, its second mate was arrested. At this stage of the quarrel the American consul-general, Ernest L. Harris, took a hand, with the result that he was roundly abused by the warring factions.

Killed by Bandits.

Mexico, Jan. 30.—San Juan Evangelista, terminal of a branch of the Tehuantepec Railway, and San Juan, Jalampan, near Coatzacoalcos, are reported in despatches from Vera Cruz to have been occupied by revolutionists under the command of Dr. Enrique Silmenares Rivas, president of a political club in Atoyac, State of Vera Cruz.

Rivas is said to have been at the head of former rebellions in Quatemala, and to have passed several years in Cuba.

An account of murder and savagery, of which an American Mormon family, and a young Canadian, were victims, reached here yesterday in a private letter from Dublan, near Casas Grandes. Four bandits attacked and robbed the home of James Mortensen, and brutally mistreated Mrs. Mortensen and a thirteen-year-old daughter.

Subsequently the latter was shot and killed while preparing a meal at the command of the robbers. An American by the name of Madison escaped, and in reply to his appeal Marius Cox, a native of Canada, attempted to assist the Mortensens, but fell dead under the fire of the bandits.

Black Snow In Alps.

Geneva, Jan. 30.—A strange phenomenon recently occurred in the Emmenthal Valley and the surrounding mountains when "black" snow fell to a depth of fifteen inches, giving the whole country, which was white with snow before, a funeral and most depressing aspect over a large area.

The first few inches of snow was of a greyish color, as if mixed with ashes, but the grey became darker and darker in hue, until now it is almost black.

Such a phenomenon has been witnessed in the Alps in former years after volcanic eruptions in different parts of the world, and on this occasion Swiss scientists are of opinion that the black snow is due to ashes blown over the sea and Alps after the recent eruption of Mount Etna.

The cold in the Alps on the Swiss-Italian frontier is intense, the thermometer registering 12 degrees below zero centigrade on the Simplon. In a hut between the Simplon and Domodossala three persons have been found frozen to death.

Orgies of Lloyd-Georgism.

London, Jan. 30.—J. L. Garvin, editor of The Observer, in an article in that paper yesterday, says that British democracy is likely to pay dear for the "Orgies of Lloyd-Georgism."

"The first forfeits," he continues, "will soon be demanded. What the tariff reformers prophesied has at length happened. President Taft has secured the initial triumph for North Americanism."

U. S. Gunboat Safe.

Washington, Jan. 30.—The gunboat Wheeling arrived in Guantanamo, Cuba, Saturday. This advice was flashed to the Navy Department by wireless, setting at rest the fears for the vessel's safely. It was rumored to have met with an accident at sea.

ANNOUNCEMENT MADE

Official Appointment of Connaught as Governor-General.

He and the Duchess Will Arrive In September and Term of Office Will Be Two Years—It Means Another Bond of Empire, Say London Papers—Will Offset Tendency Shown In Tariff Agreement.

Ottawa, Jan. 30.—The official announcement of the appointment of the Duke of Connaught as Governor-General of Canada, in succession to Earl Grey was received yesterday.

A cablegram from the Colonial Secretary to His Excellency states that His Royal Highness will be here in September, and that the term of his office will be two years, with no doubt the possibility of extension.

The Duchess of Connaught will accompany him.

London, Jan. 30.—(C.A.P.Cable.)—It is officially announced that the Duke of Connaught will succeed Earl Grey in September as Governor-General of Canada. He will hold the appointment for two years, subject to further extension.

The London Daily Mail says that the Duke of Connaught will have an immense success.

The Mail asks: "Does Connaught succeed to an empty throne? Has Canada, by drawing nearer the United States, set her foot on the road to separation from Britain? Some will see in the reciprocity agreement the end of imperial federation. Undoubtedly, these relations will grow till Canada and the United States have a common market. Now the agreement gives rein to forces, against which the preference the British imports is of no avail.

The Graphic says: "In Connaught we send of our best in a double sense." It recalls that 41 years ago the duke smelt powder in the Fenian troubles. Canada, in regard to the agreement may safely assume it says, that mutual affection will be undiminished by a commercial arrangement adding prosperity to the Dominion.

The Morning Post remarks: "The Duke of Connaught's appointment marks the final stage of the entrance of the oldest and largest Dominion as a nation, equal in status to the inhabitants of the United Kingdom, constitutionally connected with them by no link, except allegiance to a common sovereign. It is a momentous experiment.

"Canada is destined to be either British or else American. Touching her economic interests or defence interests and moral interests conjointly, if her economic interests become predominantly American, so will her defence policy. The national idea of the people may not wish it so, but if an economic bond is established, the sequence will be beyond power of their control.

"Nations are master of their fate only for a time. This country has still the opportunity, though it is rapidly receding to revert to commonsense and lay the basis of imperial union by establishing imperial reciprocity."

Prof. Hewins opines in The Morning Post that a complete reciprocity treaty will follow, facilitating the known aims of many far-seeing Americans for political absorption. Britain, he says, will now have to face the world-wide competition of the Canadian market.

The Telegraph discusses the appointment, eulogizing Canada, and declaring that a fresh, bright page opens a new regime. Canada's heart will go out to the representative of the consummation of many loyal hopes.

The London Express says: "The appointment is a new departure, entirely in consonance with the new conception which has taken place of the crown in imperial life. It is a tribute to all the dominions overseas, and its significance will nowhere be ignored."

The Times says the appointment will meet with warmest appreciation in both Houses. The duke will reach the Dominion at a profoundly significant period. It is gradually being recognized that the tariff arrangement is a momentous departure. We should be the last to believe that Canada's acceptance of America's terms implies any weakening of her allegiance. On the contrary, it involves so profound a modification of conditions that the basis of consolidation the trade policy of both must be reconsidered. Canada is only on the threshold of her national life. Britain must not relax the fibre strengthening and maintaining the imperial system. The Duke of Connaught will take a wide view.

Contract Let For New Railway.

Montreal, Jan. 30.—It is learned that a contract has been signed with the Bishop Construction Co. for the building of a railway from a little below Ste. Anne de Beaupre to St. Catherines Bay at the mouth of the Saguenay River, a distance of about 160 miles.

This work, which will pass through Murray Bay, and will skirt the River St. Lawrence all the way down, is to be started at once and rushed forward to completion. It will be remembered that the railway in question was financed by Rudolphe Forget, M.P. for Charlevoix County, and will be subsidized, so it is said, by both the Federal and Quebec Governments.

Should Be Taught to Write English.

New York, Jan. 30.—A special cable to The Tribune from London says: One of those literary discourses which are always read with delight was delivered Saturday by Lord Morley to the members of the English Association. English boys, he said, were not taught to write English, and the significance of that was the indifference implied to one of the noblest and most powerful of tongues. Surely not the least stupendous fact in British annals was its consequence in the boundless area of the habitable globe, influenced by the English language. There was in the past no parallel to it.

WILL PRESS CHARGE.

King Will Put End to Morganatic Marriage Story.

London, Jan. 30.—The News of the World says that King George's advisers have instituted criminal libel proceedings, with the objects of ending once for all rumors which have been freely circulated for years that His Majesty, when Prince of Wales, was morganatically married to a daughter of an admiral at Malta.

The defendant in the case is Edward F. Millus, who is said to be connected with the paper, The Liberator, publisher in Paris, which printed the statements on which the libel charge is based. Millus was arrested some weeks ago, charge at Bow street, committed for trial and sent to jail.

In the ordinary way the case should be tried in the Central Criminal Court, but on application of the crown it will be brought up in the high courts on Wednesday next, before Lord Chief Justice Alverstone and a special jury.

According to a statement in The Liberator, the defendant intends to file a plea of justification and also to subpoena the King as a witness. The constitutional law, however, makes it impossible for His Majesty to give evidence in his own courts, notwithstanding that he may be anxious to do so.

Practically all of the London morning papers publish stories of the intention of the King's advisers to carry the case to the courts on the charge of criminal libel. It is noteworthy that The Morning Post, referring, in a recent article, to the arrest of Millus on Dec. 26., said that he was charged with being concerned in the publication of seditious statements, but the paper made no reference to the alleged morganatic marriage, merely saying that the alleged seditious statements referred, among other things, to the policy followed by this country in Egypt and India.

Scottish Landscape Painter Is Dead.

London, Jan. 30.—John MacWhirter, the Scottish landscape painter, died Saturday. Born at Slateford, near Edinburgh in 1839, he was educated at Peebles and later pursued his art studies at the Edinburgh School of Design, becoming an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy in 1864, and associate of the Royal Academy in 1879, and academician in 1894. MacWhirter was intensely national in sentiment and was a brilliant member of the Scottish school, excelling in his transcriptions of the wild scenery of the highlands. One of his specialties lay in the drawing of the mountain boich, that graceful tree inspiring many of his finest canvases. His diploma works was "Nature's Archway," and his "June in the Austrian Tyrol," purchased out of the Chantrey bequest, is now in the Tate Gallery in London. The deceased artist married, in 1872, Katherine, daughter of Prof. Menzies of Edinburgh University.

To Force Chinese.

St. Petersburg, Jan. 30.—Russia is on the point of employing pressure to improve its trade conditions in Mongolia. It is intended to force China's consent to the opening of a consulate at Kebdo, in Western Mongolia, thus lifting obstacles now in the way of Russian commerce.

The Novoe Vremya calls upon the Government to send to China an ultimatum on the situation, embodying in it a threat to reoccupy Kulja, Chinese Turkestan, which, from 1871 to 1881, was a Russian possession.

Drowned In Bay.

Hamilton, Jan. 30.—While skating on the bay yesterday morning, Fred. Smith, aged 21, eldest son of Mr. Henry Smith, 80 Wood street east, skated into the channel that had been cut by the Dewey & O'Heir Ice Co., and was drowned before assistance could reach him. Albert Smith, whose home is at 156 Brock street, Brantford, with him at the time, is also missing, and it is feared he also went to death in the water.

Baron Winterstoke Dead.

London, Jan. 30.—Sir Wm. Henry Wills, first baron Winterstoke of Blagdon, died suddenly yesterday of heart failure.

Lord Winterstoke was born in 1830 and was created baron in 1906. He was pro-chancellor of the University of Bristol, director of the Great Western Railway, and chairman of the Imperial Tobacco Co. He was a noted breeder of cattle and horses.

DEDUCT HALF MILLION

Arbitrators Make Their Award In N.T.R. Dispute.

Gordon Grant, B. B. Kelliher, and Collingwood Schreiber Send In Their Report to the Government With Regard to Over-Classification and Overbreak by Contractors—Several Months Occupied In Taking the Evidence.

Ottawa, Jan. 30.—Half a million, approximately, is to be deducted from contracts on the eastern division of the National Transcontinental Railway, in respect of over-classification and allowance for overbreak.

This is the effect of the award of the arbitrators—Gordon Grant for the Transcontinental commissioners; B. B. Kelliher, for the G.T.P., and Collingwood Schreiber, C. M. G., chairman. The report has been sent to the Government, and represents several months of work, in which the different sections were examined and notes taken on each cut.

The finding of the arbitrators does not say in so many dollars how much is to be deducted, but it takes each particular part of the work complained of and lays down a ruling as to what the measurements and allowances should have been. This will be compared with what was allowed, and if the latter is in excess of the arbitrators' findings, deductions will have to be made accordingly. As stated, about half a million dollars will be taken off contractors and subcontractors. It will come out of the drawbacks held by the Government.

The complaints were made by the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, whose concern arises from having to pay interest on the total cost of the eastern section.

If dissatisfied with the award the contractors will have the right to appeal to the Exchequer Court. The contracts involved are about $60,000,000.

London Printers Strike.

London, Jan. 30.—The general strike in the job printing trade is already under way and the number of employes involved will be rapidly increased this week when strike notices expire. The men have been offered a working week of fifty-two hours, but they demand a maximum of fifty hours.

The principal firms this far affected are Spottiswoods & Co., Ltd., contractors for much Government and other official work, and Waterlow & Sons, Ltd.

The weekly periodicals managed to appear as usual Saturday, but curiously the new daily, started in support of the printers' campaign, failed to publish on Saturday.

The daily newspapers are not affected and their compositors have agreed each to contribute $2.50 weekly in aid of the strikers.

Mrs. Ward Dies.

Newton, Mass., Jan. 30.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward, author and lecturer, died at her home at Newton Centre Saturday night, after a short illness, at the age of 67. Her husband, Herbert D. Ward, was in the south when she was taken ill, and reached home only yesterday.

Mrs. Ward was born in Boston on Aug. 31, 1844. She began to write for the press when but thirteen years of age. She was the author of "The Gypsy series" of four volumes appearing in 1865. From that time until very recently, hardly a year passed that a book from her pen was not published.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

demands on the common energy-fund, continuously depriving other parts of a healthy functioning power. Thus we can readily see that organs can be diseased without the cause being in them or their governing nerve centers.

Of all organs in the body, the eyes are most capable of demanding and getting an excessive share of the general fund of nerve-energy from the human power-house, for the following reasons:

1. The feeling of vision is the most acute of all the senses, because it is actively aroused by one of the most imponderable elements known to science—light. By the impact of its delicate waves our consciousness is made to feel shape, motion and color. Its rays, reflected from various objects, pass through the cornea, the aqueous humor, the crystalline lens, the vitreous body.

COUNTY COUNCILLORS RAISE THEIR OWN PAY

It Was $3 per Day and is Now $5—Many Bylaws Introduced and Passed—High School Trustees Appointed—Tudor Enpowered to Sell Minerals Under County Road—Grant to Stirling High School

Friday, Jan. 27th, 1911

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Council resumed at 2 o'clock.

Moved by Mr. Hanley, seconded by Mr. Cook, that Mr. J. L. Newton be appointed chairman of Roads and Bridges for 1911.—Carried.

Mr. Clarke moved, seconded by Mr. Nugent, that a grant of $200 be made towards assisting in building a bridge on the boundary between Limerick and Wollaston townships.—Carried.

BY-LAWS.

The council went into committee of the whole on by-laws, Mr. Farrell in the chair.

A by-law was introduced authorizing the Warden and Treasurer to borrow $63,300 to meet the current expenses.

A by-law was introduced to appoint an auditor for the Administration of Justice accounts and the blank in the by-law was filled in with the name of Mr. Tummon, Reeve of Huntingdon.

High School Trustees were appointed as follows: Stirling, M. Bird; Madoc, C. Whitlock; Deseronto, A. R. Rickson; Trenton, C. W. Myers.

A by-law was introduced to appoint two members of the council on the Board of Management for the House of Refuge. The members selected were Messrs. W. H. Kells, and P. McLaren.

A by-law was introduced to empower the county to allow the Finance and Public Property Committee to sell certain minerals which are alleged to be under a road in Tudor township.

Mr. Gunter spoke in favor of the by-law which he contended was a good offer made to the county by Mr. T. L. Roberts, who is interested in developing the mineral resources of Tudor township. Mr. Roberts has at present an option on property on either side of the road and he desired to develop the same. Mr. Roberts was prepared to lease or purchase land owned by the county and will protect the county in every respect.

A by-law was introduced to amend By-law No. 392. This amendment was in relation to the pay to county councillors.

Mr. Kirk moved, seconded by Mr McLaren, that the pay for councillors be $5 per day.

Mr. Hanley moved in amendment seconded by Mr. Dryden that the pay be $3 per day.

Mr. Vermilyea said the members were now receiving $3 per day and 5 cents per mile for miles necessarily travelled. He would not vote for an increase. For the past four years the crops had not been good and we should think of those in the country who are struggling to make a living. If you vote for that by-law, about $2000 additional expense will be added to the county.

Mr. Kirk said he introduced the by-law because circumstances were not as they were when By-law No. 392 was passed. Expenses have increased, board is higher, and an increase in salary to members should be made.

Mr. Ketcheson said the tax payers of Sidney township were complaining that the taxes were now too high. He lost money by attending the County Council, but he would not vote for an increase.

Mr. Cook said this was a case when arguments could be used on both sides. One of the worst features of this matter was that the present members of the council would be benefitted. He would rather support an increase of salary at the December session, when the members of next year's council would be benefitted.

Mr. Tummon coincided with the remarks of Mr. Cook. Whilst he believed an increase was proper he could not support it.

Mr. Kirk—"Put us on the free list the same as Porliamentarians are doing with some articles."

Warden Dryden said that whilst he was satisfied with the pay he received, he did not wish to inflict an injustice upon any of the councillors who thought they were entitled to an increase.

Mr. Cook moved, seconded by Mr Hubble, that the by-law be referred to the December session.

Upon a vote being taken, the motion for an increase of pay to councillors was carried by a vote of 15 to 10.

A clause in the by-law recommended that the pay for members be $5 per day, for attending committee meetings of the council.

Mr. Hanley moved in amendment that $3 per day be paid for committee work. This amendment was carried.

A by-law was introduced to establish a bridge committee to be composed of five members of the council.

A by-law was introduced to repeal by-law 557, appointing J. Duffin as High County Constable and that Sheriff Morrison be appointed High County Constable without salary.

The committee arose and reported.

When the vote to adopt the vote was called for Mr. Vermilyea asked for the yeas and nays in reference to increase the stipend to members of the council. The vote was as follows:

In favor of the by-law:— Messrs McLaren, Kirk, Newton, Grant, Gunter, Thompson, Nugent, Kells, Walker, Mather, McLellan, Stewart, Hubble, Netterville, Douglas, Moore and Stringer—17.

Against the by-law :— Messrs. Hanley, Ketcheson, White, Tummon, Fox Farrell, Vermilyea, Sills, Cook, Montgomery, Maloney, Clarke and the Warden—13.

The report of the committee was then adopted.

STIRLING HIGH SCHOOL.

A report from the special committee composed of Messrs. Kells, Cook and Hubble, in reference to a grant to the Stirling High School, recommended that a grant of $2,000 be made.

Mr. Vermilyea contended that it was not right to make such a grant to the Stirling High School. He was opposed to such a grant. It would be necessary to have a two-thirds majority of the council to pass the report.

Mr. Cook said that the Department of Education compelled the village of Stirling to make extensive repairs to the High School building.

Mr. Mather said that the Stirling High School trustees were not asking for a gratuity, but simply what the Board was justly entitled to. He differed from Mr. Vermilyea that it required a two-thirds vote of the council as it was not a gratuity. He congratulated the Committee for the report they had presented.

Mr. Hubble said that Stirling village deserved credit for the interest it had taken in the matter of education. The sum proposed by the committee was in lieu of spreading over a grant of $3,000 in three years which he claimed they would be entitled to.

Mr. Kirk spoke in support of the report as presented by the committee.

Upon a vote being taken the report was adopted and the question of the legality of making such a grant was referred to the solicitor for his opinion as to whether it required a two-thirds vote or a bare majority of the members.

Council adjourned until 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

HOME WEDDING IN THURLOW

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bowers of the 3rd concession of Thurlow was the scene of a very pretty event on Wednesday evening, January 25th, when their daughter, Frankie, was united in marriage to Mr Dana W. Grills, of Corbyville. The ceremony was performed by Rev. S. A. Kemp of Cannifton, in the presence of about fifty guests from far and near. At 7.30 in the evening the wedding party entered the drawing room to the lively notes of the wedding march played by Miss Jennie Fluke, of the Lost Channel.

They passed beneath a beautiful arch of evergreens decorated with bells and balls in a manner that showed the marvellous taste of the willing hands that had arranged them.

The bride was very prettily gowned in cream pantoy, with hand embroidery and silk insertion. She wore a bridal veil fastened with lilies of the valley, a necklace of amethyst, and carried a bouquet of white carnations. The bridesmaid, Miss Tessie Oliver of Actinolite, looked very pretty in a dress of pale blue silk mull, trimmed with val. insertion and carried pink and white carnations.

Little Miss Elda Grills, sister of the groom, acted as flower girl, dressed in old rose cashmere and carried a basket of flowers concealing the ring.

Mr. Edmund Bowels, brother of the bride, acted as groomsman.

After the ceremony the party sat down to partake of the good things that lay in delicacy and profusion upon the different tables.

The groom's present to the bride was a set of mink marmot furs; to the bridesmaid a brooch of amethyst and pearls; to the groomsman a watch fob; and to the little flower girl a pretty gold bracelet. The presents were many and useful.

The bride's travelling dress was of purple velvet with a white picture hat.

Mr. and Mrs. Grills took the midnight train for Toronto and other points west, and upon their return will reside at the home of the groom in the 3rd concession of Thurlow where many friends wait to welcome them and to wish them a long and happy life together.

which will be introduced in the House of Commons by the Hon. Mackenzie King is a direct result of the investigations made by a little band of workers in Montreal, who found that the cocaine snuffing evil has reached large proportions in the city and country, and is doing untold damage to the boys and girls of Canada. Mr. King will ask for cast iron legislation setting an absolute ban on the sale of cocaine in the Dominion of Canada except for medicinal purposes and providing heavy punishment for violators of the law. The present laws have proved totally inadequate in coping with the evil, and Chief Carpenter of the Detective Bureau has made the startling announcement that fully four-fifths of the young boys and girls who fall into his hands have the habit in a greater or lesser degree, and that he and his men are powerless to check the sale by unscrupulous druggists.

THE GAMBLING TRUST.

The so-called gambling trust, which flourished here for years unmolested, has been broken up, and retired into seclusion. Brady was all powerful until one of his lieutenants squealed. houses in all parts of the city were raided and to-day there is not a wheel turning.

PICKING OUT THE LEMONS.

An incorporation of brains might well describe a company which has just made its bow to Montreal. It is a new idea in Canada to incorporate brains, but besides having brains it has a capital of $500,000. When a man wants to invest his savings he is invariably met with the question: "What securities are safe?" Canada is full of gold brick propositions these days. Some of them are mining and oil propositions gaudily decorated. Others are questionable land speculations. All will bear investigation. Some of them will be good; some of them may be bad. They will all seem good if you believe the promoter. How to distinguish? That is a problem which has been worrying the investing public for ages, but a problem which hereafter will have been solved. A company known as Corporation Agencies, Limited, whose business is to advise, has been formed. Corporation Agencies also intend to act as agents for Canadian undertakings, with a view to bringing them to the attention of capitalists here or abroad. A large staff of consulting engineers, auditors, accountants and other expert investigators has been carefully selected for this most interesting and important work. It is the first institution of its kind in Canada.

A Good Idea in Hair Treatment.

The trouble with most women's hair is that they won't take the time to give it proper treatment. If you want your hair to have that look of lustre and vitality, you must take care of it. You cannot expect to have splendid hair if you simply run a comb through it in the morning—give it a dab on the outer edge with a brush—throw it into a braid—switch it around the head—jab in a few hair pins—and let it go at that.

Hair is like any other growing thing—it needs attention—it needs care—it needs thorough grooming regularly—not only the hair but the scalp.

If you have the time and patience you won't need any hair tonic—but most women haven't. The next best thing is Nyal's Hirsutone. It is the best thing offered to take the place of hours of combing and brushing.

Hirsutone literally revitalises the neglected hair.

Your Nyal Druggist cheerfully recommends Hirsutone because he knows. In artistic bottles $1.00 and 50c.

THEIR PARENTS TURN THEM OUT

A despatch from Pittsburg, Penn. dated Jan. 20th., says :—

Willis F. McCook, jr., eldest son of Willis F. McCook, multi-millionaire counsel to the Carnegie Steel Company, and friend and confidential adviser of Andrew Carnegie and C. M. Schwab for years, has just eloped with Margaret Norris, the twenty-two year old daughter of a poor carpenter of this city. The young pair went to the home of the groom's fother, who refused them admittance. Then they sought refuge with the bride's parents, who also refused to take them in.

The McCooks are Roman Catholics and the Norrises, who are Scotch Presbyterians, have very strong scruples on the matter of religion.

When Willis F. McCook, sr., who was furious at the elopement, heard that a carpenter had turned his daughter out of doors because she had married his son, he is said to have indulged in a fresh outburst of anger.

Meanwhile, young McCook, who was to have inherited $10,000,000, has found work in a steel plant.

The parents in this case have their summer home in Cobourg.

TOMORROW'S ELECTIONS

In Foster and Coleman Wards to-morrow, aldermanic contests will take place. In each wad there are two candidates one of whom will be elecred.

ARBITRATION IS STILL GOING ON

A MEMORIAL TO THE LATE EDWARD HANLAN

Toronto is having a suitable memorial to the late Ned Hanlan, Canada's greatest oarsman. At a meeting of those interested it was decided to erect a memorial on Hanlan's Point.

The outside rowing clubs will be invited to join. It is also proposed to call the Domnion Day Regatta the Hanlan Memorial Regatta, and to try and improve the Hanlan's Point regatta course.

The committee will not seek public subscriptions, as two or three big sums have been promised by three men, but will ask the Dominion and Provincial Governments and the city of Toronto to contribute.

CURLING.

Two rinks from the local club, who will compete in the finals for the tankard, left at noon to-day for Toronto. The drawing will take place this evening and play will commence to-morrow morning. The following players composed the local rinks:

B. Iler,	A. McGie,
S. W. Vermilyea,	S. Robertson,
F. Quick,	P. McL. Forin,
J. A. McFee,	M. Wright,

The Kingston Standard says:—Are lady curlers superstitious? Several admiring husbands of the local lady curlers went to the curling rink yesterday to see the match there with the Belleville lady curlers, but almost immdiately upon there appearance the men were "shooed" out of the rink, much as a woman "shoos" a flock of chickens." The reason given for this was that the other ladies felt that the curlers could not do so well with their husbands looking on and hence the latter were sacrificed "for the good of the cause." The men say it was worse than cruelty to animals.

HOCKEY NOTES.

George Stott of Cobourg tells a good one on Fred Waghorne, that "Wag" did not tell the Star. Several years ago in a junior game at Belleville, the Belleville manager produced a telegram from W. A. Hewitt, the O. H. A. Secretary, saying a playing certificate was to be forwarded for a certain player. The Cobourg manager objected as the telegram might not be genuine. "Wag" settled the dispute after looking at the telegram. 'That's all right,' he said, 'sure, don't I know Billy Hewitt's writing.' The player played.

Port Hope added another victory to its list Friday evening, defeating Picton by a score of 5 to 3. Notwithstanding the heavy condition of the ice, the game was very fast, but at times inclined to be rough. The locals had by far the better of the play having ten shots to Picton's one, but the ice being sticky, there was not much speed to the puck, and consequently it was easy for the goal keepers. The crowd thoroughly enjoyed the battle, as was shown by the liberal applause.

MONTREAL, Jan. 29.—In the presence of more than six thousand spectators at the Arena Saturday evening Ottawa defeated the Wanderers by 8 goals to 2 and secured a grip on the National Hockey Association championship that is not likely to be loosened.

After holding Ottawa scoreless for three quarters of the time the champion Wanderers wilted and suffered a humiliating defeat. With less than fifteen minutes to go the Montreal players led 2 to 0. Then followed the biggest "blow up" seen on the Arena surface for a long time.

Five goals in less than two minutes and eight in five minutes show how completely the home team wilted after they had kept Ottawa shut out for 50 minutes of the hour's play.

RECRUITS COST YANKEES $24,150

NEW YORK, Jan. 27.—The New York American League club has paid a total of $24,150 for new playing talent for next season. The top price is $7,000, paid to the Rochester club for Catcher Blair, who was disposed of by the Highlanders for $2500 last spring. Blair improved so much with the Eastern League champions that the New York club practically allowed the Rochester club to name its own terms rather than have some other major league club get the young backstop. The new players and the prices paid for them are as follows:

Catchers—Walter Blair, purchased from Rochester club for $7000; Williams, drafted from Canton club for $500; Walsh, repurchased from Jersey City club for $500.

Pitchers—Caldwell, purchased from McKeesport club for $2600; Revelle, purchased from Richmond club for $2500; McClure, repurchased from Huntington club for $500; McGrainer, drafted from Parkersburg club for $300; Ables, purchased from San Antonio club for $1000; Ryan, purchased from Norfolk club for $2500. Ryan died in November of pneumonia.

Outfielders—Bailey, purchased from Lancaster club for $800; Kauf, drafted from Parkersburg club for $300.

HORSE AND TRACK.

The following is a full list of horses that the Hon. Clifford Sifton, K. C. M. P., is sending over to London, for the purpose of exhibition and competition at the great Coronation Horse Show to be held at the Olympia during the coming summer: Elmhurst Stayaway, Glenwood, Last Post, Confidence, The Wasp, Viceroy, Grey Wasp, Cleveland, Allan Doone, The Joker, Ironsides, No Trumps. The last two will be ridden by Lieut Winfield Sifton, at Olympia, and Jack Hamilton will act as manager for Mr. Sifton's horses.

James Murray, of Crow & Murray, who was last week at Denver, Col helping to judge at the great horse show there, when there was a daily attendance of 9,000 persons, with over 2,000 turned away, is also going to Olympia, and will take with him the famous Sky Scraper, who obtained high honors at the last New York Horse Show.

Jockey Carroll Shilling probably earned more money last year than any other race horse rider in the world. The young man in a recent interview said he received nearly $60 000 for his services from various turf men in 1910, of which S. C. Hildreth alone paid him $30,000. For riding Novelty to victory in the Futurity at Saratoga, Shilling declared that Hildreth not only thanked him for his his great horsemanship but made him a present of $5,000 in cash.

William K. Vanderbilt was the leading winning turfman of the world in 1910. The American millionaire's racers won $203,760. This sum was obtained by numerous victories on the French turf. His thoroughbreds not only won the greatest number of events in France but excelled all other horses in the matter of races won during the year.

As each has won a battle their next one ought to be a corcker.

Jimmy Howard, the Chicago welterweight, has two bouts on his hands. On next Saturday night he will meet Eddy Haney of Philadelphia for six rounds at Jack O'Brien's Athletic Club of Philadelphia, while on Jan. 30th he will take on Bill Hurley, the middleweight of Glens Falls, N. The trio sailed from Sydney on Saturday. Cyclone Johnny Thompson, the other American fighter, is still there.

QUEEN ADDS TO COURT

Seven New Attendants—The Countess of Minto Becomes Lady-in-Waiting

Queen Mary has just added to the list of her ladies-in-waiting the Countess of Minto, just home from India; also Lady Ampthill, sister of the Earl of Beauchamp, Minister of Public Works in the Asquith Cabinet, and whose husband, Lord Ampthill, was Governor of Madras and acting Vice roy of India. The third is Lady Desborough, better known, perhaps by her former name of Mrs. William Henry Grenfell and as mistress of Taplow Court, near Maidenhead, on the Thames, where many Americans have been entertained. Her husband was known twenty years ago as one of the finest athletes in England.

FOUR MAIDS OF HONOR, TOO.

Queen Mary also has appointed four maids of honor. The first one is the Hon. Venetia Baring, daughter of Lord Ashburton by his first wife, the present Lady Ashburton being the former New York actress, Frances Donnelly. Then there is the Hon. Sybil Broderick, daughter of Lord Middleton by his first marriage. The third maid of honor, who by virtue of her appointment will enjoy the prefix of "Honorable" to her name for the remainder of her life, is a daughter of the Hon. Mrs. George Villiers and niece of Lord Clarendon; while the fourth is Miss Mabel Gye, daughter of the Hon. Mrs. Herbert F. Gye, whose husband was for many years British Consul at Brest and whose father was Gen. Lord Bridport.

CANADIAN NORTHERN'S PACIFIC TERMINAL

C. N. R. Starts Clearing Townsite of Port Mann, the Company's Pacific Terminus

It is announced at the head offices of the Canadian Northern Railway at Toronto that contracts have been let and work started on clearing the townsite of Port Mann, the Canadian Northern's Pacific terminal. Four thousand acres, with a water frontage of 2 1-2 miles, have been surveyed, and nearly one thousand men are engaged upon the work of laying out the townsite, which will be completed within four months. The town is situated on the south bank of the Fraser river, a little east of New Westminster. The river at this point is over one mile wide and there is a depth of 40 feet of fresh water at the docks, providing ample accomodation for the largest steamers afloat. Work will shortly be commenced upon the erection of car shops, repair shops and foundries. Immense terminal elevators will be erected, also large bonded and storage warehouses. The general British Columbian offices of the Canadian Northern Railway will be located at Port Mann, and plans are already under way for coal docks to handle the output of the extensive coal properties on Vancouver Island, recently acquired by Canadian Northern interests. Ten thousand men will be directly employed in the work of the railway in its car shops, foundries and other terminal works whe the line has been completed connecting the Pacific seaboard with the Edmonton lines. Construction work on the line is being rushed from both ends, as, under the arrangement with the British Columbia Government, the work must be finished before the close of 1914. The grade on many sections is already nearly completed and some fifteen thousand tons of steel rails are on the way from Sydney, N.S., to Port Mann.

Some four and a half years ago Mr. P. J. Smith came to this city from Montreal to assume the superintendency of the Canada Bolt and Nut Company's industry, better known as the Rolling Mills. Since his advent in the city Mr. Smith has by his affable and kindly disposition made a host of friends. He is about to leave the city for Winnipeg, where he will be similarly engaged. DRANK FOR 100 YEARS

And Walked Three Miles Every Day After He Was One Hundred Years Old

(The Alberta Constitution.)

Joseph Zeitlin, who remembers the days when Napoleon pillaged Moscow, has closed the 106th chatepr of useful life. One hundred and six years—literally achieved "by reason of strength"—had not impaired his faculties or dulled the edge of his appreciation of what life holds. He will be buried from his home in Brooklyn to-morrow. And yet this remarkable figure defied rule and precept, as these daily customs will attest:

He began each day with a drink of whiskey.

He surrounded a pint during the day.

He drank beer to quench his thirst.

He smoked as much as he pleased.

He got up at four o'clock each morning.

He cut his daily walks down to three or four miles a day after he was 100 years old.

Mr. Zeitlin was born in Skiov, Russia. He came to America to start life in a free country twenty-eight years ago at the tender age of eighty.

When he arrived in New York his son-in-law did not desire him to work, but the youth of eighty insisted, and was made collector for a cigar factory.

His wife died at the age of ninety from shock incident to fire. Even grief did not operate to break up the strength. "Daylight," he said, "was made for work; the dark for sleeping. If the young men would quit staying out all night they would not be wrinkled at fifty or be using spectacles and trolley cars."

CURRENT COMMENTS.

Add still another to your list of zero weather. Four below zero last night.

No one has ever attempted to say anything in behalf of the Ward system. Why? Because it is simply indefensible.

The enormous sum of seventy millions of dollars is to be expended in making London, England, the greatest seaport in the world, in reality as it already is in name.

The United States International Harvester Trust stock went up two points when the news was received that it was to add Canada to its field by the reciprocal agreement.

Toronto Telegram: Is this country the home of any Canadian Clubs worthy of the name? If so these organizations should hasten to witness for Canadianism against Continentalism.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke well when he said that the twentieth century is to be Canada's; but he is now proposing to give it away to the United States under the proposed reciprocal trade agreement.

Rumor has it that the Hon. J. J. Foy, Attorney General of Ontario, is to retire from office, owing to ill health caused by over-work. It is to be hoped that the rumor is incorrect as Mr. Foy has proved himself a most capable head of Ontario's legal department.

The official announcement that Prince Arthur, Duke of Connaught uncle of King George, is to be the next Governor-General will be received with general satisfaction throughout the Dominion. Prince Arthur is not a stranger to Canada, as he toured the country in 1867, accompanied by Sir John A. Macdonald and was presented with an address at Belleville. His Royal Highness is certain to fill his high office with great acceptability.

King George has taken criminal proceedings against a journalistic thug in Paris who invented the scandalous story that the King, while serving in the navy, had contracted a morgantic marriage with the daughter of an Admiral, by whom he had a family. Such stories die hard, but King George is determined to put an end to this one, which has continued in circulation despite his repeated denials.

The vultures who have been preying upon the public purse through over-charges by means of false classification of work on the National Transcontinental Railway, which was exposed by the Conservatives in Parliament, and which the Government found necessary to refer to a commission of experts, have been deprived of half a million of dollars of the illicit gains which they had hoped to pocket. That is one of the many good services which the Conservative party has rendered to the country

YOUNG MEN AT EPWORTH LEAGUE

Boys Had Charge of the Meeting and Gave an Entertaining Programme

The young men of Bridge St. Methodist Church last evening took entire charge of the Epworth League meeting. On the platform were young men leaders. The pianist for the occasion was not even taken from the ranks of the ladies. Mr. Garvin Berkley made a very alert chairman of the meeting and outlined the subject of the evening and announced the different numbers of the programme. The theme of the service was a report of the recent Y. M. C. A. convention for boys held in Ottawa at the beginning of the year. Mr. Harry Dickens first spoke upon the special trip to Ottawa, when Sir Wilfrid Laurier honored those assembled with an address full of wholesome advice to young manhood.

Mr. Arthur Morden gave a capital synopsis of two speeches delivered at the convention.

The additional field of Y. M. C. A endeavor was explained by Mr. Arthur Steele. He told of the Boy Scout movement as fathered by Gen. Sir Baden-Powell and Ernest Seton Thompson, the well-known naturalist The practical aims and laudable objects of the movement were summarized from the Guide Book.

Mr. Harold Holton contributed a choice mandolin solo and was ably accompanied by Dr. Day on the piano.

The budding young men of the evening were likewise much encouraged by a few encouraging words from the pastor, Rev. Bishop, also the hearty applause from the ladies present.

At the close President Arthur Marsh feelingly expressed the League's sympathy over the painful bereavement and sorrow in the home of one of the League members.

OLD OFFENDER GOT FIFTEEN MONTHS

Mrs. Hannah Richardson Sentenced by Magistrate Masson Today For Theft

Mrs. Hannah Richardson, the middle aged woman, who was convicted of stealing $5 from her employer and also stealing some silverware and linen from the Queen's Hotel where she was at one time employed, was this morning up before Magistrate Masson for sentence. The accused is evidently a hardened criminal. She, has been convicted of theft at Toronto and Oshawa and it also is alleged that she is a bigamist although it cannot be proven. This morning she said she was a maried woman but her husband was of no use wherever he was.

The magistrate, after commenting upon the charges, sentenced the woman to 15 months in the Mercer Reformatory on both charges, the sentences to run concurrently. Whilst being led to the cells the woman used rather unsavory language towards the police and those who had convicted her.

HONORED THEIR DEPARTING FRIEND

Mr. P. J. Smith Received Valuable Parting Gift From Staff Over Which He Presided

The estimation in which Mr. P. J. Smith, Superintendent of the Canada Bolt and Nut Company's plant here, is held by the employees of the company was strikingly evidenced last evening. Mr. Smith having resigned in order to accept a more lucrative position at Winnipeg, the staff were called together at 5.30 p.m. and, Mr. Smith being invited to join them, Mr. George Foster addressed him as follows.

Dear Mr. Smith: The announcement of your intended departure for Winnipeg to take charge of an important industry in that city has created a feeling of genuine regret among our citizens generally, and more particularly among the employees under your charge.

We have observed with pleasure, the public spirited interest you have displayed in every movement for the betterment of our city, and for the general welfare of its citizens, and we have pride in the fact, that you are now recognized and honored as being one of the most aggressive and most enterprising of our citizens. But it is more in our relation as employees of the Canada Bolt and Nut Company under your superintendance, that we have learned to admire and appreciate these sterling qualities of character, which have made it a pleasure for each of us to comply with your every order or wish, and have made our relations so harmonious during the years you have been in charge of these works.

We had hoped that you might have continued with us for many years to come, but we recognize that your own personal interests are best served by your acceptance of a much more responsible and lucrative position elsewhere. We cannot, however, allow you to leave us without an expression of our sincere appreciation of your many acts of kindness, and of your personal consideration of our general welfare, which have been evidenced on every hand.

We beg of you, therefore, to accept from us as your employees this cabinet of silver which we offer you as a slight expresion of our regard and esteem, and with this gift, we also tender you our sincere and best wishes for a future filled with health, happiness and prosperity, in which, we trust, your dear wife and daughter may share for many years to come.

Signed on behalf of your employees.
(Signed) F. Y. Brenton, Geo. Burgess, J. K. Smith, W. H. Bessack, J. Murphy, Geo. Foster, B. McCoy, F. H. Lesher, John Jones, M. B. Horce.

At the conclusion of this address Mr. George Burgess handed to Mr. Smith a very handsome cabinet of silverware, alluded to in the address.

When the loud applause and the loud greetings of the steam whistles of the place had subsided Mr. Smith expressed his thanks and appreciation in a feeling manner, and the proceedings closed with cheers from all present.

Public Buildings

A notable feature this session has been the active participation in the business of the House by practically all the members of the Opposition. They have been especially vigilant in Committee of Supply and have brought to the attention of the country, as never before, the way in which public works are being peddled by Pugsley and his associates. In theory the Public Works Department looks after the construction of any building required by the Militia Department, the Post Office Department, or any other department of the Government. As a matter of fact, some of the departments do their own work, notably the Railway Department. But, broadly speaking, all building for the Government is supposed to be done by the Department of Public Works. This department performs many political manoeuvres under the guise of serving the Post Office Department, the Post Office Department being thoroughly efficient and paying its own way. The public is naturally disposed to view leniently any expenditure for its benefit. Hence at every session of Parliament estimates are presented for the construction of Post Office buildings throughout the country, or, to speak more accurately, throughout certain portions of the country. Many of these proposed buildings are extremely costly and greatly out of proportion to the needs of the community to be served. Post Office buildings are provided for small villages in Quebec where the total postal revenue does not exceed $60 a month and where the Government is able to rent all the accommodation required for $50 per year. The thing works out in about this way: The Government in such a village pays from three to five thousand dollars for a site; a twenty thousand dollar building is erected thereon, making the new Post Office cost in the neighborhood of $25,000. To take care of this building men must be employed, whose compensation will swallow up nearly all the revenue of the Post Office.

That Tariff Pact

Discussion of the proposed tariff agreement between Canada and the United States continues with much animation in the press. As a matter of course, the Liberal newspapers are, with few exceptions, loud in their praise of the proposition, and the less that some of the Grit editors know of the subject the more vociferous they are in praise of the work of the Canadian negotiators.

But there are a few honorable exceptions to this rule. Among these is the Ottawa Free Press, which, although it is the home organ of the Government, comments thus adversely:

"Unless the Dominion Government is prepared immediately to increase the British preference, the step which Canada is asked to take is a very grave one indeed. Reciprocity with the United States may be an historic policy, embraced by all political parties since pre-Confederation days, as Mr. Fielding says, but in the last fifteen years, largely as the result of the unfriendly exclusiveness of the United States, Canada has been making history in another direction—the direction of closer and warmer Imperial ties of trade, as well as sentiment.

"Our plans in these years have all been laid, at an enormous expenditure of moneys loaned to us by English capitalists, for developing trade within the Empire. A reciprocal agreement with the United States, such as that now proposed, threatens, or seems to threaten, to upset to a considerable extent those plans, unless Canada's existing tariff barriers against England are removed altogether or considerably lowered. In the opinion of the Free Press, the removal or reduction of the tariff against England should precede, not follow, reciprocity with the United States."

A storm of protest against some of the proposals, in which Liberals and Conservatives have alike taken part, has arisen, and the more closely are the proposals examined the more generally are they condemned. The manufacturers of agricultural implements, the transportation companies, the fruit and vegetable growers and the representatives of other industries have voiced a strong protest, and the result of the discussion in Parliament, which is to begin this week, will develop much more opposition.

Unfortunately, however, as the Mail and Empire points out, Mr. Fielding seems not to have realized that in his recent bargaining he succeeded in binding the Government of Canada without in any way binding the Government of the United States. The Laurier Government is bound in honor to make its part of the arrangement effective by legislation. To do this it must go through the form of introducing a resolution in the House of Commons and submitting it to a vote. An adverse majority would mean the defeat of the Government and an appeal to the people. Therefore, every Liberal member is bound to support the resolution, under pain of wrecking the Administration and incidentally losing his own seat with his salary and other perquisites appertaining thereto.

In the United States, on the other hand, the members of the House of Representatives are perfectly free to ignore President Taft's recommendations, without in any way affecting his tenure of office or their own. Then again, the United States Senate is perfectly free to defeat any measure the House may pass, but the Canadian Senate has no power to amend or reject a money bill.

Thus, Canada not only gets the worst of the bargain, but our representatives in Parliament are precluded from amending it. That is a sort of "statesmanship" which none but our present rulers would be guilty of.

AFTER GRIP

LOOK OUT FOR TROUBLE.

The after-effects of the Grip are apt to be serious but a normal healthy condition may be restored in a surprisingly short time by Vinol.

I began taking Vinol with the very best results and in a short time I began to feel like an entirely different person and I am better and stronger than I have been for years." Adelaide Gamm. Belleville Honors Departing Citizen guest of the evening Mr. O'Flynn spoke of the regret felt at the removal of Mr. Smith from the city, but expressed the wish that he would prosper in the West, whither he was going.

Song— "O Canada," by Mr. Jas Dyer.

MR. PORTER, M. P.

Mr. E. G. Porter, K. C., M. P., was called upon to respond to the toast of "Canada" and did so in his usual masterly manner. Before speaking to the toast proper Mr. Porter said it was to be regretted that Mr. Smith was removing from the city. Al Mr. Smith had not long been a resident of the city he had by his social qualities and business ability won many friends. He (the speaker) wished Mr. Smith God-speed. In speaking of the toast Mr. Porter said the great question was the good citizenship of Canada. All the wealth of the mines, the forests, the fisheries etc., was not all that made Canada The progress of Canada was marked by the lives of eminent men. When we look at the early history of Canada, and the faith those men had has made it possible for us to enjoy many of the luxuries we enjoy to-day The virgin soil of the West is but waiting for the settler to bring forth the fruits of prosperity. Business today is carried on in palatial places of business. The agricultural class the professional men, and the business men of this country are to-day leading in the van towards true citizenship. To-day Canada is turning out professional men who are a credit to any country in which they choose to make their lot. By the energy, pluck and courage of Canadians citizens this country is progressing. It is up to all of us that Canada should occupy the high pedestal she is destined to do. He regretted that so many able Canadians had left this country and gone to the neighboring Republic. But he was pleased to state that thousands af Americans were coming into Canada and they would no doubt make good Canadians. The young Canadians of today are of such a class that we can safely say that we are proud of them

MR. JOHN ELLIOTT.

"Our Business Interests."— This toast was most appropriately proposed by Mr. J. Elliott, Manager of the Standard Bank. He said that in Belleville there were between 30 and 40 industries, which are sending goods all over this Dominion and even beyond the Dominion. The speaker referred to the cheese industry of this district which meant much to the city and vicinity. He advised all to join the Board of Trade and thus help to boost the city. He with the others present regretted Mr. Smith's leaving the city, but wished him every success.

MR. D. V. SINCLAIR.

Ex-Alderman Sinclair said there were these present who were doing much to advertise Belleville by the goods they were sending out. We are now no longer a stopping centre, but an industrial centre. What we want here is more industries. We have great advantages here in the way of shipping facilities, cheaper power etc., and unitedly we can make this city a better city.

MR. KETCHESON

Mr. H. F. Ketcheson responded to the toast and spoke very encouragingly of the prospects of the city in the manufacturing line. It is up to us to advertise the city in the trade journals and thus help to get industries located here. Let us be up and doing, and make Belleville what it is destined to be,— a city alive with industries.

Song, "Where are the Boys of the Old Brigade," by Mr. S. R. Burrows

MR. R. LARMONTH.

Mr. Larmonth Manager of the Seymour Power Company, was called upon to respond to the toast of "Our Business Interests," and did so in an appropriate manner. He said if the sentiments expressed here tonight were put into practice there would be no doubt that Belleville would prosper. The company that he represented had now about 75,000 horse power to sell and no doubt it would be increased to over 100,000 This power would be furnished at a cheap rate. Belleville should in the near future be in a position to go ahead. In the near future a gentleman would be in the city and his duties would be to try and induce industries to come to the city and this geneltman would be at the service of the City Council or the Board of Trade.

MESSRS. SNEYD AND SPRINGER

Mr. H. Sneyd, Manager of the Merchants Bank, and Mr. C. W. Springer, of the Springer Lock Manufacturing Co., responded to the toast and both expressed delight at the prospects of Belleville going ahead. Mr Springer said his ambition was to make the industry he was connected with the largest of its kind in Canada.

MR. DEACON.

Mr. W. B. Deacon referred to the necessity of having better shipping facilities, by having the Bay at points deepened and the Murray Canal deepened. We have possibilities that will make Belleville a Bigger and a Better Belleville. The Board of Trade have invited the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways and Canals, and we are only waiting for these Hon. gentlemen to fix the date when they will visit the city and their visit will no doubt be beneficial to the city.

MR. MIKEL.

"Our Educational Institutions"— Mr. W. C. Mikel, K. C., in proposing this toast referred to the educational institutions which were in the city and the good they were accomplishing. There was no reason why Belleville with its natural advantages should not go ahead and become a great hive of industrial pursuits Maks it the great active business centre of this portion of the province.

COL. W. N. PONTON.

Col. Ponton responded to the toast in his usual affable and able manner The Board of Trade, he contended was an educational institution, an advisory board with the City Council in assisting the city in its industrial development. We were advancing in the matter of education, which would be a benefit to the city as a whole. We want better schools and better playgrounds to assist in developing the boys. His closing remarks were to play the game. As glorious as our past had been, let us look forward to the glorious future Educate our boys and girls and inculcate into them the spirit to play the game.

REV. MR. SMITH.

Rev. G. Smith, pastor of the Baptist church, said he was pleased to be present on this occasion. He was glad to add his tribute to the testimony which had been given in favor of Mr. Smith. He had known him but a short time, but he had found him to be a man of sterling worth He was a Canadian, although a graduate of Yale College, and in that College there was a Canadian club who every year on the first of July, held a banquet. The Rev. gentleman concluded his remarks with a couple of amusing anecdotes.

MR. HESS.

Mr. J. L. Hess, Secretary of the Y M. C. A., responded to the toast briefly, but to the point.

MR. LAURIE.

Mr. Laurie, who is connected with the Rolling Mills, was called upon and spoke feelingly of Mr. Smith's removal from the city. The mechanics and employees all felt keenly Mr Smith's going away, but wished him every success.

MR. H. CORBY.

Mr. H. Corby, ex-M. P., said that Mr. Smith had endeared himself to the citizens of Belleville, and he regretted his removal, but he hoped that when Mr. Smith had become wealthy he would move to the first city on the Globe, namely the City of the Bay. (applause) He (the speaker) had travelled over a large portion of the world and there was no place he liked better than the beautiful city of Belleville. Mr Corby said that Canada was a great country and the importance of this country was manifested by the Americans endeavoring to make trade relations with us. He hoped the two countries would get together and make some equitable agreement in trade matters. Although he was opposed politically to Hon. Messrs Paterson and Fielding he was pleased that those two ministers had gone to Washington and made a pact that he hoped would be beneficial to both countries. We cannot do better than extend the hand of friendship to our friends to the south of us. (applause)

MR. SMITH'S SPEECH.

"Our Guest"— Mr. R. Tannahill proposed the toast and did so in an admirable manner. Mr. Smith's career here had been most satisfactory, and it was regretable that he was leaving, but not before he had made a host of friends.

Mr. Smith said he appreciated very much the kindness that had been extended to him since coming to the city. He could not see where he had done so much that this demonstration had been accorded him. Four years ago he came to Belleville from Montreal, and when leaving the commercial metropolis for Belleville, he was told it was in the backwoods He said in reply that Belleville was on the Bay of Quinte, but what was wanted here was better shipping facilities by water. Influence the Government to deepen the Bay of Quinte at points and the Murray Canal What you want here also is the C. P. R., which is stretching its hands all over the Dominion. If this was done it would mean much for the city. There is in and out of Belleville double the tonnage at Oshawa and other places. The Board of Trade and the citizens should do all in their power to get the C. P. R. here. He had been informed that there was a movement on foot to get a depth of water in the Bay here where larger vessels could be loaded at the cement works and also at the city. Cheap electric power was in store for Belleville, and this will be an advantage. Let all put their shoulders to the wheel and make Belleville an industrial centre and perhaps some day he might return to the city. (applause) Belleville he knew, was progressing and would he felt confident, prosper in the future. He wished to thank the employees of the mills who had stood loyally by him since he had been identified with the mills. Mr. Moore the new superintendent was returning to Belleville after a brief absence He would go to Winnipeg with the best wishes for Belleville and anything he could do or say for Belleville he would gladly do so. (applause)

Song— "When There's Love at Home"—Mr. S. Burrows.

FROM THE ABSENT.

Ald. Chown, the indefatigable Secretary of the affair, who had much to do towards its success, read a letter of regret from the following gentlemen who were unable to be present: Messrs. T. H. Watson, J. W Johnson, M. P. P., Walter Alford W. E. Schuster, H. Pringle, J. F. Wills, and C. M. Reid.

MR. L. W. MARSH

"City of Belleville."— Ex-Mayor Marsh proposed this toast and said that he always found Mr. Smith a man. Our loss will be Winnipeg's gain. The ex-mayor said that a conference was being arranged between the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Railways and Canals in reference to deepening the Bay of Quinte at points, and other necessary improvements. The speaker then referred to the toast, speaking in glowing terms of the future prospects of the city.

THE MAYOR.

Mayor Ackerman, in responding to the toast, at the outset referred to Mr Smith and the loss the city was sustaining in his removal from our midst. In speaking of the city, His Worship said the city was going ahead. What we require in Belleville was a booster club, who would assist the city in its advancement Although it was said the taxes in Belleville were high, they were by no means as high as in other places, and the city is going ahead. The sinking fund would, if kept up, in the year 1937 wipe out the debenture debt of the city.

Aldermen Riggs, Anderson, Sills, Caldwell and Chown responded to the toast appropriately.

Song—"There's a Hole in the Bottom of the Sea," by Mr. D. Bleecker

MR. FOSTER.

Mr. Foster, who is also connected with the Rolling Mills, corroborated the remarks of the former speaker.

DR. COUGHLIN.

Dr. Coughlin, Principal of the Deaf and Dumb Institution, re-echoed the sentiments of the various speakers in regard to the sterling qualities of Mr. Smith. In speaking along educational lines the Doctor referred to the Institution he presided over and the good that was being done. It was a benefit to Belleville in that upwards of $1,000 was expended weekly and the greater portion was spent in Belleville.

CLOSING TOASTS.

"The Ladies,"— Responded to by Mr. D. Bleecker.

"The Press,"—Responded to by the representatives.

Col. Ponton proposed a toast to the Chairman which was heartily received and responded to by Mr. W. B. Deacon.

The proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem and Auld Lang Syne.

COCKING MAIN RAIDED ON SUNDAY

While a Gambling Layout and Large Temporary Bar Were Liberally Patronized

MONTREAL, Jan. 30.—One of the biggest cocking mains that have been started in this vicinity in years was broken up at Charlemague across the river from Bout de l'Ile, at noon by officers of the Society fo rthePrevention of Cruelty to Animals, who drove to the scene of battle in a big touring car.

The cock pit had been fixed up in a vacant farm house, and when theofficers broke into the place they found about 300 sports watching a main that was in progress between birds from Montreal and Quebec.

So intent was the crowd on the battle in the cock pit that it was only when Chief Inspector Walker jumped into the pit and caught the two birds battling that they realized a raid had been made There was a rush to get out of the place. and in their hurry the majority were not particular as to their manner of exit, going pell-mell through doors and windows. When the rush for the exits was ove, there was not a sound pane of glass in any of the windows.

No arests were made, but the officers took the names of 100 or more of those they knew amongst the crowd, and will to-day summons them to appear in court.

Besides the birds battling in the pit when they broke into the place, the officers found five dead birds and about forty live ones. They also found a roulette wheel, table of cards and ponies, that was in full operation, but left behind them a quantity of liquor.

When the battle in the pit was stopped one of the birds was ound to be so badly injured that Chief Inspector Walker cut its throat to end its misery. The steel spurs that were on the birds, about two and a half inches in length, and as sharp as needles, were confiscated by the officers and will be used as evidence against those who are to be brought before the courts.

The birds, dead and alive, the roulette wheel and table, were piled into the auto that had taken the raiders to the scene of battle ad brought back to the efthandh. There was so little room left in the car that the officers had to ride on the steps for 17 miles from Charlemague to Montreal.

The house in which the main was being held had been fitted up specially for the occasion, and, in adition to raised seats around three sides of the room, there was a temporary bar at one end, where all kinds of beer and liquors were for sale. The raiders would have taken the liquor, but they had no conveyance in which to carry it, as their automobile was overloaded with the birds they seized. The wheel they took along with them will be turned over this morning to the provincial police, as the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals has nothing to do with gambling. It is not likely a case of gambling could be made against anyone under the circumstaces as it is not known who was operating the wheel.

The raiders left their automobile a short distance from the house in which the main was being held and walked up to the place. When they ushed in, the man who was on the door said "Tickets please?" But he was brushed aside, and led by Chief Inspector Walker and Secretary Innes, Inspectors Sheehan, Phillips and Allmand dashed into the building. When Walker elbowed his way through the crowd around the pit, and jumping into it grabbed the fighting birds, it took but a moment for the sports to realize that the "place was pinched."

Then there was a hurried scramble for the exits, in which doors and windows were smashed and clothes torn, and in the rush one of the cock fighters had his face badly cut by a piece of broken glass.

The live birds seized were found on the floor above the pit, awaiting their turn to be brought down to battle. The birds were from Montreal, Three Rivers, Sorel and Quebec. They will be sold at auction for the benefit of the municipality in which the main was held, and, as is usual in such cases, probably bought back by their former owners.

Chief Inspector Walker got a tip early yesterday morning that a main was going to be held at Charlemague. He knew scouts would be on the lookout for the approach of the society's men in sleighs or by electric street cars, so it was decided to make the run down in an automobile. It worked well, and so little did some of the cock fighters suspect the five men in the automobile of being officers that, when the stopped at a hotel in Charlemague on pretence of getting drinks, some villagers offered to direct them to the cock fight, thinking the were lovers of the sport.

The City Hotel has changed hands, the new proprietors being Messrs. A. P. Carroll and W. J. Erskine.

A Gain to Canada.

London, Jan. 31.—The Lord Mayor at the Guildhall banquet, referring to the Duke of Connaught's appointment, said they had all read the announcement with the keenest interest. Whilst their first feelings were one of regret, their loss, great though it was, would be a corresponding gain to Canada, and they congratulated the Dominion their good fortune.

Among the guests were Lord Strathcona and the agent-general from Canada.

The duke in the course of his speech at the Guildhall said it would shortly be his pride to be closely, he hoped affectionately, associated with the Dominion of Canada.

Ottawa, Jan. 31.—The announcement was made yesterday that Earl Grey will take his official departure from Canada about the latter end of August, crossing the incoming Governor-General, H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, as is customary, in mid-ocean.

Mrs. Crippen's Estate.

London, Jan. 31.—A contest for the property of Belle Elmore Crippen, the murdered wife of Dr. H. H. Crippen, was begun yesterday by Theresa Hunn, a half sister, who asked the probate court for possession of the property, worth $1,000. Dr. Crippen, who was hanged for murder, willed all his property to Miss Ethel Claire Leneve, the girl for love of whom he killed his wife.

Attorney Grazebrooke, representing Miss Leneve, fought yesterday's action on the grounds that Mrs. Crippen's property passed to Dr. Crippen at her death, and is included in Dr. Crippen's will.

G. T. R.'s Ottawa Plans.

Ottawa, Jan. 31.—It was announced here that the Grand Trunk has plans in contemplation for extensive improvements, and probable rebuilding altogether of the local shops and roundhouse next summer. The large accommodation is made necessary owing to Ottawa being the terminal point of the company's new short line to Toronto, and also the fact that the city is to have connection with the G.T.P. The staff of workmen will be largely augmented here.

Child Badly Burned.

Toronto, Jan. 31.—Three-year-old Dorothy Coulter was severely burned about the body when she tipped a dish of boiling water from the stove in the kitchen of her home at 370 Howland avenue yesterday afternoon. She was removed to the Hospital for Sick Children in the police ambulance, where her condition is not considered critical.

Smallpox In Ottawa.

Ottawa, Jan. 31.—Dr. T. B. Flint, clerk of the House of Commons, is under quarantine at his home owing to the fact that a maid in his household has developed smallpox.

WONDER-SHINE

Cleans more silver in half-an-hour than pastes or powders in half-a-day—and cleans it better.

Madam! That's the reason why you should use WONDER-SHINE—it saves time and toil. Just figure out what this means—how WONDER-SHINE reduces that old, dusty, tiresome job of cleaning silver to a few minutes' pleasant work.

Your silver and gold may be costly heirlooms and gifts money could not replace. The rubbing and scouring of pastes and powders is pretty harsh treatment—eventually wears through the plating and spoils its brilliant lustre.

WONDER-SHINE is easy to use—no rubbing—no scrubbing—no scouring. Just dip your silver, gold or plated-ware, several articles at a time, in WONDER-SHINE, then rinse and dry with a soft cloth or chamois. That's all.

The beautiful lustre of your favorites will surprise you. If used occasionally, WONDER-SHINE will keep them as bright as new coinage from the mint.

Try it—one package will convince you.

WONDER-SHINE is guaranteed non-injurious to gold and silver, hands and clothing.

At all dealers, 25c, in yellow packages.

PROBER IS PILLORIED

Man Who Started Oxford Inquiry on the Grill.

Reeve Fleet of Ingersoll Is Charged With Having Handled Nearly $10,000 Without Proper Accounting—E. F. B. Johnston Scores Him For Spreading Rumors—Judge Finkle to Testify.

Woodstock, Jan. 31.—The Oxford County graft enquiry has given human interest a feast.

Sam M. Fleet, reeve of Ingersoll, who was one of the foremost in the agitation for a Government inspection into graft rumors that have been rife in the county, was himself dragged into the mire on a charge of having handled nearly $10,000 of the county's money for which, it is declared, he gave no detailed accounting.

Judge Finkle will be put on the witness stand in the morning to clear his skirts of allegations of irregularities while an arbitrator on the sale of a toll road to the county. He was not well enough to go on the stand yesterday.

E. F. B. Johnston, K.C., chief crown investigator, was also called upon to vindicate himself and the crown concerning rumors around here that he had entered into a secret agreement to call his dogs off of M. T. Buchanan, "county boss" and ex-warden, who was accredited with several charges of taking graft.

Mr. Johnston was white with rage when the court opened yesterday afternoon.

"It is said in Woodstock, my lord," he announced, "that some agreement has been entered into between Mr. Buchanan and me. That is absolutely false, and I wish it understood that we are ready to investigate all matters that should be investigated, and if they are not investigated it will be the fault of the people of this county who brought us here, in not coming forward with their information. Anything they think should be looked into will be investigated, as I have announced several times.

Later on in the proceedings, Mr. Johnston startled the crowded court room by calling upon Sam. M. Fleet, reeve of Ingersoll, who was chairman of the committee which petitioned the Government for an investigation and hired detectives to trace up cases and seek out facts for probing.

Judge Snider announced that it was charged that Fleet had in the past three years spent upwards of $10,000 on good roads in Ingersoll, for which no accounting was given.

Mr. Johnston wanted witness to explain how much of the county's money was entrusted to him during the years of 1908, 1909 and 1910.

Fleet fumbled amongst some slips of paper, but could not make his estimates tally with the county check books, which accredited him with $3,022 in 1908, $3,255.18 in 1909, and $3,100 in 1910, a total of $9,377.18. Impatiently crown counsel broke in on his fumblings:

"You have talked a good deal about this investigation? You have taken the liberty of saying that Mr. Buchanan and myself had came to an agreement."

"Er—well—"

"Have you any evidence to bear it out?"

"No."

"Be a little more careful how you couple my name and Mr. Buchanan's after this."

"Now, sir, have you any evidence concerning any of these alleged graft cases that the crown hasn't gone into?"

"No."

Recurring to the $10,000 expenditure for which no accounting was given, witness told Mr. Johnston that he had no statement to show when or how the money was received, but counsel could learn that by scanning the county checks.

"You had only to pay $126 in June; why did you draw out $350?"

"We paid other bills."

"Got the receipts?"

"No."

"And you carried that money in your pocket?"

"Yes."

"With no bank account, no checkbook."

"No."

"Didn't Mr. Buchanan ask you for an accounting, which you refused to give?"

"I wouldn't account to anyone but the county council."

"Is your account audited by the county?"

"No, because it cost the county $60 to audit the six or seven towns, and they decided not to do it."

Judge Snider: "Well, well, no wonder they have rumors here."

At this point the crown called all the other members of the committee that demanded the investigation and asked them if they were satisfied, or if they could suggest anything further that required looking into. D. R. Stauffer, William Thompson, William Appell and John Kneal successively said the enquiry had worked out beneficially and satisfactorily to the county.

Sidney C. Bartlo of Ingersoll swore that he got $65 from Fleet for letting the later out of his pond so that a bridge could be built. The feat was performed in July, and he did not get the money until late in November, and the check was dated ahead. He had asked for the money several times.

What gave rise to the continuance of the investigation was an allegation that a cheque for $600 was handed them while the board of arbitrators were sitting on the Ingersoll-Port Burwell road deal. It was learned that a check for $600 had been issued by W. A. Dowler and V. A. Sinclair, lawyers of Tillsonburg, who were acting for the road company. The check was payable in cash. Neither Dowler nor Sinclair could recall who got that money. George M. Neilly, one of the arbitrators, swore that he had got nothing but his bona-fide fee.

Buchanan knew nothing of the check.

Dr. Canfield, one of the directors of the road company, said he remembered something being said at a meeting about a $600 check, and he thought it was Dowler who had said nothing should be said of it, as it might upset the deal.

McCurdy Breaks Record.

Havana, June 31.—J. A. D. McCurdy, the Canadian aviator, set a new record yesterday in over-the-water flights, covering a distance of close to a hundred miles, from Key West to within ten miles of Havana, when, from a slight accident he was compelled to drop into the sea. There he remained, his bi-plane floating by pontoons, until the lifeboat of the torpedo boat destroyer Terry picked him up.

With Morro Castle scarcely a dozen miles away, his aeroplane rushing at the rate of fifty miles an hour at an altitude of 1,000 feet, a break in a small part of the engine, a ruptured crank case, permitting the escape of all the lubricating oil, necessitated McCurdy's immediate descent.

The intrepid aviator, when the sound of the engine told him something was wrong, instantly shut off the power. He descended rapidly, swinging steadily to the water and alighting as gracefully as a gull with outspread wings. The pontoons proved abundantly buoyant, McCurdy not even wetting his feet.

McCurdy was exactly two hours in the air, covering an estimated distance of about 96 miles. Besides breaking the over-sea record, this is the first instance of an aeroplane entirely out of sight of land.

Cremated In Caboose.

Thamesford, Jan. 31.—Robert Lane, a Canadian Pacific brakeman, was burned to death in his caboose which took fire yesterday afternoon after being wrecked. The train on which Lane was running west, stopped at the station here for orders, and while the conductor was inside, another train, also bound west, crashed into the rear end of Lane's train. The brakeman was caught in the debris and burned to death before the fire brigade of the village could rescue him. The car in front of the caboose was also burned. The station took fire twice and the brigade, which had only buckets to work with, had a hard time saving it. Lane leaves a widow in Stratford.

FOR SENATE REFORM

Commons Agrees That System Needs Changing.

Sir Wilfrid Says He Is Ready to Enter Into a Good Scheme to Improve the Second Chamber—Lancaster's Resolution to Abolish It Is Voted Down—Six-Year Term Is Recommended.

Ottawa, Jan. 31.—For the third successive time during the present Parliament the resolution of A. E. Lancaster (Lincoln), for the abolition of the Senate, was defeated in the House of Commons. The debate lasted for nearly five hours, with the result that every speaker, including Sir Wilfrid Laurier, admitted that there was need for reform in the Upper Chamber.

Mr. Lancaster alone seemed resolved on total abolition, contending that the Imperial Parliament would serve the purpose of a second chamber for the Dominion. Sir Wilfrid did not agree with this, as it would impose the will of Imperial Parliament on that of Canadian people, as expressed through their representative. W. F. Maclean (South York) said the life term should cease, that the Senatorial term should be, says, six years; that some Senators should be appointed by the Provincial Legislature and other by the Government.

A. E. Lancaster, in moving the resolution, said that had the fathers of Confederation realized the progress Canada was destined to make in the next four decades, they would not have decided on a second chamber. They thought it would be a safeguard against the passage of ill-advised legislation, and provided it as a "cooling" place for dangerous enactments.

The Senate was supposed to exist to correct bad laws passed by the Commons and to protect minorities. As all Canadian legislation has to be passed upon by the home Government, the necessary protection could be given by that body. Beside the member of the Commons, being member of an elective chamber, are more directly responsible, and are more likely to protect their interests than the appointed members of the Senate.

Mr. Lancaster then proceeded to argue that the Senate fails in its duty to protect minorities. He instanced his bill to protect level crossings.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in taking up the defence of the Second Chamber, pointed out that this was the third session in which the member for Lincoln had introduced the resolution, and he hoped that next year he would present some tangible plan.

The remedy of disallowance by the Imperial Government, which Mr. Lancaster proposed, would be far worse than no check at all on legislation. Certainly it would not improve the relations between Canada and the Mother Country.

"Would my hon. friend take the stand as a check upon the Province of Ontario that we ought to disallow the legislation of that province?"

He was in favor of bicameral system of legislation, and thought a reformed Senate, partly nominative and partly appointive, would suit the purpose.

Dr. Sproule was of very much the same opinion as the Premier in regard to the Upper House.

Hon. George E. Foster quoted from Liberal newspapers to show that a demand for the reform of the Senate was general. He pointed out that there were only 20 Conservatives in the Upper House, out of a membership of 87, which was absurd. Soon there would be none. The whole difficulty, he said, was in two questions—mode of appointment and tenure of office. A strong committee of both Houses should be appointed, make a thorough examination and report to the Government their plan of reform.

Three Hundred Killed.

Manila, Jan. 31—Latest Government reports confirm the previous report that 300 persons have been killed by the earthquakes and eruption of Mt. Taal.

Five villages were obliterated and three partially destroyed by a 12-foot wave, which came soon after the four-foot wave that followed the earth shocks. Coincident with this a superheated blast from the volcano practically cremated those who escaped drowning.

Lemery and Taal are believed to have been totally destroyed.

Hydro Power Fails London.

London, Ont., Jan. 31.—London yesterday was without electric power so far as the hydro-electric is concerned, and two of the biggest plants, McClary's and White's, have been obliged to partially close down. The street lighting system was out of commission most of Sunday night. Engineers say the trouble was caused by breaks in the insulators, one at St. Mary's and one at Stratford.

TAFT ON KINSHIP.

He Talks of "Commercial Union" With the Dominion.

Washington, Jan. 31.—The last public utterances of President McKinley in favor of reciprocity, made the day before he was assassinated at Buffalo, were recalled last night by President Taft in an address at the Ohio Society's anniversary banquet in commemoration of the McKinley birthday.

President Taft eulogized the character of the martyred President and paid a high tribute to his attitude on the commercial expansion of the country, with particular references to the declarations in favor of reciprocity made by President McKinley at the Pan-American Exhibition at Buffalo.

"The broadening effect of the national responsibility McKinley had had to carry," said President Taft, "shows itself in no respect more conspicuously than in this change of view on his part in respect of a policy of which he had always been the chief exponent. May we not hope that the change that he advocated may soon find expression in our national policy towards our good neighbor of the north, who has come half way to meet us?

"The Canadian agreement, if confirmed by legislative action, will be a fitting close to a century's controversies, and permanently establish good feeling and commercial union between kindred peoples. We shall find a rapidly increasing market for our numerous products among the people of our neighbor. We shall deepen and widen the sources of our food supply in territory close at hand.

"Our kinship, our common sympathies, our similar moral and social ideas, furnish the strongest argument for supporting this agreement."

Fishing Interests Protest.

Gloucester, Mass., Jan. 31.—A committee representing the fisheries industry of this city left for Washington late yesterday to appear as protesting at a hearing on the fresh fish clause of the proposed reciprocity agreement between Canada and the United States.

Quick With His Gun.

Fort William, Jan. 31.—On Sunday night two Italians, giving the names of Alexander Amadi and Guinello Donacanora, entered the home of Mrs. Lilly Ross, Northern avenue, and at the point of a revolver demanded her money. She gave them $17. Just at that minute, a boarder, John Rowe, entered, he, too, looking into the muzzle of the 38-calibre weapon, and was forced to disgorge $14. While Donacanora kept the two covered, Amadi left with the money, remaining outside until his pal joined him.

Mrs. Ross telephoned police headquarters two blocks away. Getting a description, Donacanora was seen by the chief sergeant and one of the constables, who were driving. Sergt. Watkins, jumping from the rig, declared him arrested. The Italian apparently acquiesced, but suddenly drew his revolver. Watkins jumped for him and pinioned his arms, but the Italian fired, the powder burning the officer's fingers and the bullet passing between the chief and the constable, so close that the powder from the discharge scorched their eyes. Amadi was captured yesterday morning by Port Arthur Police Chief McLellan at his boarding-house in Water street. Amadi made a grab for his weapon on the dresser, but the chief was too quick, but had a desperate struggle with him.

Travers Still a Director.

Toronto, Jan. 31.—W. R. Travers is still a director of the Keeley Mines, Ltd., and has repeatedly refused to resign from the directorate. At the meeting of the directors, held in the City Hall yesterday afternoon, he persisted in his refusal and despite the statement of those connected with the mine, who declare that he has turned over a written resignation, it has not yet been dealt with, and the reason of his refusal is that he wants to have it agreed that no move will be made to sell the mine, which he believes will retrieve his losses if worked without first consulting either himself or his counsel, H. H. Dewart, K.C.

Wellesley Inquest.

Berlin, Ont., Jan. 31.—The inquest into the murder of Franz Lobinski at his lonely shack near Wellesley Village, a couple of weeks ago, was resumed at Wellesley yesterday afternoon. THANKS FOR VOLUMES

British Government Helps Replace Ontario's Library.

Premier Whitney Moves a Vote of Thanks to the Imperial Authorities For Their Contributions — Sir James Wants More Industry In Transaction of Business — Bill to Help Deserted and Abused Wives.

Toronto, Jan. 31.—Sir James Whitney moved in the Legislature yesterday afternoon a resolution of thanks to the Imperial Government for copies of the records of the House of Lords, House of Commons, and other historical volumes. The resolution will be forwarded to the Imperial Government through the Lieutenant-Governor and the Governor-General.

Sir James also moved a resolution of thanks to the persons named in the librarian's report who had contributed books to the library of the House. Both motions were seconded by Hon. J. J. Foy, and passed.

Sir James indicated his desire for the prompt transaction of business. The Prime Minister said he did not know that there would be any reason to rush or hurry business, but it would be too bad to have nothing done on Mondays. There was no Government business on the order paper for yesterday, but on some Monday the Government might possibly wish to take up some Government business. He would, therefore, give notice of motion, seconded by Hon. Mr. Foy, that Government orders be placed on the order paper for next Monday and each succeeding Monday of the session.

Hon. Mr. Cochrane introduced a consolidation bill respecting the cutting of saw logs on Government lands.

Hon. Col. Matheson, Provincial Treasurer, gave notice that he would to-day move the House into committee of supply and ways and means. It is understood that the estimates will be presented to the House this afternoon, and the budget speech be made on Thursday.

As a result of a number of deputations which have called upon the Attorney-General on behalf of the "deserted wife," Hon. J. J. Foy is bringing in a bill, the objects of which are to secure a modification of the difficulties in the way of securing maintenance. The measure removes the necessity of proving repeated cruelties and assaults which often has stood in the way of a summons, and now permits the crown to act on her behalf by a simple proof of the husband's cruelty, and his denial of a comfortable home.

It will also change a troublesome clause in the old bill, which read to the effect that a deserted wife could summon the delinquent husband by proving him capable of maintaining "his wife and her family," which was sometimes interpreted as meaning her mother or father. The new bill reads "his wife or wife and family."

It will provide that orders for payment of money into court for purpose of maintenance are made enforcible by summons.

WEATHER FOR FEBRUARY AS HICKS PREDICTS IT

Storm Periods in Early Part of Month—Reactionary Storm Period to Follow Closely—A Regular Storm Period Soon After—Still Another Storm Period in Closing Days

A reactionary storm period is central on the 2nd and 3rd, blending with the Mercury period which is central on Jan. 31st and extending up to February 10th. Falling barometer, rising temperature and return of rain, sleet and snow may be expected on and touching the 2nd and 3rd. The moon being on the celestial equator on the 3rd, suggests electrical storms, especially southward, on and about that date, to be quickly followed by sleet, freeze and blizzard. The seismic period, central on January 30th, extends at least three days into February. The quadrature of Jupiter with Earth and Sun or the 3rd will intensify this seismic period. Note current reports of earthquakes from about January 28th to February 3rd. A cold wave will dominate most parts of the country from the 4th to the 7th.

A regular storm period, blending with the mercury disturbance, and the beginning of the Mars period, covers the 6th to the 10th. Western sections will show rising tempature, falling barometer and threatening storms, on or before the 7th, and during the 8th, 9th and 10th, these conditions will grow into active storms o frain, turning to sleet and snow, as they pass progressively from west to east. Change to fair and very cold weather will follow promptly in the rear of these storms, being pushed eastward and south by an energetic, high barometer.

A reactionary storm period recurs from the 13th to 16th, beginning with full moon on the 13th, and ending with moon's passage of the celestial equator on the 16th, bringing storms of tropical nature, after several days of threatening weather, all ending in violent change to colder weather.

A regular storm period is indicated from the 17th to the 21st. The reactionary period just preceding this regular period will leave little or no time between the two for fair, open weather, so that by the 18th falling barometer and the oncoming of rain and snow storms in the west will be in progress. This period will be well into the Mars period, blending also with the Venus equinox, and the vernal equinox of Earth. The Mars influence will be dominant at this time, and the character of storms an dweather prevailing at this period may be regarded as indicating the kind of storms and weather to be expected, generally, through the month of March. We figure that the weather will be rough and wintery, continuing after that manner well through the month of March. If, on the other hand, the general weather and storm conditions should prove to be decidedly mild and moderate at this time, look for much the same conditions until the end of the Mars influence, late in March. From the 11th to the 16th, we should have stated, is another marked seismic period. Behind general rain and snow storms, which will probably pass eastwardly over the country about 19th, 20th and 21st, look for rapid rise of the barometer, cloudiness, rain and snow. The Moon is at greatest declination south at this period, calling for northerly winds and bleak, winter weather. Any storm period in the last half of February may bring dangerous tropical storms in the south, in which event counter boreal storms from the northwest will prevail over interior parts of the country. A seismic period, central on the 28th, covers the 26th to March the 5th.

Newbro's Herpicide

Saves Money, Saves Worry, Saves The Hair.

If you want to free your head from dandruff and stop falling hair, you must sooner or later resort to Newbro's Herpicide.

By using Herpicide first you save yourself worry, which is desirable you save money, which is a consideration, and you save your hair, which is the most important of all.

Why not profit by the experience of Mrs. S. A. Lee, of 110 South 4th St., Richmond, Va., who writes:

"Four years' residence in India ruined my hair until it was but two inches long and very thin. I tried everything in Europe and America without benefit until I was induced to use Herpicide. My hair is now long, soft and silky and natural color while before it was quite gray. My friends never tire of admiring my hair."

Mrs. Lee's story is a typical history of hair troubles. After everything else fails Newbro's Herpicide brings relief. It would be just as effective if used first.

Newbro's Herpicide kills the dandruff germ and prevents falling hair It stops itching of the scalp almost instantly. No matter what the claims of others, Herpicide is the only genuine original dandruff germ destroyer.

IN MEMORIAM.

In memory of James Roy, Ivanhoe, who died on Jan. 11th, 1911.

Dearest Father Thou hast left us,
And our grief no tongue can tell;
But it was God that took you from us—
And He doeth all things well.

Oh! It is so lonesome Father,
For we miss you everywhere;
But we know you've gone forever,
Still there is your vacant chair.

Though we are cast down with sorrow
God has taken but His own;
It was God that gave and He has taken—
And we say Thy will be done.

For we know you're now with Jesus
Free from sorrow, grief and pain
And if we are good, and faithful,
We with you will meet again.

ENERGY—THE HUMAN POWER-HOUSE.

most capable of demanding and getting an excessive share of the general fund of nerve-energy from the human power-house, for the following reasons:

1. The feeling of vision is the most acute of all the senses, because it is actively aroused by one of the most imponderable elements known to science—light. By the impact of its delicate waves our consciousness is made to feel shape, motion and color. Its rays, reflected from various objects, pass through the cornea, the aqueous humor, the crystalline lens, the vitreous body, and there reach the retinal nerves. The delicacy of this touch, or impact, on the retinal nerves is beyond the conception of the human mind; yet it establishes from this point an impulse which is conveyed to the sight centers at the base of the brain, which with no uncertainty determine form, color, motion, quantity,

What Has Dandruff Got To Do With Baldness?

You see the statement every day that the one cause of baldness is dandruff. But is it?

True, dandruff often precedes the departure of the hair.

It is equally true that you know men with a shock of hair you can hardly pull a comb through, who have carried around a dandruff laden collar as long as you have known them.

You have also seen men whose scalp was kept as clean as a baby's whose hair was surely departing.

That dandruff talk sounds well and convinces a good many of us, but let us not fool ourselves.

Of course dandruff isn't a good thing to carry around, but it is only an indication.

The same trouble that causes the hair to fall out usually causes dandruff, so if you get at the cause and arrest the loss of hair, you will stop dandruff too.

Those who use Nyal's Hirsutone find it the most satisfactory hair healer and hair dressing they have ever used.

It does stop the hair from falling out.

It will also stop dandruff.

Your Nyal Druggist cheerfully recommends it—$1.00 and 50c in sprinkler bottles.

Sold and guaranteed by J. S. McKeown, J. V. Doyle, Albert L. Geen, The Belleville Pharmacy Ltd., Belleville.

The Pillar Of Light

(BY LOUIS TRACY)

At last he spoke:

"When I entered this room," he said, "I meant to avoid a scene which must have been as exhausting to you as it is painful to me. Yet as it happens, it is well for both of us that you have lifted the veil from what has gone before. Now it should be dropped—forever."

"Tell me what you wish me to do. I will obey."

"Don't you think it will be better if we defer a final settlement? You have already taxed your frail powers beyond their limit."

"No Stephen. Speak now. I will not faint nor yield to weakness. I will live. Have no fear. Death does not come as a skilful healer of the wounded conscience. It may be sought, and I have thought of that. But Constance would suffer, and, if it will spare her pain, I will endure to the end. Surely I owe her that reparation. I committed moral suicide once in my life. Let it suffice!"

The fixed plan of the study, with its carefully arranged phrases, was not so readily acceptable to the man now. What would become of his wife if he drove her forth, this time of his own accord, to live in mournful solitude, brooding over a wasted life and looking forward only to an occasional visit from her daughter?

A host of impossible ideas jostled in his brain. He strove desperately to find some easy way of suggesting the settlement which appealed to him as the fitting one, but his soul revolted from the notion of formulating a decree of banishment against this ethereal, ghost-like creature who had been thrust back into his very keeping from out of the heart of the storm.

He stood up and faced her, careless whether or not the stress of inward conflict in his eyes belied the calm gravity of his words.

"Perhaps you are stronger than I," he said. "We must meet again, tomorrow or next day. Some of the young people will be returning soon. If you wish it, I will tell them I have seen you."

"It is for you to decide, Stephen."

She seemed to be quite hopeless, resigned to any twist or turn of fate. Here was a broken woman, indeed, and the spectacle was torturing. He had never understood her as a bright young girl and a bride of nineteen. He did not understand her now. A man of his oak-like qualities could not grasp the nature of a woman who bent as a reed before each puff of wind.

It was hard to utter even a commonplace farewell. She held him by her very helplessness. But the rapid trot of a horse caught his ears, and, whilst he stood irresolute, he saw Constance alighting from the dog-cart. His wife looked out, too. They heard their daughter laughingly regret that she could not ask Mr. Pyne to luncheon—meals were irregular events just then.

Brand felt a timid hand grasping his, and a choking sob proclaimed that Constance's mother was crying.

He stopped with a motion that was almost a caress.

"Don't cry," he said. "I cannot bear it."

"I can bear anything, Stephen," she sobbed, "if only you will let me stay with you forever."

"Do you mean that, Nanette?" he gasped, incredulously.

"I have prayed, yes, dared to pray, that it might be so ever since I saw my child. She has brought us together again. Let us not part, for her sake, and for mine, Stephen, if it is not too late."

So Constance, hastening up the garden path, could not believe her eyes when she saw her father lift her mother into his arms and kiss her.

Mary, the maid, never ceased wondering why every other member of her sex in Laburnum Cottage should be tearful yet ridiculously happy that afternoon. Mrs. Vansittart wept, and Miss Constance wept, and Miss Enid wept when she came in, whilst Mrs. Sheppard was weeping at intervals all day.

Nevertheless they were all delighted in their woe, and Mrs. Sheppard, although she cooked a tremendous dinner, never scolded her once.

It was also a remarkable thing that the invalid lady should insist that she was strong enough to come downstairs that evening. She did not eat a great deal, poor thing, but she looked ever so much better, and seemed to find all her pleasure in gazing alternately at the master and Miss Constance, and in listening to every word they said.

In the garden, next night, the moon being now very brilliant indeed, Pyne said to Constance that the step-aunt idea having fizzled out he guessed that the lady who figured in that unclassified degree of relationship would pose more satisfactorily as a mother-in-law.

He said other things that have been said in many languages since men began to woo women, but the phrases are hackneyed save to those who listen, and need not be repeated here.

But why two marriages should take place after extraordinarily short engagements, no one in all Penzance knew save Lady Margaret Stanhope, and she, mirabile dictu (being a woman), kept her counsel. It created no end of a sensation when Constance was described in the London newspapers as "only daughter of Sir Stephen Brand, Bart., of Lesser Hambledon, Northumberland." Local gossip quickly exhausted itself, as both weddings took place in London, the only available items being the magnificence of the diamonds given to Enid and Constance by Mr. Traill, and the fact that, in Constance's case, "the bride's mother" was described as "looking charming in a silver-grey costume trimmed with point d'Alencon lace."

Even when confronted with this momentous statement by Mrs. Taylor-Smith, Lady Margaret only shrugged her shoulders and purred:

"A romance, my dear, a romance of real life."

On the day following the departure of two happy couples for the Continent—Mr. and Mrs. Pyne to Italy, Lieut. and Mrs. Stanhope to the Riviera, with intent to meet in Rome at Easter—a quieter and more sedate couple took train at Waterloo for Southampton, bound for the Far West.

Although a Nebraska decree of divorce does not hold good in English law, Lady Brand wished to be married again in the State which sanctioned her earlier folly. Her husband agreed readily. Everybody, including Mr. Traill and Lady Margaret, had arranged to turn up at the north-country mansion in May. Provided there were no hurricanes, Sir Stephen thought his wife's health would benefit by the double sea voyage and he was personally delighted to see the New World for the first time in her company.

Their steamer sailed from Southampton at 11 a.m. After dinner that night they were abreast of the Gulf Rock, and Brand pointed out to his wife its occulting gleam from afar.

"It makes me feel very humble," she said, after they had watched its radiance darting out over the tumbling seas for a long time in silence.

"Why, sweetheart?" he asked.

"It is so solemn, so intense in its energy, so splendidly devoted to its single purpose."

"Now, it is an odd thing," he replied, as watchful to check her occasional qualms of retrospect as he had been during many a long night to keep that same light at its normal state of clear-eyed brilliance, "but it does not appeal to me in that way. It is winking portentously, as much as to say, 'You old humbug, there you are, leaving me after all these years, and running away with your own wife.'"

TWO FUNERALS HELD YESTERDAY

Miss Moore and Mrs D. E. Minns Were Borne to Their Last Resting Place

The remains of the late Miss Elsie Moore, a maiden lady, who died in the House of Refuge here, were to-day taken by friends to her late home in Madoc Township, where interment took place.

Yesterday afternoon the funeral of the late Mrs. D. E. Minns took place from the family residence, Evedett St. At the house a brief service was held by the Rev. B. Greatris after which the remains were conveyed to the Albury Methodist Church, where a funeral service was held by the Rev. B. Greatris. Interment took place at Albury Cemetery.

FRAUD CHARGE IS STILL GOING ON

The case of the four Hebrews, Abe, Robert and Harry Solomon and Chas. Sloma, who are accused of conspiring to defraud creditors, was continued before Magistrate Masson to-day. The case is one that is rather complicated and many creditors, we are informed, are eagerly watching the outcome. Mr. McMasters, K.C., of Toronto, with the Crown Attorney, is conducting the prosecution, and Mr. Carnew is looking after the interests of the accused.

GRIFFIN'S OPERA HOUSE.

Something unusual in the vaudeville line is offered the patrons of Griffin's for the first three days of this week. Lowe and Lowe, in a typical cowboy act, present an offering different from anything seen so far in Belleville. They display marvellous skill with the lariat and, coupled with numerous other stunts familiar to life on the plains, their act is one that will appeal to all. The Temple Trio have pleasing voices and inject enough comedy into their act to make it thoroughly enjoyable. As usual, five reels of the best motion pictures do much towards making a visit to Griffin's worth while.

THE INTRUDER WAS FINED $25

A week ago last night a man named W. E. Herrington was arrested on a charge of housebreaking. The man was found in Mrs. Westlake's bedroom when that lady went to retire for the night. The lady in question keeps a restaurant on Front St., and Herrington, while under the influence of liquor, went into the place and unnoticed, went upstairs. The charge of housebreaking was not pressed, but for his action Herrington was taxed $25 to pay a fine, and costs, and was given a few days to pay the same. Mr. Anderson for the Crown and Mr. Carnew for the accused.

CURLING.

At the curling rink last night a club match took place between rinks skipped by Messrs. C. J. Symons and W. M. Watson, the former winning by 1 shot. The composition of the rinks and the score were as follows:
